OBEDIENCE TO GOD.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

"If it be so, our God, whom we serve, is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he shall deliver us out of thine hand, O king. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up."—Dan. iii., 17, 18.

All are acquainted with the circumstances recorded in the chapter from which the text is selected. Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, had caused an immense image of gold to be erected in the plain of Dura. To the dedication of this image he called together the princes, governors, captains, judges, treasurers, counsellors, sheriffs, and all the rulers of the vast province of Babylon. When assembled he caused a herald to cry aloud to all the people, that at what time they should hear all kinds of music they should fall down and worship the golden image, and informed them that any one who refused to comply should be cast into a burning fiery furnace. Shadrack, Meshack, and Abednego, who were Jews, refused to comply with the requirement, in consequence of which they were ordered before the king and interrogated concerning the matter. The king assured them there was no escape: they must fall down and worship or they should at once be cast into the fiery furnance, and intimated their folly in trusting that their God could deliver them. They replied—that they were not careful to answer him in the matter; and closed in the language of our text, which is expressive of strong confidence in God, and a fixed purpose not to dishonor him by paying homage to an image. The doctrine we wonld draw from this text, and which we shall attempt to illustrate and enforce, is contained in the following

That it is our duty, safety and happiness to obey God at all times, and under all circumstances.

We presume it will be readily admitted that if there ever was a time, and if there ever were circumstances in which men would have been justified in at all departing from strict obedience to God, that was the time, and those were the circumstances, in which these men were placed. If, then, it was their duty, safety, and happiness to obey God in such a case, we may safely infer that it is ours, and the duty of all men, at all times, and under all circumstances. We shall call your attention To the Circumstances of these men; the Grounds of their Confidence and trust in God; and the Consequences of their Firmness.

1. THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THESE MEN.

Their circumstances were such as to render their situation peculiarly trying and difficult.

1. They were filling high and important offices in the Province of Babylon.

It is true that this circumstance, in itself considered, is not of much importance; but when we take into the account that they were a part of a nation that were now in bondage in Babylon, and that their conduct must have an important bearing on their countrymen, the Jews, for good or evil, we see their situation becomes exceedingly trying. If they were only to act for themselves, the mere fact of their high station would be unworthy of notice.

Thus situated, what would be the natural language of a time-serving policy? It would have said—"You are not at liberty to set up your private views of duty and act upon them, for you are public servants; and, if you refuse to bow down before the image you will not only lose your own lives, and thereby deprive your countrymen of the benefit of your services in their bondage, but you will excite the government against the Jews by raising a suspicion of their want of fidelity, which will bring down an overwhelming torrent of persecution upon them. You certainly ought to take this into the account, and remember whatever you might do under other circumstances, you are now carefully to weigh the consequences: the consequences will be awful—indiscribably awful; and to talk about not regarding the consequences is the very height of fanaticism—none but enthusiasts and madmen would be guilty of such daring folly. By all means, therefore, you should this once fall down before the image. By doing so, the gain to yourselves and countrymen will be incalculably great."

Such would have been the language of the expediency age in which we live, when men think it is almost a crime to be in advance of public sentiment, and that the man who is so is a fanatic or an infidel. Shadrack, Meshack, and Abednego, it might have been urged, would be guilty of all, and might justly be reproached as the authors of all the calamities that might result to the Jews by refusing to fall down on this occasion; so entirely destitute are most men of the claims of right principles, which are but the voice of God, to a corresponding right action. Men seem to think that right principles are of no more binding force, under certain circumstances, than the principles, if we may give them that name, of aspiring politicians who seek their own agrandizement, and care not who suffers, who is in prison, or who are crushed by oppression, if they can only effect their own selfish purposes.

These three Hebrews had planted their feet upon the rock of right principles; but they, as wise and understanding men were not insensible to the probable consequences of their refusal to worship the image, when looked at only as men of this world. They could foresee, as clearly as their opposers, that if God did not appear in some way for the defence of the cause of truth, beyond what mere human wisdom could discover, the most disastrous results must follow: and we have no evidence that these men had any assurance, beyond what was contained in the written word, that there should be any interposition to prevent the natural result of their refusal to comply on that occasion. We ask, then, was this not a most trying circumstance? And had they been actuated by human policy, or a time-serving spirit, must they not have complied? How many, under the morality taught at the present day, would have stood erect? It is to be feared the number is few. The terror of losing some petty office, in church or state, is quite sufficient for multitudes of the present age, without any addition of other terrible consequences: they will bow and lick the dust to obtain or retain such office. Unhappy men! May the good Lord pity them, and teach them before it is too late, that "he that findeth his life," by the sacrifice of right principles, "shall lose it;" while "he that loseth his life," in defence of those principles, "shall find it."

2. The situation of these men was trying, from the consideration—

That a law or edict was promulgated requiring all to fall down and worship the image.

Nothing is more common than to hear it said that men cannot do a thing, because the law or church prohibits it; or, that we must do so, or so, because the law or creed requires it. Well, here is a case in point. A law requires these Hebrews, with others, to fall down and worship the image. Shall they presume to set themselves up in opposition to the law of the land? Might not their opposers ask th m—"Does not your religion teach you the duty of obeying magistrates? If you refuse to obey, on this occasion, will you not give the lie to the principles of your own religion, and thereby bring it into contempt?" And, adds the time-serving policy, "You will injure the cause you wish to advance." "It must be right," the same policy continues, "to obey the laws of the land. We are not responsible for the laws: our rulers must answer for them; and nothing can be more preposterous than for a few persons to think of going in the face of the law! It is the wildest fanaticism. So give up your folly and comply with the laws."

All this is plausible, and well calculated to mislead men who are governed by appearances rather than the truth or right principles. The men of whom we are discoursing, undoubtedly, felt that the fact that the law required them to fall down and worship the image, was a trying circumstance. Shall they not obey? To that inquiry we shall call your attention in another part of this discourse.

3. The circumstances of these men were peculiarly trying from the consideration—That all around them comply with the mandate of the king.

At the signal given, all the princes, governors, captains, judges, etc., fall down and worship the image: there was one united and universal prostration: it was a full and strong expression of "public sentiment." Three men only are seen standing. These men have the "presumption" to act in opposition to the many! Strange conduct this! At least, so would a time-serving spirit decide. It is not so easy a matter for men to be singular. There is a strong propensity to go with the multitude: and it requires more than an ordinary degree of firmness to withstand the example of the many.

All are prostrate on this occasion. There stand the three Hebrews alone. Imagine the ridicule that would be employed to shame them out of their "singularity." We fancy we hear a governor yonder saying to his comrades around him, "See those Hebrews standing up—I wonder if they are not ashamed to be so singular." "I wonder," says another, "if they think they know more than anybody else!" "Ay," exclaims a third, "they think they are wiser than our great men: they have set themselves above our statesmen; yea, above our doctors of divinity—those comparatively young men vainly think that they are going to set themselves up for reformers." "I suspect," cries a fourth, "they will learn a lesson by and by when they feel the fire of yonder furnace kindle on them. I guess they will find it not so desirable as they imagine to smell fire or be martyrs." "For my part," says a fifth, "I believe idolatry, in the abstract, is wrong; but under present circumstances it is right; at any rate, I have no notion of going in advance of public opinion, and I think a man is perfectly fanatical that does it." "I am not so clear," responds a sixth, "that falling down to an idol is wrong, for the Bible says, 'an idol is nothing in the world,' and surely there can be no great harm, for the sake of keeping peace, and to prevent disturbance by setting ourselves up against public sentiment, for us just to fall down now, 'this once,' to that which is, after all, nothing." "Those men are foreigners," cries a seventh, "and they have no business to meddle with our domestic institutions; we have worshipped images for hundreds of years: it is a long-established institution, and though it might have been wrong when first introduced, yet it is entailed upon us, and it would bring confusion, disorder and ruin to attempt to abolish it now."

Such we may suppose would be some of the language employed by those whose interest it was to sustain idolatry, or who had not moral courage enough to oppose public sentiment which was corrupt enough to sustain image worship, or creed worship.

Men naturally feel much concern for their reputation, especially if they are now in possession of a respectable character. They seem to dread nothing more than the loss of that honor they now enjoy. Hence, opposition to the most important reforms usually originates with men who love popular favor; nor will they move in any reform until it first becomes popular; and then, not so much for any right principles or love to truth they possess as from a desire to retain that public favor which they now see must be lost if they longer stand aloof. To see men espouse a cause when the public sentiment of church or state is against it, and that from a conviction that the cause is a righteous one, and truth demands their support, shows great moral courage; but it subjects its advocates to great reproach, and to be denounced as fanatics, fools, mad men, or infidels. Such reproach is trying to human nature, and it is not to be supposed that any sensible man would subject himself to it unless upon conviction that truth and faithfulness to God required it of him.

The reproach, then, these three Hebrews must endure for their extreme singularity cannot so easily be conceived of; to have a tolerable idea of it, a man must be placed in a somewhat similar situation, and that is not likely to take place with most of us, till the standard of morality and love for truth is raised much higher than what most teachers of religion, in the present age, have placed it.

From the consideration of the reproach these men must endure by their refusal to fall down before the image, and their extreme singularity, must not their circumstances have been extremely trying?

Not only were they subjected to scorn and ridicule for their want of conformity to the general sentiments of those around them, but—

4. They were terribly threatened with a most horrible infliction of public vengeance if they dared to dissent from the practice of the mighty men assembled on the occasion.

"Whoso falleth not down and worshippeth shall the same hour be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace." To be at once cast down from honorable stations, and put to a most disgraceful, painful, and public death, was a trial of integrity, and honest adherence to truth and right principles, which few, perhaps, could have endured the thought of without having been overcome. Under the time-serving policy of our age, probably, most men would think, they had a sufficient excuse, in such circumstances, for seeming, at least, to fall down and worship the image. Human policy would have said, "It is your duty to yourself, to your family, to your country, and to the church, to save your life. True, it is wrong in the abstract to worship an image, but under present circumstances it is not only right, but 'Christianity enjoins' it; yea, the 'golden rule' requires it."

Such is the language of the expediency that has taken the place of the Bible in these last times.

5. Another circumstance that served to make their situation peculiarly trying was the fact that flattery was resorted to, to induce them to comply.

Many persons who have successfully resisted all other attempts to draw them aside from the path of duty and firm adherence to right principles, have fallen before flattery. In fact, it requires much more moral courage and firmness to resist flattery than any other, or all other, agencies, because flattery comes in the garment of a friend concerned for our reputation and welfare, and it seems ungrateful in us not to regard the kind feelings and tender concern of those who take pains to let us know how much they esteem us. Hence, it is much more difficult to resist the persuasions of apparent friends than the assaults of open enemies.

Now look at the case before us. The king proposed that all the music should be repeated to accommodate these three men. As much as to say, "You are men of standing and worth: if you were mean men you should have no such favor granted you; but men of your respectability and importance in community I am exceedingly desirous should maintain the high standing to which your merits entitle you; now, therefore, I will give command and the music shall be repeated for you three; and certainly you cannot have so little regard for your reputation as to refuse to comply with the desire of your sovereign, who has always shown you the greatest respect, and advanced you to the important offices in the empire that you now fill."

Who would not have given way under such circumstances, and found some excuse for at least "this once," in doing homage to the image? "The very peculiar state of the case," most would have concluded, "justifies us now in doing that which, under other circumstances, would certainly be wrong: and then we mean by it no respect for the image at all, but design to secure a greater amount of good than we think can be secured in any other way, as matters now stand. And, besides, we certainly are under great obligations to the king, for he has done us much important service, and we should show ourselves exceedingly wanting in gratitude not to do as he desires us now, especially as he has shown so much respect for us, and so much desire for our welfare."

Thus would the time-serving spirit of the present age have reasoned, and come to the conclusion that to persist in the refusal to pay, at least, an external homage to the golden image, situated as they were, would be folly and madness; nay, fanaticism of the worst character. But thus did not the Hebrews reason. No, trying as their circumstances were, they remain firm and unmoved.

"WHY WILL YOU DIE?"

"SAY unto them, as I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"—Ezk. xxxiii., 11.

In the chapter from which the text is taken, we find the duties of a watchman very definitely stated: and in verse 7 we read that God had set the prophet a watchman unto the house of Israel; and as such, it was his duty, first, to hear the word from the mouth of God, and then faithfully to warn the people of approaching danger. He was not to gather his message from philosophy, nor from traditionary teachers, but receive it direct from the mouth of God; and then whatever may have been its nature, or character, whether it be a message of love or of terrible judgment, he must faithfully declare it; for upon his fidelity depends the deliverance of his own soul.

In the verse preceeding the text, God addresses the prophet in these words, "Therefore, O thou son of man, speak unto the house of Israel; thus ye speak, saying, If our transgressions and our sins be upon us, and we pine away in them, how should we then live?" A very important question to men thus pining away and going down to death; and it was in answer to this solemn question that God authorized the prophet to announce in their hearing the message of life contained in the text. And, as it was morally certain that death was to be their final end, if they continued in their evil ways, God instructs the prophet to tell them that he has "no pleasure in their death; but that they turn and live."

We propose now to consider the text before us in the light of Scripture alone; and leaving heathen philosophy and human tradition for those who must depend upon their teachings for the correct solution of the terms life and death, we shall examine, as far as we can, into the origin of life, the cause and nature of death: and may that Spirit which first inspired the word, guide us in our inquiry after truth; for that question once propounded by Pontius Pilate, still has its moral significance: "What is truth?" We read in Gen. ii., 7, "And the LORD God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Here is the origin of human life. Man was made of dust; and when breath was introduced into him, "Man became a living soul." There can be no impropriety, then, in calling man what he then was, now is, and will continue to be, so long as he breathes the breath of life, viz., "a living soul." We cannot find in the Scriptures where God made a man of the dust, and then gave him an immortal principle, called soul, or spirit, or anything but the breath of life, by which the "man became a living soul." The Scriptures, then, recognize man, while he breathes the breath of life, as a living soul, and not as possessing a soul as something that outlives the living soul itself. Now, this living soul was placed in a garden, where the LORD God had caused to grow every tree that was pleasant to the sight and good for food: the tree of Life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

And God said to this living soul that he had made of the dust, "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." (Mar.: "dying, thou shalt die.") Such is the language that God addressed to this living soul. Now that he has become a creature subject to law; the violation of which is death, let us follow up his history; for the destiny of the race is involved in his future conduct, and the character he may develop.

The law had been clearly stated, and the penalty well defined. That it was plainly understood, we may learn from the mother of all living, in her interview with the subtile serpent, Gen. iii., "Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" "And the woman said unto the serpent, we may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden: but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the of the garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat of it; neither shall ye touch it lest ye die." So then it was understood, distinctly, that death was to be the result of disobedience. Now mark what follows: "Ye shall not surely die, but shall be as Gods, knowing good and evil," interposed the tempter. What an important moment, both for herself and unborn millions! With what eager, and almost breathless, suspense we watch this living soul, as she stands in the presence of the charmer, charming never so sweetly. What strange infatuation has led her there, away from the tree of life, and all the delights of paradise? Why stands she there declaring death as the penalty of partaking of its fruit? Oh, horror of horrors! See, she puts forth her hand: she eats; she bears it to her husband, and he did eat. Then death's dark shadow, as a fearful pall, comes between these living souls and the way of life; no tree of life to which they can return and repair their loss. Eden with all its joys and delights has just been forfeited; and in this fearful condition, what is to be done? The law has been violated, and these living souls, and, in them, their posterity have fallen under its penalty. Disobedience, then, is the cause of death.

We shall next consider its nature. That it is a finality, so far as the man in himself and of himself is concerned, we think the following language clearly proves, as it was addressed to these living souls. Gen. iii., 10. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread: until thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Now it should be borne in mind that this language was addressed to living souls; and it teaches a very humiliating truth: viz., that living souls were made of dust; and since the introduction of sin, and death by sin, they, by the solemn edict of God himself, must return unto dust. There is no reservation of any supposed immortal principle, called soul; or anything of the kind even hinted at. The living soul must go back to dust, and forever remain there, too, unless there be some remedy by which they may be made alive again from the dead. But then we must follow this living soul a little further on, and see what became of him. Gen. v., 5. "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years; and he died." Did the serpent tell the truth? We think not: for this living soul had returned to dust; or, this living soul had ceased to be a living soul. This then we understand to be the nature of death: a deprivation of life, and a cessation of his being. How gloomy the thought! And must man forever remain under the power of death, without a ray of hope to cheer the impending gloom? Thank God the day-spring from on high hath visited us. Luke i., 7–8; and "life and immortality hath been brought to light, by the gospel." "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." We read 1 Cor. xv., 40, "The first man Adam was made a living soul: the last Adam was made a quickening spirit." The first by disobedience could rise no higher than the dust. The second, though he was "put to death in the flesh, was quickened by the Spirit," and raised above all principalities and power, and given a name that is above every name that is named, without seeing corruption. There was given this promise in Eden, "the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." This promise, under various forms, was given to the world, until the fulness of time had come when God sent his own Son into the world, that the world through him might live.

And now, in view of man's perishing condition, and what divine mercy has done, and still proposes to do for his restoration and redemption, is it at all strange that he should authorize the prophet to speak to men that were pining away in their sins, and going back to dust, and anxious to know how they should live; and to tell them, that he had no pleasure in their death; but that they turn from their evil way and live? Was it not the message of compassionate love; and strong desire for their future life? Did he not know by his solemn edict that they were going back to dust, and unless they turned from their evil ways they must forever remain in the dust without hope of any future life? He never said that human beings should be "eternally dying, without the privilege of dying:" nor, that they should "die the death that never, never dies;" for the penalty was death; and neither of the above quotations from tradition meets the full penalty. God understands the nature of man and the penalty of the law far better than heathen philosophers, or any traditionary teachers. That penalty, he says, is death; from which there is no hope of any future life unless men turn from their evil ways, that they might have hope.

If that penalty be not inflicted, and man again returned to dust, then the divine veracity might be impeached. Our first parents believed a lie, and death proved a verity to them. Their children, in numberless instances, seem to have inherited the parental weakness: and although they do not say that they believe that old original falsehood, still, they cannot believe that man, who was made a living soul, can possibly die. The soul, they say, cannot die; but the body, which was a "living soul" may die. They forget, it seems, that every living soul that sinneth it shall surely die. O how men must pervert reason, revelation, and common sense, in striving to explain death as "spiritual, temporal, and eternal;" and finally close up with no death at all, but an eternal life, of the most excruciating pain and agony in the torments of the lake of unquenchable fire! And all this, to sustain a theory borrowed from heathen philosophy, and the traditions of men never authorized to expound the revealed will of God.

We might fill many pages with proofs of the views here presented; for the word of God abounds with them. Sin is the cause of death. The nature of that death is the deprivation of life, or a cessation of conscious existence. A future life, then, must be sought for through some other being than the first Adam; for, as he had not in his possesion endless life, it was utterly impossible for him to transmit it to his posterity. That desirable boon must come to us from some other being: and that being is the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the sent of the Father, the Redeemer of men. Him, men must receive and obey, because the Father hath made him to inherit all things, including eternal life. Now suppose there had been no promise of a Saviour given; can any sane man suppose that the living soul called Adam, when he was remanded back to the dust, in consequence of his sin, could by any possibility have a future life? Is there anything in the language used by his Creator implying such an idea? If there is, we think it rather difficult to find.

We think, then, that the fact is clearly established that the living soul, called Adam, returned to dust again; and having involved our race in the penalty pronounced upon him, we leave him there, and turn our eyes toward the second Adam, who is our only hope of future life. Now this second Adam, was something more than a living soul, namely, a "quickening Spirit." And, in order to accomplish the work of our redemption, he assumed our nature, and, in that nature, kept the law, though in all points tempted like as we are. Yet he was without sin. Where the first Adam fell, he stood. Where the first yielded and brought the race under death, he triumphed, and "brought life and immortality to light," and "became the author of eternal life to all them that obey him."

Here, then, is the origin of a future, or eternal life, revealed, or, brought to light. It was by one that satisfied justice, in behalf of the guilty, by meeting in himself the claim of violated law, when he offered a spotless life, upon which the law had no claim, as a voluntary offering, that he might redeem them that were under the law, by raising them from the dead and giving them eternal life.

Now this is the only Scriptural way, which we are able to find, that men may live again from the dead. Not by virtue of their relation to the first Adam, who, being only a living soul, went back to dust, and left no trace of any living principle after he, the living soul, had died. And how could it be otherwise, when man had been debarred from the tree of life? Please read Gen. iii., 22–24. It would seem that man's living forever depended upon his eating of the tree of life; and to prevent him from thus eating and living forever, he was turned out to till the ground from whence he was taken; while "cherubim and a flaming sword turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." Would a living soul, that possessed inherent immortality, need to be deprived of fruit that would perpetuate its life? Were the properties that perpetuated life in the fruit of the tree? or, were they in the living soul, called Adam? "And now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever, therefore the LORD God drove (sent) him forth from the garden," to toil, and to sweat, and die; and it was to men in the same condition, and for the same reason (transgression and sin), that the prophet was sent with a message of life from God, to assure them he had no pleasure in their death, but that they turn from their evil way and live. How unlike the teaching of the prophet is the theory that the death referred to, in the text, means eternal life in indescribable agony and torment: eternal dying, without the privilege of dying: "the death that never, never dies," with a host of other human inventions, unwarranted by the word of God. How would it sound for these teachers when they wished to give additional force to the words "eternal life," they should say, with great gravity, is was a life that never, never lived? Is not the one just as good sense, and just as good grammar as the other? That which never dies, certainly does not reach so far as death. But living do die. For faithful watchmen, who are not afraid to call things by their proper names; and when they see their fellow-men madly rushing on to death, will cry aloud from their watch-tower, and warn them of their danger, and offer them eternal life through him who declares himself to be "the way, the truth, and the life."

And now poor fellow-sinner, why will you die? Why will you treat with indifference a subject of such vast importance? Do you value eternal life? Is it worth your seeking? Will you seek it? Will you seek it now? To-morrow may be too late; death may close your eyes ere to-morrow dawns, and then there is no eternal life for you; no hope for you; no Saviour to bid you welcome to the eternal glory; no robe, no palm, no crown, no home in the paradise of God for you; no place for you in the countless ranks of shining ones, as they are marshalled forth on the plains of restored Eden, on the great coronatien day, when the King of kings and Lord of lords, shall take his diadem and ascend the throne of universal dominion amid the joyful acclamations of the blood-washed throng. Yours will be the cheerless gloom of eternal death. Solemn thought. To-day you may secure an "inheritance among them that are sanctified;" to-day the recording angel rejoices over your repentance; to-day the recording angel may enter your name on the roll of the church of the first-born which are written in heaven; to-day you may be heir to a kingdom that cannot be moved; heir to all the untold bliss and unrevealed glories of a future life; such as eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entered the mind of man. In view of all this why will you die? STEWART CARLISLE.

"TURNED TO FABLES."

A FEW years ago a book, of some 300 pages, called, "The Moral Probe," was issued in Philadelphia, which set the "orthodox" ideas of death in a strong light. The following is an extract from it:

"DEATH."

"Death is the crown of life,
Death wounds to cure! we fall, we rise, we reign."
Young.

"The thought of meeting the king of terrors is made unwelcome by most of the human family. Even the Christian is prone to treat the subject unkindly, until he is compelled to approach this grim monster, and as the acquaintance increases, the insatiate devourer of the body loses his deformity, and in the end proves himself a real friend. We should all make the acquaintance of this, our final deliverer, voluntarily and at once. Treat death as our enemy, and unkindly leave him to force himself upon us at the last hour! How cruel. Treat death as an enemy! How ungrateful, unwise, and imprudent. Is he an enemy, who transfers us from delusive dreams, from the region of bubbles and corroding cares, to a region where all is pure, substantial, enduring joy and endless felicity? It is a libel on death to call him our foe, a king of terrors, an enemy. Frail man comes into the world crying, cries on through life, and is always seeking after some desired thing, which he imagines is labled Happiness; or is mourning over some loss which makes him miserable; a restless mortal, with an immortal soul which requires something more than earth can give to satisfy its lofty desires; the soul that hails death as the welcome messenger to deliver it from its ever-changing, ever-decaying prison-house of clay, called man; on which time wages a perpetual war; whitening locks, furrowing his cheeks, stealing his ivory, weakening his nerves, paralyzing his muscles; poisoning his blood, battering the whole citadel, deranging the whole machinery of life, and wasting the mental powers, until he becomes twice a child; and then delivers him over to his last, best friend, Death, who breaks the carnal bondage, sets the imprisoned spirit free, closing a toilsome career of infelicity; opening the door of immortal happiness, returning the soul to its own original and glorious home, to go no more out forever. Not to become familiar with death is to endure much unnecessary fear, and add to the myriads of other imaginary woes of human life. For the Christian, death has no real terrors—all who are wise are Christians."

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—If a man had of set purpose undertaken to ridicule the Bible, and turn the counsel of God into foolishness, we should expect he would indulge in such strains as the foregoing. Its blasphemy will be sufficiently apparent to all our readers. "The wages of sin is death." In speaking of the resurrection of those who sleep in Christ, Paul saith, that when Jesus comes from heaven, their "last enemy—death—shall be destroyed." See 1 Cor. 15. The foregoing fable says, expressly, man's "last best friend" is "DEATH!" Thus giving Paul and the Bible the lie! Behold where this fable of an immortal soul in man leads its defenders. The article needs no further comment; it shows its paternity on its face.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 1, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

HERALD OF LIFE.

OUR paper is expected to go to press early this week, after the interval of last week. Matter which did not reach us before Saturday last is unavoidably prevented from appearing this week.

We have received an article from "D.," in response to Judge HALSTED; but till the Judge is through with his reply to "D.'s" first article, we must defer his second. H. sent us a further reply to "D.'s" first article for this week's issue, but it came too late for insertion. We intend "D." shall be heard at the earliest date possible.

It may be thought that we have had rest by a week's interval in the issue of the HERALD. On the contrary, it has been a week of the most incessant labor of any week during this volume, and we have had no leisure to prepare editorial; not even a New Year's Salutation. Our readers, however, may be assured we wish them all a "Happy new Year," and a preparation for that day when Jesus shall give the crown of life to those who love him.

BOOKS AND TRACTS—We have been entirely out of "BIBLE VS. TRADITION" for some time past; and, also, of the tract, "MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY." We gave an order to have some of each printed, three weeks since, but have not been able to get them yet. We ask those who have sent to us for these works to wait patiently, as we are obliged to. We will send at the earliest possible date.

FROM WILLIAM N. GLENN.

STOCKTON, CAL., Nov. 22, 1867.

EDITOR HERALD OF LIFE—Dear Sir: For more than a year I have been thinking of your (to me) new doctrine. Until then I had never heard of anything in religion but the immortality of the soul, eternal hell, and such like phrases, except as the opposite theory had been promulgated by Universalists or infidels.

The idea of the "sleep of the dead" and the "destruction of the wicked" was thrown out to me by a minister of the gospel, whom I knew to be a very good, humble Christian; and after considering several passages of Scripture in a different light from what I had usually been accustomed to, and reading a small work on the subject, I was led to think there was considerable foundation for those doctrines. In fact, I was afraid to believe it, but at times I was almost constrained to. So I have been "halting between two opinions" ever since, but always staggered when I would hear the interpretations of educated ministers, who were supposed to understand the original languages, and of course capable of giving their correct meaning, upholding the "immortality" and "eternal punishment" side. Of course, I considered that they knew more than I did. But the longer I continued in this undecided state, the more mysterious the Scriptures became. I looked forward to the new translation by the "American Bible Union," expecting that all these things would be made clear. But on these points the same mystery clouds the revelation, and I find our Br. Buckbee, Br. Earle, and Br. Knapp, strenuous supporters of the "eternal punishment" doctrine.

But some three months ago the same minister to whom I referred in the fore part of my letter, sent me one of your books, "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST," and I found a new idea yet—that the wicked dead do not rise at all. I am well pleased with the book, and especially with the extensive Bible research contained in it. But there are two points that are not clear to me, and I would like to have some light upon them. I am not able to reconcile John v., 28, 29 with the idea of the dead not rising.

Again: your correspondent W. P. Gardner, in the HERALD OF LIFE of Oct. 9, 1867, intimates that the 1,000 years of Rev. xx. are not in the future. I do not propose to take issue, but I am seeking Bible information, and would like to know at what period of the world's existence that 1,000 years did expire or if they are now passing away.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.

In reference to John v., 28, 29, we have always admitted the difficulty of harmonizing that text with the idea of the non-living of the wicked dead, and therefore sympathize with all honest inquirers after truth who find a difficulty in it. The consideration, however, that no one isolated text is to rule in establishing a doctrine, but that the general tenor of the Scriptures and the known perfections of God must determine the true sense of any and every text, and rule us in their solution, satisfied us that whatever John v., 28, 29 may mean, it cannot mean that wicked dead men are to be made alive again, because nothing is clearer in the Book of God than that "death is the wages of sin;" and there is not a text in all the law or the prophets—to which Jesus and his apostles always appeal—that mentions, or gives any sanction to the idea of twice dying for sins. But, on the contrary, those Scriptures speak of the wicked dead as past recovery from death. Job saith, "Drought and heat consume the snow waters; so doth the grave [sheol] those who have sinned . . . . he shall be no more remembered." Job xxiv., 19, 20. When Job prayed to "live again," chap. xiv., 13, 14, he prayed "remember me." That is, give me a revival from the dead; clearly denoting that when he says of the wicked dead man, "he shall be no more remembered," he means, he shall not "live again."

David says of the wicked, "Like sheep they are laid in the grave: death shall feed on them," etc. "He shall go to the generation of his fathers: they shall never see light. Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish." Psa. xlix.

Solomon, the son of David, saith, "Destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity. The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain, [novakh "let alone; let rest] in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 15, 16. Here is a clear statement that the wicked dead will be "let alone," be left; or "let rest" in the state of death: they will not be disturbed at the resurrection, but "remain" under death's dominion forever.

Isaiah says of certain wicked characters, "They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise," etc. Isa. xxiv., 14. To show this is the true sense, the prolpet contrasts the case of the good with that of those wicked; verse 19, "Thy dead shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust," etc. None "awake" but those who "sing," or who awake to rejoice.

Jeremiah says of certain wicked ones, "They shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not awake, saith the King, whose name is the LORD of hosts." Jer. li., 39, 57.

The Saviour saith, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." John vi., 53. This is spoken clearly in reference to the resurrection life; because he adds, in the next verse, "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood . . . . I will raise him up at the last day;" showing that the resurrection is a peculiarity: that it belongs only to the believers; or, in other words, it is conditional, depending on compliance with the requirements of God in relation to his Son.

John the Baptist says, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; but he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." John iii., 36.

Paul tells us that he endured the loss of all things, and labored and suffered that he might know Christ, "and the power of his resurrection: if," saith he, "by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Phil. iii., 10, 11.

We might multiply texts and testimonies which go to show that the resurrection from the dead is a peculiarity, and therefore excludes all who do not belong to this peculiar class, and we might urge the fact that not one text in the Bible saith a wicked dead man shall ever be made alive from the dead; no, not one such text can be found; but we judge we have established the fact that the general tenor of the Bible is against any future life of wicked men. We might, also, urge the known perfections of God against the idea of any such life for the wicked, especially the declaration, "God is love." Love cannot inflict torture and misery upon any creature itself produced which outweighs all the good that has been bestowed, and with no design to benefit the sufferer; and such would be a revival into life of the wicked dead to torture and kill them again; and it would be no less an outrage on justice, because "death"—i. e., a state of death, not dying nor the pain of dying—is the penalty for sin. To exceed the proclaimed penalty is an act of injustice. In fact, every known perfection of God harmonizes with the general tenor of the Scriptures we have cited against the reliving of the wicked dead.

We are now prepared to look at John v., 28, 29. Here is a text which seems to oppose the general tenor of the Bible. It does not say, however, that those who have done evil shall be made alive from the dead, yet it might be construed in that way, and would be, if standing alone. We will suppose the text relates to the literal resurrection of dead men, and that it naturally indicates the living again of all the dead. As such construction is unharmonious with other Scriptures, and involves an apparent opposition to the known perfections of God, may we not safely inquire whether such a construction cannot be put on the words as shall harmonize the whole? If there can be, we certainly are bound to accept it, or put such other construction on the language as shall not leave it at war with the general tenor of the Bible.

Again we say, the text does not affirm the reliving of those who have done evil. It does say, those who have done good shall come forth "to the resurrection of life." If the term resurrection, of itself, necessarily implies life, why add "life" to it? Those who have done good come to the resurrection, but stop not there; they come into life. Those who have done evil come to the resurrection, but not into life; it is to damnation; literallly, to condemnation: they are condemned "not to see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." This construction of the text makes a harmony with the others we have cited and agrees with the known perfections of God, who is "love."

As to the 1,000 years of Rev. xx. we have very little to say. That these years are a symbol representing an undefined period, is most likely to be true. But where that period is located, whether in the past or future, is not yet manifest; and all controversy on that question we regard as labor lost. Time may, and probably will, fully reveal its location. Till then we may safely watch and pray, and keep ourselves unspotted from the world, that we partake not of the plagues coming on the earth.

PERILOUS TIMES.

THE N. Y. Tribune, speaking of the killing of Mr. Hamilton, of Ohio, by a lunatic son, says:

The sad death of Mr. Hamilton, Member of Congress from Ohio, adds another item to the flood—we may say the deluge—of crime and accident with which our columns have for days past been overburdened. The telegraph wires bend under their weight of woe; the old earth quivers with throbs of agony from the centre to the pole; cities are shaken down, countries are engulfed, fair domains are overflowed with red hot lava; wife is arrayed against husband, mother against child, son against father; a hecatomb is sacrificed on one railway, half as many on another, and on still another the width of a hair stands between a thousand and sudden death. In social life our newspapers are smutched all over with reports of divorce and separation trials, of infidelity and disgrace of gigantic crimes undertaken; half accomplished or completed. Where shall be the end of these things?

The glorious appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ has revealed to us that immediately preceding his return, not only society but the earth itself, and the heavens, shall experience violent commotions; and his specially instructed apostle writes that,

In the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof. . . . Of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts. . . . Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.

While the fact that "the old earth quivers with throbs of agony from the centre to the pole," "reeling to and fro like a drunkard," reminds us of the warning words of our Saviour, how completely Paul's prophecy of the multiform existence and vile manifestations of sin in the last days, finds its accomplishment in this part of the nineteenth century, we need only hastily to consider the present condition of society to determine. True, all the appalling accidents almost daily occurring, are not recognized as so many crimes, but the gross carelessness, and almost total disregard of the sacrifice of human life, that results in the yearly sending of thousands upon thousands to untimely graves, place on many of them the seal of criminality, while most have their origin in the almost universal recklessness consequent upon the unrestrained indulgence of unholy ambition, or other, and, perhaps, viler lusts. But these things must needs be, because of the enormous growth of iniquity; and sorrowful indeed would be a contemplation of their existence, had we not learned to look through and beyond them, and rest the eye of faith upon the speedy consummation of God's eternal purpose to set up an everlasting kingdom, wherein dwelleth righteousness. "The wicked shall do wickedly, and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." D. C. T.

THE INFLUENCE.

A FRIEND in a "private" letter says: I wish to let you know the influence produced by reading the little work "LIFE FROM THE DEAD: or, the righteous only will live again." I have lent it to five different persons, all of whom have fully embraced the truth from reading it. I lent it to a lady and some time afterward, I asked if she had read it? Her reply was, "O yes, I have read it through nine times and half through again, and I must have one of my own." So you see the truth is mighty. When I came to this place four years ago, they were all bitter opposers; but now there are nine firm believers of us all.

AN EXPLANATION WANTED.

DOES Math. xxiv., 3 teach the second coming of Christ? If so, how do you harmonize it with the 34th verse? Yours, for the truth in Christ. S. S. CALL.

Newport Centre, Vt., Dec. 9, 1867.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—"The 34th verse" of that chapter is the conclusion, after having given the signs immediately to precede his coming, and Jesus tells them "this generation," which shall witness the commencement of those signs, "shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled:" and he adds, "But of that day and hour" (of "the coming of the Son of man," v. 37) "knoweth no man," etc. Such is our view of verse 34, taken in its connection.

WESTERN CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER FROM CINCINNATI.

DEAR HERALD: My "Wisconsin jottings" account for my movements up to the 20th ult., the day of my reaching Chicago. In that city I remained until the following Saturday morning, November 23d, when I started for New Rutland, Illinois; which destination I reached at two o'clock, A. M. Here I remained four days. November 27th, I took the train in the afternoon for Sandoval, Illinois, where I passed the night at a hotel. On Thanksgiving Day, I took the cars at 10 o'clock, A. M., for New Albany, Indiana, going by way of Mitchell and Jeffersonville. I arrived in New Albany late in the evening, and, as previously directed by Br. Lyndall, put up for the night at the Depaw House. New Albany and Jeffersonville—the former city having from 25,000 to 30,000 inhabitants, the latter, some 10,000—are four miles apart: both are on the Ohio River, and they are connected by a railroad. In these two cities I remained (preaching only in Jeffersonville) until Monday evening, December 9th, when I crossed over to Louisville, Kentucky, and took the night steamer for Cincinnati: at which last-named city—reached on the morning of the 10th inst.—I have been ever since.

My present programme is, to remain here till the latter part of next week; spend the 29th inst., in Richmond, Indiana; January 5th in Detroit; 12th in Fort Plain, N. Y.; 19th (probably) in Springfield, Mass. Then, on Tuesday, January 21st, I hope to reach home. All this, "if the Lord will."

CHICAGO.

Two of my three nights in this vicinity were spent, as was also a whole forenoon devoted to scribbling for the paper, at the beautiful home of Br. A. B. Van Doren, in Hyde Park; the last night, Br. George McElwain kindly provided me quarters near the railroad station which I was to start from the next morning. Had his family been at home, I should have spent the night at his house. My visits at Br. Van Doren's I enjoyed very much. He is a firm believer of life only through Christ, and, on account of the view, was forced to take a letter of dismission from an orthodox church. He was a patron of the Examiner, and prizes the weekly visits of the HERALD very highly. He has long had a great desire to see Br. STORRS, and means to do so during the present Winter. Whenever the time comes to strike an effective blow for the promotion of the Life-views in "the Garden city," Br. Van Doren's co-operation will be heartily rendered. And this, I doubt not, is equally true of Br. McElwain, who subscribed anew for our paper while I was with him. Other patrons of the HERALD OF LIFE I had no opportunity to see, though I desired to do so. They will take, this time, "the will for the deed." Sister Van Doren, though actively connected with one of the Hyde Park churches, is in sympathy with her husband's immortality views.

The kindness of the two brethen I have named, in showing me objects of interest in their city of so marvellously rapid growth, is gratefully remembered. I was much interested, on various accounts, in Chicago; its progress is wonderful. The ideas that were interchanged with brethren, regarding efforts in the future to plant the Life doctrine here, I will not take time to mention.

I called twice on Professor Samuel C. Bartlett, D. D., at his room in the Chicago Theological Seminary. He received me on both occasions with great kindness. His work against our views ("Life and Death Eternal") was the topic of a portion of our conversation, and I regretted much that we had not more time to follow up the matter.

I made two calls at the office of the new Congregational paper, The Advance; the first time, I saw the business agent, and had him enter the HERALD OF LIFE on his exchange list (of which I ought before now to have informed our Editor); the second time, I had a brief interview with Rev. Dr. Patton, the genial Editor of the paper. He told me that new subscribers were coming in at the rate of about five hundred a week.

Br. Sereno Fisk, of Kenosha Wis., whom I have known for years, came to Chicago the day before I came away, and sought me out, in the afternoon. Br. Fisk spent the night with me at the hotel, and we parted the next morning at the railroad station. I was much gratified with having met him in so unexpected a manner.

NEW RUTLAND.

My invitation to visit this prairie village was from my beloved Christian brother George H. Fisher (son-in-law of Dr. John Billings), whose acquaintance I made in connection with my second visit to the Exeter camp meeting in Maine. Brother and Sister Fisher are firm and intelligent believers of life only in Christ, and they ardently desire to see the precious doctrine run and be glorified. I preached four times on the subject in the Advent chapel in New Rutland, and had reason while I was there to believe that good was done: since I have come away, Br. Fisher writes me that one wanderer from the Lord was reclaimed through the instrumentality of the meetings held while I was among them. Elder Frank Burr, whom, with his wife, I have known nearly eight years, is pastor of the church, and was present to hear my last discourse. He has not yet adopted the non-living of the wicked dead, but our intercourse was of the most fraternal character. Sister Burr, I was happy to find, has a strong leaning toward the Life-view as held by us. A considerable number in the New Rutland church have embraced it, mainly, I believe, under the labors of Br. Billings while he lived among them.

My home, while at New Rutland, was with Br. Fisher, but I visited and called at various places. Br. Edgerly, also a son-in-law of Dr. Billings, I had known in Maine. Br. Cudworth, formerly of Massachusetts, I was glad to meet; also his daughter and her companion. I believe there are about ten copies of our paper taken in New Rutland. While in Illinois, I formed my opinion of prairie life; but a man isn't under obligation to tell all he thinks! So I pass it.

NEW ALBANY.

This place was visited upon an invitation from Br. Charles W. Lyndall, but business took that dear brother from home during the whole of my visit, and so I did not see him at all. We muturally regretted this turn of affairs, but it could not be helped. My visits with the family of Br. Lyndall (who, by the way, is a go-ahead business man of thirty-one years of age) were very pleasant, and I am not without the hope of seeing him at our next annual meeting, if not before.

Br. A. W. Munroe, a few years the senior of Br. Lyndall, lives in New Albany, and is a thorough believer in the Life view. He was formerly a Methodist exhorter, and, since his withdrawal from that body, has used his gifts more or less in proclaiming what he believes to be the truth. I had delightful visits with him and his family.

My home in New Albany was at Br. Thomas T. Halstead's; their kind hospitalities will not be forgotten. Br. and Sister T. have both come fully into the Life views, and as I was leaving, they subscribed for our paper. May its weekly visits comfort them in their pilgrimage. The day before I came away, I made the acquaintance of Br. W. J. Newkirk, who attended two of our preaching services. He is strong in the Life view.

Our brethren have no place to hold meetings in New Albany, and could not assume the burden of hiring public halls (for which the charges are high) for that purpose. So it was arranged by Br. Lyndall, before he left home, that my public labors should be in the Christian Tabernacle, belonging to the church of which Dr. Nathaniel Field is the pastor, in

JEFFERSONVILLE,

This being the programme, Br. Munroe had it announced in the New Albany daily, and in 200 handbills. On Sunday morning, December 1st, I called, before service hour, on Dr. Field, at his house. A warm greeting of welcome awaited me, and both the warmth and the welcome were kept up by the Dr. and Sister Field, until the moment of our final good-by. Dr. Field has preached the gospel in this place for forty years, and is one of the noblest men that I have ever met. I shall claim the privilege of being henceforth a full sharer in the love that is borne toward him by the flock which he has so long and so unselfishly served. His nature is so genial that I should almost want him for my family physician even if he never administered a particle of medicine! This geniality surely is an excellence which I don't want to forget; but it isn't all. Dr. Field has broadened and deepened my ideas of true Christian toleration. If on this subject, he is not sound to the core, then I shall hardly look for a man of that stamp this side of the immortal state. (And in that state I suppose there won't be anything that will need tolerating!) When the Dr. talks about allowing others to think for themselves, and to speak their thoughts, he means it; and you'll not find him backing down from his avowed principles the moment you advance an opinion that doesn't square with his own. His whole life, as a public teacher, is a strong rebuke to every species of sectarian narrowness. He steadfastly maintains that Christian fellowship shall know no other basis than the broad platform of Christian character. The spirit of "Thomasism" is his special abhorrence.

Of course, says one, the Dr. is with you on the Life question, or you would'nt say such things of him. No, he isn't; but his example would be worth studying and imitating by some who are! I must, however, dwell no longer on this matter. My public labors in Jeffersonville began December 1st. I preached that morning and evening, and the five evenings following; and on December 8th, I preached three times. (Ten discourses in all.) Life only in Christ was a prominent theme, and Dr. Field heard all the discourses, doing all in his power to secure me an unprejudiced and profitable hearing. All his utterances in connection with the preaching were of the most conciliatory and fraternal character, and a similar spirit pervaded the congregations. Not a discordant word was spoken by any one from first to last. Undoubtedly, a deep impression favorable to the Life view was made; and I am not without a strong hope that my good brother the Dr. (who already rejects the resurrection of such as the antediluvians) will yet see his way clear to embrace fully the doctrine that life from the dead is secured solely by eating the bread of life. It is probable that

Br. Field will attend the Springfield camp meeting next year; I urged him to do so.

While I was in Jeffersonville, I was welcomed at the home of Dr. Morrow, and spent my time there when not at Dr. Field's. I also made several visits at Br. Anderson's. I obtained a number of subscribers for our paper.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1867. R. W.

THE LOGIC OF IMMORTAL SOULISM.

THE following was sent to us by Elder J. Parry, of Davenport, Iowa, and is taken from the Cairo Democrat of December 8th. Br. Parry has followed it with some remarks, which is all that need be said. Truly "the plea" is consistent with the doctrine of inherent immortality.

A SUICIDE'S PLEA FOR THE SUICIDE.

The recent death in our city of Col. R. B. J. Twyman, by his own hand, will insure for the following "Plea for the Suicide," written by him on the 22d ult., a general persual. The manuscript, in the Colonel's own hand-writing, was enclosed in an envelop, directed in pencil to "John H. Oberly, Esq.," and was deposited with a leading druggist of our city, with instructions for its publicity after his death. The manuscript, if desired by his family, can be had on application to this office.

THE PLEA FOR THE SUICIDE.

How common it is for the loving world to declare that the "suicide was crazy," that he or she, who has voluntarily freed their suffering, wearied, immortal spirits from this world of misery and woe, were laboring under a "mental aberration!" The idea, therefore, of a sane person committing suicide is not to be tolerated.

I think differently. I believe that a person can, if of sound mind, and earnestly desiring to go to God, sincerely pray to be transferred from this world of suffering and sorrow to the blissful "spirit land" of endless eternity.

The truly good have no fears of death or of the judgment. God gave us life, and implanted in us an immortal spirit, and when that spirit is pure, it has a constant desire to return to that God of purity and love from whence it came. The selfishness, the deceit, the hypocrisy, the malignity, the hatred, the envies, and the corruptions by which we are surrounded in this world so afflict the spirits of the pure in heart, that they long to be freed from the curse of mortality, that they may enjoy the presence and glory of God forever.

But according to the doctrines of the so-called orthodox Christians, "he who destroys his own life loses his own soul." I do not believe it. We were taught by God himself, through the person of his Son, Jesus Christ, to pray for the coming of the kingdom. What is the kingdom referred to? Where is that kingdom? Christ said it is not of this world It is the kingdom of heaven—of eternity—for which we are taught to pray. Is it a crime, then, for us to go to that kingdom? There is but one way for us to reach it, and that is through the gates of death—the cold grave—where we lay down mortality and take up immortality.

Who are they that cling to life so tenaciously? Are they those who love God and desire to go to the spirit land, that they may see and enjoy his glory? No. They cling to life because they are afraid the devil will get them when they die. They who love God truly and sincerely are not afraid of the devil, and hence are not afraid to die, but welcome death as the real messenger of eternal freedom and peace. To the good, death is the king, not of terrors, but of peace and joy everlasting.

Who, then, will dare to say that the soul is lost who voluntarily seeks the bliss of eternity. When the prison house of clay, in which the immortal spirit is confined, knows nothing but pain and suffering—when friends desert and scorn you—when you are surrounded on all sides by swindlers, knaves and scoundrels—when your future is all gloom and darkness, the very blackness of despair, with no ray of hope to illuminate your soul—you voluntarily give back your immortal spirit to the God who gave it, and your body to the dust from whence it came, and then men say you were crazy, that you are eternally lost—they are hypocrites or knaves, and know not of what they speak. "Judge not," etc. So ends my "plea."

R. B. J. TWYMAN.

DAVENPORT, IOWA, Dec. 15, 1867.

BR. STORRS: The foregoing is a fair specimen of the ripe fruit, the natural production of the tree of life men have planted in opposition to that ordained of God as the only true LIFE-GIVER, Jesus the Christ.

The reasoning in the "Plea" is a legitimate conclusion from the premises; and the only reason why it is not carried out in practice is, because nature is stronger than creeds—and men do not, and cannot always believe their own theories. It is well for people to see what sort of fruit their pet tree would produce in a genial soil; and here we have it in perfection.

Spiritualism is just the soil to nourish this noxious plant; and all the sects and isms in the land are busy cultivating and watering this "upas tree," till it has well nigh covered the earth and choked the good seed of the kingdom.

We charge that the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, is to be held to account for this and many other pernicious errors that are leading thousands far astray from the truth, to believe this first lie of the serpent, to their own condemnation—"Ye shall not surely die." J. PARRY.

A GENEROUS OFFER.

I AM desirous that subscribers to the HERALD OF LIFE, of all others, should have such aid as the book entitled "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE" affords in support of the system of truth so ably maintained in that invaluable weekly paper. I will therefore mail a copy of the second issue of the said book (containing the full index, appendix, and notices of the book), and will pay the postage, on receipt of a letter from any such subscriber enclosing $2, directed to me, 417 Broad street, Newark, New Jersey. O. S. HALSTED.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—In addition to the foregoing we have made arrangements with Judge HALSTED to furnish the work as follows: Any person who will send us $3 shall have the remaining numbers of this volume of the HERALD OF LIFE, and we will send them "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE" free of postage. Thus they will get at least 36 numbers of the HERALD and the book for the retail price of that work, viz., $3. Will not every one avail themselves of this chance to get one of the most useful works ever published? To those who are now subscribers for the HERALD, Judge Halsted's offer is very generous, and we hope none will fail to embrace it, and write to him immediately for it; yet they can save fifty cents by sending a new subscriber to this office, as above directed. The book is one to study; and with its aid your Bible will be more perfectly understood and valued.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM CLAMOR FRANKE.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 18, 1867.

BR. STORRS: Thanks be to our God, Br. Wendell has been permitted to hold forth, on last Sunday, to a goodly number of our people, the precious Life doctrine. He preached in the morning to between 300 and 400 people in Grace (M. E.) church, in Newport, Kentucky (opposite this city), from the text, "In Christ shall all be made alive:" and in the evening, in Asbury (M. E.) chapel, in Cincinnati, to nearly the same number of people, from 1 Thess. iv., 13–18, inclusive.

Our dear brother felt both times great liberty in speaking, and preached the truth in such a manner as I had never heard it preached from any pulpit before. My heart leaped for joy as I listened to the precious words, "In Christ shall all be made alive;" and I greatly enjoyed the privilege of hearing them proclaimed to a people, who, while I believe they are Christians, have no well-defined, intelligent, Bible hope. Their heaven-at-death and immortal-soul theory, has supplanted the glorious resurrection doctrine of the Bible. Our dear brother Wendell has, I trust, opened the way for examination; and we fondly hope and pray, that, like the Bereans of old, they may look for themselves, and see whether these things are so. One elderly Methodist brother said to me, after the morning service, "That is just what I wanted to hear. He has explained to me fully that which before I did not understand." And all to whom I have spoken, have declared themselves much pleased with what they heard, and begged the privilege to hear Br. Wendell again. The pastor, Br. Spruell, whether he was conscious of it or not, endorsed in his closing prayer all that Br. Wendell had said: and afterward most cordially invited him to preach for him again on next Sunday, both morning and evening. We have consented to have him give a second installment of our Life views to this anxious people on next Sunday evening. In the morning of that day we hope to get him a hearing in some other church. Our object is to awaken attention on this subject among as many people as we can, and we know of no better and more effectual way, at present, to reach them, than by this method of preaching in the churches. Those who heard Br. Wendell preach in Asbury chapel were also greatly interested, and Br. Royce and family, who are members there, say that our Life-views are favorably entertained by other members of that church. Let us hope and pray, that the little leaven which is working among us here may ere long leaven the lump of that God-dishonoring system of natural immortality, and every phase of infidelity under whatever name or form.

Remember us in your prayers, that God may bless our feeble efforts to promote his glory.

Yours truly, in hope of eternal life.

FROM ELD. JOHN CRAIG.

WESTFORD, MASS., Dec. 15, 1867.

BR. STORRS: The last issue of the HERALD came to hand last night and found me prostrate on a sick bed, I fear with a slow fever. For several days past I have been failing, but was suddenly taken ill last Friday night, and since then I have suffered much from pains all through my system. My poor suffering wife in one room, writhing in pain, and myself in another room unable to help her in the least; and none but my little girl (aged fourteen years) to do the work and attend the sick.

I had to get Br. Nutting to-day to preach for me at No. 8 school-house. I hear there is a good work going on, thank the Lord.

I wish my brethren and sisters all to know that I still am strong in the Lord, and trusting in the power of his might; and although I can truly say with good Jeremiah, Lam. iii., 1, "I am the man that hath seen affliction," yet I had rather be in the furnace than unite with the worshippers in the plains of Dura: Dan. iii., 1. "Is any among you afflicted, let him pray." Yes, Br. James, thank the Lord, prayer is the great lever that moves the obstacles out of the way: that reaches God's throne. I think, sometimes lately, I have free access to my Father more than formerly, because I feel perfectly at ease in the soft hands of so kind a parent. O, beloved brethren and sisters, you who have my the blessing of health, see that you improve it to God's glory, for in time of ill health and pain our services will be poor enough. I dearly love to read those sermons of the Editor, which come every week in the HERALD OF LIFE. Your brother, with his anchor cast firm within the veil.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We hope our friends will remember Br. CRAIG in his sore and long continued afflictions. We regret that his letter came too late for our last issue. May the hearts of many be opened to give him immediate relief.

FROM JOSEPH LACIAR.

MAUCH CHUNK, PA.,
Christmas Morning, 1867.

BR. STORRS: Much I desire to give you a happy greeting on this glorious morning, which brought the glad tidings of salvation to us and all mankind. As it is impossible for me to give you a personal call, I will write a few lines, to show that I have made you one in mind and spirit. This is indeed a glorious day to all Christians; and one for which we cannot be thankful enough unto the Lord for the great goodness which he manifested toward our fallen race on this occasion. Yet great as it is, my mind nevertheless looks forward with the greatest admiration, to that day wherein God's promise will be finished up, in that he will gather us into the eternal inheritance. Glorious morning! May it soon arrive. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen. As this is the day on which the Lord received gifts at the hands of those who came to worship him, so will I this morning present my presents unto the Saviour by adding two more subscribers to the HERALD OF LIFE—the Lord's instrument by which he works in his mysterious ways to make men wise unto salvation. Hoping that many more of the brethren will remember the Lord in such a way as they may see needful, be it in a pecuniary way, by boldly causing the truth to shine through their preaching, by cheering up some of the household of faith, or in whatsoever way the Lord has given them light and wisdom and circumstances wherewith they can fulfil his will.

The truth is beginning to loom up a little in this town. Surrounded on all sides by mountains of wonderful and precipitous heights—from the summit of one of which, one pleasant Sunday afternoon, during the past Summer, was read the wonderful sermon, "Earth not Heaven," etc., to a lonely companion, while crossing over what is called the "Dunkey Pass." Indeed, as I now look back on that same occasion, it seems to my mind as though it was but a continuation, and partly reiteration of that same sermon as it was proclaimed to the world from the mountain by him who spake as man never did speak, and who bade his hearers to give ear while he brought forth the words of consolation, "The meek shall inherit the earth." These are, indeed, words of cheer and consolation to us who humbly and patiently wait the destruction of the Lord's foes, and the immediate manifestations of the kingdom, by the coming of the great Ruler who is "King of kings, and Lord of lords." My great desire and prayer for some time has been, that God might cause some one of the brethren to come this way to preach the word of truth, with all its force. If I would know a week beforehand, I would have notices printed and posted around town, and also have it inserted prominently in the weekly Gazette. We have a town hall which will accommodate, I presume, six hundred or more hearers. This hall is rented out for public uses at the moderate sum of $5 a night. Besides we have the court house, which is opened free of charge for all good purposes. And as to hearers, I think the attendance would be unusually large. We have some half dozen churches, and one (Episcopal) in process of building, which is to cost the enormous sum of over $70,000. Some weeks ago the M. E. Church took up a missionary collection, which amounted to something like $250. So you see we have indeed liberal-minded Christians here; and I feel assured that most encouraging results would be reaped for the cause of truth in this place if it was put forth with more strength. I have entertained a strong intention lately, to write to my esteemed friend and brother, Grim, to make a visit in this direction. I long to see Br. Grim, as I am what I am through his instrumentality, he being gifted by the Lord with mighty words of wisdom and truth, which shook my former doctrine to its centre, and buried it in oblivion among the popish "dunghill decretals" of Rome. Glory to the Lord, in whom dwelleth all the fulness of wisdom, I am now firmly established on that solid foundation where neither storms, hurricanes nor the fear of violence can move me: that foundation on which we have all joinedly builded until we have now finished the structure, even to the pinnacle, whereon the trumpet is now sounded; and on which the bell is ringing the death knell of a world's decease, together with all in it, except the few who have put their trust in him who is the author of the new creation, and who indeed is long suffering, willing that all should come unto him and become co-heirs of the new possessions. O Lord Jesus hasten the day, for thy waiting ones are longing to be with thee. Amen; come quickly.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, Dec. 16, 1867.

BR. STORRS: I am now at my home in Iowa, having returned from my long visit in Wisconsin, and my HERALD OF LIFE comes regular, and O what a blessing it has been to me. I shall never know here its full value. The glory of the HERALD is, that it stands so stiffly for the word of God; the great foundation on which our feet are set by sovereign grace. O glorious word, how much is contained in that portion of the prophet Hosea, "After two days will he revive us: in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight. Blessed truth; the prophet is speaking of the resurrection of Jesus, and Paul says, Christ was raised the third day, according to the Scriptures. This must be the Scripture, for it is only portion that I have found in the Old Testament. O what a comforting thought that every child of God arose with their divine Head, and dwell in God's sight, "For all live unto him." And again Paul says, "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Then after the resurrection of Christ, the first fruits—"Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord (know what?) that his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he will come unto us, as the former and the latter rain in its season." O, bless the Lord, ye that have followed on to know him him that his coming unto us is as sure as the morning; and we know that the morning will come, for God's word declares that, "While the earth remaineth, day and night shall not cease." Now just as sure as there was a former and a latter rain in its season, so sure will Christ come unto us in his own season; yea, the season that God has put in his own power. O the love of Christ in giving his people the signs of his near approach, that they might lift up their heads, knowing that their redemption draws nigh. On such a glorious subject it is difficult to stop one's pen, when so many glorious truths on this subject press into the mind. But I will say, "Go on, Br. Storrs, in the strength of Israel's God. Go on, Br. Wendell, give the trumpet the certain sound. O, that I could have seen you on your Western tour, and heard the life-giving words dispensed. But you, dear brother, and all of God's faithful preachers shall have my prayers that you may be like a locomotive on God's everlasting railway, laid in infinite wisdom, carrying the glorious gospel of the kingdom, and giving meat in due season to dying men. That God's besom may sweep everything to destruction that shall be thrown upon the track to hinder the blessed tidings of Christ's reign on the earth as nigh at hand, of the resurrection of the righteous, and the destruction of his enemies, and no life out of Christ. God grant that we may all be ready, watching and waiting his coming. Your sister, hoping for life when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

GEORGE FLINT, Central Falls, R. I., writes: I read your valuable paper with great pleasure, because there is so much Bible truth in it. I get information from it that I cannot get elsewhere. The sermons do me good, and I beg and pray I may be blest thereby: in fact I am blest of our LIFE-GIVER.

S. S. CALL, Newport Centre, Vt., sends $5 for the HERALD, and writes: I am much pleased with the improved condition of the HERALD OF LIFE. It seems to increase in goodness, and comes freighted with a savory dish for each one, from the babe in Christ to the adult. It refreshes me wonderfully, and often causes the tears of gratitude to flow while reading the letters and extracts from the dear ones scattered abroad. I wish to say to any brother or sister in Christ, coming this way, I shall be happy to see them at my house, as I shall consider it a favor to meet those of like precious faith. To day I went to the Baptists' meeting. I was grieved at the manner in which he read John xvi., 8. It reads, "When he [the comforter] is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." He read it, "of a judgment to come:" thus adding to the words of Christ. This was done in reading it; not in quoting. I never saw Math. xxv., 42, "For I was hungered, and ye gave me no meat;" etc., so vividly brought before my mind: souls fed upon husks. O, thought I, how careful was Jesus to enjoin upon his disciples to "Feed my sheep: feed my lambs." God help the shepherd to feed the hungry flock with the pure word. May he help every brother and sister to work while the day lasts.

J. W. MCCAGG, Warsaw, N. Y., writes: I was converted to the advent faith a little over a year ago; but could not be reconciled to the idea of a resurrection of the wicked, held by some. By accident I got hold of one of your papers (perhaps I should say, providentially); and my mind has been much enlightened by the paper since. I prize it much, and should be sorry to be deprived of it. We have five large orthodox churches here, and a population of 2,000. I am, and have been a member of one of these churches, the largest in the county, for ten years, the Congregational. I hold meetings on the Sabbath, and some from all denominations attend. You can guess there is some stirring up against me. Blessed be the name of our Lord for his blessing.

Your brother in Christ.

IN MEMORIAM.

As I was reading my last HERALD OF LIFE, mine eyes caught the following: "FALLEN ASLEEP. Geo. Huntington writes us from Providence, R. I.: 'My beloved father, Dr. Thomas Huntington, Brooklyn, Conn., died on the 1st inst.'"

By this sad intelligence I was nearly overcome, for I had been most intimately acquainted with him for about thirty years. By me he has always stood in all the trying scenes which I have been called to pass through. To him I have always gone for counsel, and in harmony with that counsel have acted: When about to leave Connecticut as a missionary for Canada West, he gave me, in behalf of the Advent Church in Abington, of which he was pastor, a letter of commendation, And in all my visits in the East (except the one made last August) I have, by his request, visited his people and preached the word of life to them. For years my home was within some five miles of his, and he was one of the council when I was ordained as pastor of the Baptist church in Hampton, Conn., hence we were associated together in that religious body. We were together in the anti-slavery cause. In the '43 movement, expecting the Lord to come at that time, I preached a couple of sermons upon the destruction of the wicked to his people, which resulted in his conversion to the doctrine. We embraced the glorious doctrine about the same time, that the righteous only will have a resurrection. And to use his own language in a letter to me, "Br. Lyon, this doctrine of no resurrection of the wicked, puts a finishing stroke upon the plan of redemption."

Br. Huntington was a scholar. He graduated at one of our New England colleges, I think Yale; passed through a thorough medical course of training, was among the best physicians when he entered the ministry.

When young he united with the Congregational church, by whom he was highly esteemed. But he became satisfied that the ancient mode of baptism was by immersion. Therefore he came out and was immersed, and united with the Baptist church. He became convinced it was his duty to preach the gospel, and by that church he was set apart to the work of the ministry. And had he crowded himself ahead as some do who have not half the intellect he had, and remained among them, he might have been a Wayland or a Fuller, for he was among their first men, and by them he was thought much of. He was among the first to embrace Elder Wm. Miller's views, and zealously advocated them, but upon the passing of the time, the Baptist church turned him out, with many others, because he held on to the doctrine of the Lord's soon coming to set up his kingdom upon this earth.

Br. Huntington was a little Calvinistic in his religious views, but this did not hurt him. Upon the passing of the time, the brethren in Woodstock, East Hampton, Brooklyn, West Killingly, Pomfret and Abington, came into gospel order, and Br. H. became their pastor, which office he filled with honor (for in this office he was second to none) until about two years ago. But ill health compelled him to resign his pastoral care of the church when he had labored faithfully for some twenty-three years.

Br. H. was a kind husband, father and neighbor, and in him suffering humanity had a warm friend. He possessed the first order of intellect, and it was devoted to the service of him who had purchased us with his own bl

He was one of the best men of the 19th century. Outside of my own relations, but one man ever had a stronger hold of my affections than Br. Huntington. But he sleeps in Jesus, and soon he will awake no more to sleep.

Sleep on, loved one,
Until Christ shall come,
Then he will awake thee
From thy slumbers,
Then in immortal beauty
You shall shine
In Paradise restored.

BELIEVERS LIKE THE SECURED BUOY.—Standing on the sea-shore you may have seen the buoy fastened to a rock. Billow after billow strikes it, and sways it hither and thither within certain boundaries; and sometimes passes over it and buries it out of sight; but it is but for a moment; it regains its first position, and rises again to view on the top of the waves. So with the Christian. Billows of tribulation roar around, dash against him, and break above him, but they drown him not; he remains firmly stationed amidst all the commotion, for he is founded on the Rock of Ages.

SIN HARDENS LIKE FROST.—The hardening of the heart is like the hardening of ice. When the water begins to freeze, it will not bear the weight of a pin, but after some hours or some days, it is capable of sustaining the heaviest pressure.

GOD'S WORD LIKE GOD'S WORLD.—God's Word is like God's World, very varied, very rich, very beautiful. You never know when you have exhausted all its secrets. The Bible, like nature, has something for every class of mind. As in the phenomena around us here are resources and invitations both for science and for poetry, so does God's revelation furnish materials both for exact theological definition, and for the free play of devout thought and feeling. Look at the Bible in a new light, and you straightway see some new charm.

GOOD ADVICE.—"Why don't you write a book in reply? You could beat him completely," said one of his parishioners to an old New England divine, who had been attacked in print, with more fervor than grace, by a brother minister. "Because," the Christian man replied, "I don't wish, when my Master comes, to be found beating my fellow servants."

ON CENSURE.—"For my own part," says Rev. John Newton, "if my pocket was full of stones, I have no right to throw one at the greatest backslider upon earth. I have either done as bad or worse than he, or I certainly should if the Lord had left me a little to myself, for I am made of just the same materials; if there be any difference it is wholly of grace."

ADVENT CONFERENCE.

THE Lord willing, there will be a Conference at the school house in West Bangor, (Barkerville), on the third Saturday (and Sunday following) of each month, commencing Saturday afternoon, at 2 o'clock.

This meeting is intended to be a free meeting, and a general invitation is hereby extended to the preaching brethren to attend, when convenient. Brethren will please give their appointments through the HERALD, or otherwise.

In behalf of the brethren.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1867. R. W.

THE LOGIC OF IMMORTAL SOULISM.

THE following was sent to us by Elder J. Parry, of Davenport, Iowa, and is taken from the Cairo Democrat of December 8th. Br. Parry has followed it with some remarks, which is all that need be said. Truly "the plea" is consistent with the doctrine of inherent immortality.

A SUICIDE'S PLEA FOR THE SUICIDE.

The recent death in our city of Col. R. B. J. Twyman, by his own hand, will insure for the following "Plea for the Suicide," written by him on the 22d ult., a general persual. The manuscript, in the Colonel's own hand-writing, was enclosed in an envelop, directed in pencil to "John H. Oberly, Esq.," and was deposited with a leading druggist of our city, with instructions for its publicity after his death. The manuscript, if desired by his family, can be had on application to this office.

THE PLEA FOR THE SUICIDE.

How common it is for the loving world to declare that the "suicide was crazy," that he or she, who has voluntarily freed their suffering, wearied, immortal spirits from this world of misery and woe, were laboring under a "mental aberration!" The idea, therefore, of a sane person committing suicide is not to be tolerated.

I think differently. I believe that a person can, if of sound mind, and earnestly desiring to go to God, sincerely pray to be transferred from this world of suffering and sorrow to the blissful "spirit land" of endless eternity.

The truly good have no fears of death or of the judgment. God gave us life, and implanted in us an immortal spirit, and when that spirit is pure, it has a constant desire to return to that God of purity and love from whence it came. The selfishness, the deceit, the hypocrisy, the malignity, the hatred, the envies, and the corruptions by which we are surrounded in this world so afflict the spirits of the pure in heart, that they long to be freed from the curse of mortality, that they may enjoy the presence and glory of God forever.

But according to the doctrines of the so-called orthodox Christians, "he who destroys his own life loses his own soul." I do not believe it. We were taught by God himself, through the person of his Son, Jesus Christ, to pray for the coming of the kingdom. What is the kingdom referred to? Where is that kingdom? Christ said it is not of this world It is the kingdom of heaven—of eternity—for which we are taught to pray. Is it a crime, then, for us to go to that kingdom? There is but one way for us to reach it, and that is through the gates of death—the cold grave—where we lay down mortality and take up immortality.

Who are they that cling to life so tenaciously? Are they those who love God and desire to go to the spirit land, that they may see and enjoy his glory? No. They cling to life because they are afraid the devil will get them when they die. They who love God truly and sincerely are not afraid of the devil, and hence are not afraid to die, but welcome death as the real messenger of eternal freedom and peace. To the good, death is the king, not of terrors, but of peace and joy everlasting.

Who, then, will dare to say that the soul is lost who voluntarily seeks the bliss of eternity. When the prison house of clay, in which the immortal spirit is confined, knows nothing but pain and suffering—when friends desert and scorn you—when you are surrounded on all sides by swindlers, knaves and scoundrels—when your future is all gloom and darkness, the very blackness of despair, with no ray of hope to illuminate your soul—you voluntarily give back your immortal spirit to the God who gave it, and your body to the dust from whence it came, and then men say you were crazy, that you are eternally lost—they are hypocrites or knaves, and know not of what they speak. "Judge not," etc. So ends my "plea."

R. B. J. TWYMAN.

DAVENPORT, IOWA, Dec. 15, 1867.

BR. STORRS: The foregoing is a fair specimen of the ripe fruit, the natural production of the tree of life men have planted in opposition to that ordained of God as the only true LIFE-GIVER, Jesus the Christ.

The reasoning in the "Plea" is a legitimate conclusion from the premises; and the only reason why it is not carried out in practice is, because nature is stronger than creeds—and men do not, and cannot always believe their own theories. It is well for people to see what sort of fruit their pet tree would produce in a genial soil; and here we have it in perfection.

Spiritualism is just the soil to nourish this noxious plant; and all the sects and isms in the land are busy cultivating and watering this "upas tree," till it has well nigh covered the earth and choked the good seed of the kingdom.

We charge that the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul, is to be held to account for this and many other pernicious errors that are leading thousands far astray from the truth, to believe this first lie of the serpent, to their own condemnation—"Ye shall not surely die." J. PARRY.

A GENEROUS OFFER.

I AM desirous that subscribers to the HERALD OF LIFE, of all others, should have such aid as the book entitled "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE" affords in support of the system of truth so ably maintained in that invaluable weekly paper. I will therefore mail a copy of the second issue of the said book (containing the full index, appendix, and notices of the book), and will pay the postage, on receipt of a letter from any such subscriber enclosing $2, directed to me, 417 Broad street, Newark, New Jersey. O. S. HALSTED.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—In addition to the foregoing we have made arrangements with Judge HALSTED to furnish the work as follows: Any person who will send us $3 shall have the remaining numbers of this volume of the HERALD OF LIFE, and we will send them "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE" free of postage. Thus they will get at least 36 numbers of the HERALD and the book for the retail price of that work, viz., $3. Will not every one avail themselves of this chance to get one of the most useful works ever published? To those who are now subscribers for the HERALD, Judge Halsted's offer is very generous, and we hope none will fail to embrace it, and write to him immediately for it; yet they can save fifty cents by sending a new subscriber to this office, as above directed. The book is one to study; and with its aid your Bible will be more perfectly understood and valued.

FROM CLAMOR FRANKE.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 18, 1867.

BR. STORRS: Thanks be to our God, Br. Wendell has been permitted to hold forth, on last Sunday, to a goodly number of our people, the precious Life doctrine. He preached in the morning to between 300 and 400 people in Grace (M. E.) church, in Newport, Kentucky (opposite this city), from the text, "In Christ shall all be made alive:" and in the evening, in Asbury (M. E.) chapel, in Cincinnati, to nearly the same number of people, from 1 Thess. iv., 13–18, inclusive.

Our dear brother felt both times great liberty in speaking, and preached the truth in such a manner as I had never heard it preached from any pulpit before. My heart leaped for joy as I listened to the precious words, "In Christ shall all be made alive;" and I greatly enjoyed the privilege of hearing them proclaimed to a people, who, while I believe they are Christians, have no well-defined, intelligent, Bible hope. Their heaven-at-death and immortal-soul theory, has supplanted the glorious resurrection doctrine of the Bible. Our dear brother Wendell has, I trust, opened the way for examination; and we fondly hope and pray, that, like the Bereans of old, they may look for themselves, and see whether these things are so. One elderly Methodist brother said to me, after the morning service, "That is just what I wanted to hear. He has explained to me fully that which before I did not understand." And all to whom I have spoken, have declared themselves much pleased with what they heard, and begged the privilege to hear Br. Wendell again. The pastor, Br. Spruell, whether he was conscious of it or not, endorsed in his closing prayer all that Br. Wendell had said: and afterward most cordially invited him to preach for him again on next Sunday, both morning and evening. We have consented to have him give a second installment of our Life views to this anxious people on next Sunday evening. In the morning of that day we hope to get him a hearing in some other church. Our object is to awaken attention on this subject among as many people as we can, and we know of no better and more effectual way, at present, to reach them, than by this method of preaching in the churches. Those who heard Br. Wendell preach in Asbury chapel were also greatly interested, and Br. Royce and family, who are members there, say that our Life-views are favorably entertained by other members of that church. Let us hope and pray, that the little leaven which is working among us here may ere long leaven the lump of that God-dishonoring system of natural immortality, and every phase of infidelity under whatever name or form.

Remember us in your prayers, that God may bless our feeble efforts to promote his glory.

Yours truly, in hope of eternal life.

FROM ELD. JOHN CRAIG.

WESTFORD, MASS., Dec. 15, 1867.

BR. STORRS: The last issue of the HERALD came to hand last night and found me prostrate on a sick bed, I fear with a slow fever. For several days past I have been failing, but was suddenly taken ill last Friday night, and since then I have suffered much from pains all through my system. My poor suffering wife in one room, writhing in pain, and myself in another room unable to help her in the least; and none but my little girl (aged fourteen years) to do the work and attend the sick.

I had to get Br. Nutting to-day to preach for me at No. 8 school-house. I hear there is a good work going on, thank the Lord.

I wish my brethren and sisters all to know that I still am strong in the Lord, and trusting in the power of his might; and although I can truly say with good Jeremiah, Lam. iii., 1, "I am the man that hath seen affliction," yet I had rather be in the furnace than unite with the worshippers in the plains of Dura: Dan. iii., 1. "Is any among you afflicted, let him pray." Yes, Br. James, thank the Lord, prayer is the great lever that moves the obstacles out of the way: that reaches God's throne. I think, sometimes lately, I have free access to my Father more than formerly, because I feel perfectly at ease in the soft hands of so kind a parent. O, beloved brethren and sisters, you who have my the blessing of health, see that you improve it to God's glory, for in time of ill health and pain our services will be poor enough. I dearly love to read those sermons of the Editor, which come every week in the HERALD OF LIFE. Your brother, with his anchor cast firm within the veil.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We hope our friends will remember Br. CRAIG in his sore and long continued afflictions. We regret that his letter came too late for our last issue. May the hearts of many be opened to give him immediate relief.

FROM JOSEPH LACIAR.

MAUCH CHUNK, PA.,
Christmas Morning, 1867.

BR. STORRS: Much I desire to give you a happy greeting on this glorious morning, which brought the glad tidings of salvation to us and all mankind. As it is impossible for me to give you a personal call, I will write a few lines, to show that I have made you one in mind and spirit. This is indeed a glorious day to all Christians; and one for which we cannot be thankful enough unto the Lord for the great goodness which he manifested toward our fallen race on this occasion. Yet great as it is, my mind nevertheless looks forward with the greatest admiration, to that day wherein God's promise will be finished up, in that he will gather us into the eternal inheritance. Glorious morning! May it soon arrive. Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen. As this is the day on which the Lord received gifts at the hands of those who came to worship him, so will I this morning present my presents unto the Saviour by adding two more subscribers to the HERALD OF LIFE—the Lord's instrument by which he works in his mysterious ways to make men wise unto salvation. Hoping that many more of the brethren will remember the Lord in such a way as they may see needful, be it in a pecuniary way, by boldly causing the truth to shine through their preaching, by cheering up some of the household of faith, or in whatsoever way the Lord has given them light and wisdom and circumstances wherewith they can fulfil his will.

The truth is beginning to loom up a little in this town. Surrounded on all sides by mountains of wonderful and precipitous heights—from the summit of one of which, one pleasant Sunday afternoon, during the past Summer, was read the wonderful sermon, "Earth not Heaven," etc., to a lonely companion, while crossing over what is called the "Dunkey Pass." Indeed, as I now look back on that same occasion, it seems to my mind as though it was but a continuation, and partly reiteration of that same sermon as it was proclaimed to the world from the mountain by him who spake as man never did speak, and who bade his hearers to give ear while he brought forth the words of consolation, "The meek shall inherit the earth." These are, indeed, words of cheer and consolation to us who humbly and patiently wait the destruction of the Lord's foes, and the immediate manifestations of the kingdom, by the coming of the great Ruler who is "King of kings, and Lord of lords." My great desire and prayer for some time has been, that God might cause some one of the brethren to come this way to preach the word of truth, with all its force. If I would know a week beforehand, I would have notices printed and posted around town, and also have it inserted prominently in the weekly Gazette. We have a town hall which will accommodate, I presume, six hundred or more hearers. This hall is rented out for public uses at the moderate sum of $5 a night. Besides we have the court house, which is opened free of charge for all good purposes. And as to hearers, I think the attendance would be unusually large. We have some half dozen churches, and one (Episcopal) in process of building, which is to cost the enormous sum of over $70,000. Some weeks ago the M. E. Church took up a missionary collection, which amounted to something like $250. So you see we have indeed liberal-minded Christians here; and I feel assured that most encouraging results would be reaped for the cause of truth in this place if it was put forth with more strength. I have entertained a strong intention lately, to write to my esteemed friend and brother, Grim, to make a visit in this direction. I long to see Br. Grim, as I am what I am through his instrumentality, he being gifted by the Lord with mighty words of wisdom and truth, which shook my former doctrine to its centre, and buried it in oblivion among the popish "dunghill decretals" of Rome. Glory to the Lord, in whom dwelleth all the fulness of wisdom, I am now firmly established on that solid foundation where neither storms, hurricanes nor the fear of violence can move me: that foundation on which we have all joinedly builded until we have now finished the structure, even to the pinnacle, whereon the trumpet is now sounded; and on which the bell is ringing the death knell of a world's decease, together with all in it, except the few who have put their trust in him who is the author of the new creation, and who indeed is long suffering, willing that all should come unto him and become co-heirs of the new possessions. O Lord Jesus hasten the day, for thy waiting ones are longing to be with thee. Amen; come quickly.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, Dec. 16, 1867.

BR. STORRS: I am now at my home in Iowa, having returned from my long visit in Wisconsin, and my HERALD OF LIFE comes regular, and O what a blessing it has been to me. I shall never know here its full value. The glory of the HERALD is, that it stands so stiffly for the word of God; the great foundation on which our feet are set by sovereign grace. O glorious word, how much is contained in that portion of the prophet Hosea, "After two days will he revive us: in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight. Blessed truth; the prophet is speaking of the resurrection of Jesus, and Paul says, Christ was raised the third day, according to the Scriptures. This must be the Scripture, for it is only portion that I have found in the Old Testament. O what a comforting thought that every child of God arose with their divine Head, and dwell in God's sight, "For all live unto him." And again Paul says, "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Then after the resurrection of Christ, the first fruits—"Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord (know what?) that his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he will come unto us, as the former and the latter rain in its season." O, bless the Lord, ye that have followed on to know him him that his coming unto us is as sure as the morning; and we know that the morning will come, for God's word declares that, "While the earth remaineth, day and night shall not cease." Now just as sure as there was a former and a latter rain in its season, so sure will Christ come unto us in his own season; yes, the season that God has put in his own power. O the love of Christ in giving his people the signs of his near approach, that they might lift up their heads, knowing that their redemption draws nigh. On such a glorious subject it is difficult to stop one's pen, when so many glorious truths on this subject press into the mind. But I will say, "Go on, Br. Storrs, in the strength of Israel's God. Go on, Br. Wendell, give the trumpet the certain sound. O, that I could have seen you on your Western tour, and heard the life-giving words dispensed. But you, dear brother, and all of God's faithful preachers shall have my prayers that you may be like a locomotive on God's everlasting railway, laid in infinite wisdom, carrying the glorious gospel of the kingdom, and giving meat in due season to dying men. That God's besom may sweep everything to destruction that shall be thrown upon the track to hinder the blessed tidings of Christ's reign on the earth as nigh at hand, of the resurrection of the righteous, and the destruction of his enemies, and no life out of Christ. God grant that we may all be ready, watching and waiting his coming. Your sister, hoping for life when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

GEORGE FLINT, Central Falls, R. I., writes: I read your valuable paper with great pleasure, because there is so much Bible truth in it. I get information from it that I cannot get elsewhere. The sermons do me good, and I beg and pray I may be bl st thereby: in fact I am blest of our LIFE-GIVER.

S. S. CALL, Newport Centre, Vt., sends $5 for the HERALD, and writes: I am much pleased with the improved condition of the HERALD OF LIFE. It seems to increase in goodness, and comes freighted with a savory dish for each one, from the babe in Christ to the adult. It refreshes me wonderfully, and often causes the tears of gratitude to flow while reading the letters and extracts from the dear ones scattered abroad. I wish to say to any brother or sister in Christ, coming this way, I shall be happy to see them at my house, as I shall consider it a favor to meet those of like precious faith. To day I went to the Baptists' meeting. I was grieved at the manner in which he read John xvi., 8. It reads, "When he [the comforter] is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." He read it, "of a judgment to come:" thus adding to the words of Christ. This was done in reading it; not in quoting. I never saw Math. xxv., 42, "For I was hungered, and ye gave me no meat;" etc., so vividly brought before my mind: souls fed upon husks. O, thought I, how careful was Jesus to enjoin upon his disciples to "Feed my sheep: feed my lambs." God help the shepherd to feed the hungry flock with the pure word. May he help every brother and sister to work while the day lasts.

J. W. McCAGG, Warsaw, N. Y., writes: I was converted to the advent faith a little over a year ago; but could not be reconciled to the idea of a resurrection of the wicked, held by some. By accident I got hold of one of your papers (perhaps I should say, providentially); and my mind has been much enlightened by the paper since. I prize it much, and should be sorry to be deprived of it. We have five large orthodox churches here, and a population of 2,000. I am, and have been a member of one of these churches, the largest in the county, for ten years, the Congregational. I hold meetings on the Sabbath, and some from all denominations attend. You can guess there is some stirring up against me. Blessed be the name of our Lord for his blessing.

Your brother in Christ.

IN MEMORIAM.

As I was reading my last HERALD OF LIFE, mine eyes caught the following: "FALLEN ASLEEP. Geo. Huntington writes us from Providence, R. I.: 'My beloved father, Dr. Thomas Huntington, Brooklyn, Conn., died on the 1st inst.'"

By this sad intelligence I was nearly overcome, for I had been most intimately acquainted with him for about thirty years. By me he has always stood in all the trying scenes which I have been called to pass through. To him I have always gone for counsel, and in harmony with that counsel have acted: When about to leave Connecticut as a missionary for Canada West, he gave me, in behalf of the Advent Church in Abington, of which he was pastor, a letter of commendation, And in all my visits in the East (except the one made last August) I have, by his request, visited his people and preached the word of life to them. For years my home was within some five miles of his, and he was one of the council when I was ordained as pastor of the Baptist church in Hampton, Conn., hence we were associated together in that religious body. We were together in the anti-slavery cause. In the '43 movement, expecting the Lord to come at that time, I preached a couple of sermons upon the destruction of the wicked to his people, which resulted in his conversion to the doctrine. We embraced the glorious doctrine about the same time, that the righteous only will have a resurrection. And to use his own language in a letter to me, "Br. Lyon, this doctrine of no resurrection of the wicked, puts a finishing stroke upon the plan of redemption."

Br. Huntington was a scholar. He graduated at one of our New England colleges, I think Yale; passed through a thorough medical course of training, was among the best physicians when he entered the ministry.

When young he united with the Congregational church, by whom he was highly esteemed. But he became satisfied that the ancient mode of baptism was by immersion. Therefore he came out and was immersed, and united with the Baptist church. He became convinced it was his duty to preach the gospel, and by that church he was set apart to the work of the ministry. And had he crowded himself ahead as some do who have not half the intellect he had, and remained among them, he might have been a Wayland or a Fuller, for he was among their first men, and by them he was thought much of. He was among the first to embrace Elder Wm. Miller's views, and zealously advocated them, but upon the passing of the time, the Baptist church turned him out, with many others, because he held on to the doctrine of the Lord's soon coming to set up his kingdom upon this earth.

Br. Huntington was a little Calvinistic in his religious views, but this did not hurt him. Upon the passing of the time, the brethren in Woodstock, East Hampton, Brooklyn, West Killingly, Pomfret and Abington, came into gospel order, and Br. H. became their pastor, which office he filled with honor (for in this office he was second to none) until about two years ago. But ill health compelled him to resign his pastoral care of the church when he had labored faithfully for some twenty-three years.

Br. H. was a kind husband, father and neighbor, and in him suffering humanity had a warm friend. He possessed the first order of intellect, and it was devoted to the service of him who had purchased us with his own bl .

He was one of the best men of the 19th century. Outside of my own relations, but one man ever had a stronger hold of my affections than Br. Huntington. But he sleeps in Jesus, and soon he will awake no more to sleep.

Sleep on, loved one,
Until Christ shall come,
Then He will awake thee
From thy slumbers,
Then in immortal beauty
You shall shine
In Paradise restored.

BELIEVERS LIKE THE SECURED BUOY.—Standing on the sea-shore you may have seen the buoy fastened to a rock. Billow after billow strikes it, and sways it hither and thither within certain boundaries; and sometimes passes over it and buries it out of sight; but it is but for a moment; it regains its first position, and rises again to view on the top of the waves. So with the Christian. Billows of tribulation roar around, dash against him, and break above him, but they drown him not; he remains firmly stationed amidst all the commotion, for he is founded on the Rock of Ages.

SIN HARDENS LIKE FROST.—The hardening of the heart is like the hardening of ice. When the water begins to freeze, it will not bear the weight of a pin, but after some hours or some days, it is capable of sustaining the heaviest pressure.

GOD'S WORD LIKE GOD'S WORLD.—God's Word is like God's World, very varied, very rich, very beautiful. You never know when you have exhausted all its secrets. The Bible, like nature, has something for every class of mind. As in the phenomena around us there are resources and invitations both for science and for poetry, so does God's revelation furnish materials both for exact theological definition, and for the free play of devout thought and feeling. Look at the Bible in a new light, and you straightway see some new charm.

GOOD ADVICE.—"Why don't you write a book in reply? You could beat him completely," said one of his parishioners to an old New England divine, who had been attacked in print, with more fervor than grace, by a brother minister. "Because," the Christian man replied, "I don't wish, when my Master comes, to be found beating my fellow servants."

ON CENSURE.—"For my own part," says Rev. John Newton, "if my pocket was full of stones, I have no right to throw one at the greatest backslider upon earth. I have either done as bad or worse than he, or I certainly should if the Lord had left me a little to myself, for I am made of just the same materials; if there be any difference it is wholly of grace."

ADVENT CONFERENCE.

THE Lord willing, there will be a Conference at the school house in West Bangor, (Barkerville), on the third Saturday (and Sunday following) of each month, commencing Saturday afternoon, at 2 o'clock.

This meeting is intended to be a free meeting, and a general invitation is hereby extended to the preaching brethren to attend, when convenient. Brethren will please give their appointments through the HERALD, or otherwise.

In behalf of the brethren.

OBEDIENCE TO GOD.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

[Concluded from last week.]

II. THE GROUND OF THEIR CONFIDENCE.

Why did these men continue steadfast under such circumstances?

1. The word or law of God was their supreme rule of action.

No matter what laws are issued by civil or ecclesiastical rulers, if those laws or decrees contravene the authority of God, no man must obey them, whatever hazard he may run. No plea of "obedience to rulers" will avail any one here; and no man can obey such laws, or decrees, without the guilt of renouncing his allegiance to God. The requirement to obey rulers, civil or ecclesiastical, is based on the ground that they "who rule over men rule in the fear of God." God is the power from which they have received their authority to rule, or else they are usurpers. If they have received authority from God to rule, then they are bound to rule according to the Constitution God has given for their guide: that constitution is the Bible, or Scriptures of truth. If, then, any body of rulers do not rule constitutionally, or according to the truth of God, their laws and decrees, which are not in harmony with God's law, are null and void. The man who professes allegiance to God and yet obeys such laws or edicts, is but a hypocritical pretender: he is a rebel against God. God's authority must be supreme with us, or he is not our God.

Let us not be misunderstood. We are not teaching resistance by physical force: no, but there must not be even a seeming obedience to such laws; yet we can endure whatever penalty such wicked civil or ecclesiastial despots shall inflict upon us for our choosing to "obey God rather than men." The penalty we can endure without crime on our part; but obey we cannot without the highest sin.

But "this principle," says one, "would overturn government, and bring the laws into contempt." So Nebuchadnezzar thought, and proceeded to act accordingly; but nevertheless the servants of God were unmoved in their purpose to obey God at all hazards, and calmly told the king they would not obey him: the law of their God, to them, was above that of the monarch of Babylon: and so it must be to every man, or he is an idolator. No human law can bind any man, when such a law is clearly opposed to the requirements of God. On this ground stood the three Hebrews. Love to God and trust in him was the ground of their refusal to obey the law of that land, on the occasion under consideration.

The correctness of the principle can be seen by a simple illustration. Suppose a law is enacted which requires that any man meeting another who has but one eye, or one leg, shall smite him to the earth, or be subjected to fine and imprisonment. Could we obey such law and be Christians? Certainly not. We could suffer the penalty without physical resistance. Let civil and ecclesiastical invaders of God's truth and authority know that their commands so far as they contravene the commands of God, cannot and will not be obeyed by the servants of God. Thus did the men before us.

2. A clear conscience was another ground of confidence to these Hebrews. "Our God whom we serve," is their language. A good conscience makes a man strong. But such a conscience can only exist when men are governed by the principles of truth, and not by expediency. An expediency man can always find an excuse for violating the demands of truth upon his conscience; and thus he weakens and destroys the voice of conscience, and comes to be incapable of withstanding any temptation to sin. These Hebrews could say, firmly, "we serve God," their conscience did not upbraid them with disregarding his authority. Hence they are strong on the occasion. When men uniformly regard the requirements of God they will have the assurance of his protection and favor, which enables them to suffer for his name.

3. The goodness and mercy of God formed another link in the chain which led them to confide in him. "He will deliver us." God is good and will not suffer his faithful ones to be tried above that they are able to bear. There is no ground for supposing that these men had any assurance of such a deliverance as they received; but their general knowledge of God's goodness and mercy led them to confide in him without wavering. "God will deliver me;" if not by preserving life now, yet he will deliver me from sin, and hence from ultimate death—the wages of sin—is a truth which is based on his mercy and goodness, and forms a ground of confidence in the severest trials. Let these traits of his character ever live in the mind of the servant of God, and they will make him strong to endure trial.

5. The Power of God is another source of confidence to these men. "Our God is able," is their noble reply to the king, when he tauntingly asked—"Who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?" If God is good and merciful, he is as able as he is good? Yes, what his goodness and mercy prompt him to do, his power can accomplish; so that his servants have nothing to fear in this respect. These men could call to mind the power of God as exhibited to their nation in their deliverance out of Egypt—his miracles for the people in the wilderness—and all the various wonders he had wrought for his people in all previous time; and, inspired with the consideration of the facts, could say, "Our God is able to deliver us." Happy those who keep alive in their minds the power of that Being who made heaven and earth; for it will make them strong to endure trial in spite of all apparent dangers and threats. On the rock of God's almighty power can we safely rest, while in the path of obedience to his will. These Hebrews found it a rock of strength in their time of need, and rested upon it.

5. The Promise of God, though not expressed in their reply to the king, doubtless, was in their mind. They might call to mind the promise of God—"When thou walkest through the fire thou shalt not be burned: neither shall the flame kindle upon thee;" Isaiah xliii., 2. Though this promise might not have been designed to be understood literally, yet, it could not fail to afford support in the hour of such trial as that these Hebrews were now called to. Happy is the man whose mind is stored with such supports as the promises of God afford.

These men rush not to scenes of danger uncalled of God; nor do they refuse to obey the king of Babylon so long as his laws and commands do not conflict with those of God. At the command of the king they came to the dedication of the image; for God had never commanded them not to stand before an image: so they obey the king up to the utmost limit they were permitted by their allegiance to the God of heaven; but when the king goes a step further, and commands to "bow down" to his image, these men refuse, because that God had forbiden. Now their regard for God's authority as supreme, is to be tested, and it is found to endure the trial—they will not bow down, whoever else may do so, or whatever reproach and suffering may be heaped upon them for their non-compliance. They are firm as the rock of God's word upon which they stand. What objects of contempt for the moment—what wonder and amazement is caused by their supposed folly. This leads us to notice—

III. THE CONSEQUENCES OF THEIR FIRMNESS.

1. Their enemies enraged and the hostility increased. "Nebuchadnezzar was full of fury, and the form of his visage was changed against" these men. "Heat up the furnace," he cries, "one seven times more than it was" usual "to be heated."

"What an excitement these men have made!"

"How they have disturbed the peace of the church, or state!" "Strange they should be so wilful and obstinate!" Thus men talk who regard their own superstitions, or popular favor more than the authority of God. They know nothing of being governed by that authority, and they are astonished that any one else should be. They attribute it to obstinacy, or an insane spirit, because they are ignorant of the power of supreme respect for God's authority.

The self-willed image worshippers were enraged because their will was not regarded above the will of God. So it usually is. Civil and ecclesiastical rulers too often fancy they are to be obeyed, and their will not to be opposed, merely because they have become intoxicated with power, and they construe any dissent from their decrees into rebellion against God, forgetting that all men have the right to try their decrees by the unerring rule God has given. But opposition to their will usually raises their fury to a flame; so it was anciently, and so it is still. The three Hebrews are, however, unmoved by the tempest that howls around them: their position is taken and they cannot be moved. This leads us to notice another consequence of their firmness, viz.:

2. God is glorified in the face of his enemies. He has an opportunity to manifest his power. Had these men been your time-serving sycophants, who can put God, conscience, and truth, all aside, through fear of displeasing a mortal, or for some more censurable reason, then would the power of God have been held in contempt by all the image worshippers assembled on that occasion. But these Hebrews were firm in their purpose to obey God, in the face of the greatest danger, and when the most ignominious death appeared before them. Their enemies are terribly aroused, and "the most mighty men in the army" of the king seize them, and bind them in such haste that neither their coats, hats, or other clothing are removed; but they were hurried into the "fiery furnace," and "fell down bound" therein. Filled with haughty exultation, the king and his cringing sycophants, were doubtless ready to conclude they would make it manifest that their will was not to be resisted: and that these Hebrews would lose their "hot zeal" for their God when the "fiery furnace" was about to receive them. But look, again! What do we see? Nebuchadnezzar's "mighty men" who had performed the office of the tyrant's will, lie slain before the "fiery furnace." Hot, indeed, the king had made it; too hot for his own time-serving mighty ones; for they fall dead by the flames they have kindled at his will; yet God's obedient ones are seen "walking loose in the midst of the fire!" Surely they must be "harmed!" Yes, if burning off the cords that bound them was harm; for they are "loose." All that civil or ecclesiastical despots can ever do, as to the ultimate event, against those who from principle stand firm for the supreme authority of God, is but to give them greater enlargement; and such despots are but the losers in the end by their denial of that supreme authority. What do I see! cries out the haughty tyrant—"Did not we cast three men bound into the midst of the fire? Lo, I see four men loose walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt." True, haughty tyrant—prototype of all other tyrants, whether civil or ecclesiastical—true, they are loose and unharmed! Do you know now, "Who is that God that can deliver out of" your "hands?" You would not have known, had these Hebrews been like the time-servers with which our land and world abound. But now God is honored—his name magnified—the haughty tyrant humbled and his image—his golden image—brought into contempt. What do we see? Where is that prostrate company—so scrupulously bent on not "disturbing the peace," as to sacrifice conscience and principle, to be in harmony with "the church," or state! Where are they now? All gazing into the fiery furnace, filled with astonishment at what the God of the Hebrews had wrought! Where now is the great and golden image! Look at it, as it stands in "the plain of Dura!" Has it any admirers? No: not one. All have forsaken it. Not one so poor or mean, in all the vast crowd, as to pay it the least respect, or to be found kneeling before it? No: it has sunk into a meanness that nothing can equal but the time-servers of the present age. What has called off attention from it? Ah, the faithful servants of the God of the Bible have given their Sovereign an opportunity to manifest his power, and that power has shown the contemptible and wicked character of all human policy that shrinks from the path of uniform obedience to the known will of God. Such a result, to God's honor, came from the firm principle in the breasts of his servents, which no flatteries, threats, or other terrible consequences, real or imaginary, could shake. And that manifestation of God's goodness, mercy, and power, has sustained many a faithful heart under the trials and temptations to which the servants of the Most High God have, more or less, been subject in all periods since.

We come to notice,

3. These Hebrews have an increase of joy and confidence. This is a natural result; or a gracious one, if the phrase suits better. This joy and confidence time-servers are strangers to; because such characters never can have a good conscience. If every spark of light and truth has not become extinct in such, they cannot but feel that they have sacrificed truth and righteousness to expediency; that has been their "golden image," to which they have fallen down, despite the plain commands of God their Maker. Such men can never know the bliss of the three Hebrews; who, acknowledging God as Supreme, carried out their principles in practical life; and God honored them, and gave them such demonstration of his love and care as could not fail to fill them with joy unspeakable and full of glory: all of which they would have come short of, had they given way under the pressure of circumstances. Henceforth the experience of the past is added to all other considerations to comfort their minds in the firm obedience to their God and attachment to his service.

4. Their enemies were put to silence. Most men, who live in the sacrifice of principle to expediency, suppose they gain by such a course. But gain or lose at present, such a course must ultimate in crushing their manhood, as well as their religion; while the opposite cause exalts their manhood, and always improves their moral character, as well as ultimately silencing their enemies. This was peculiarly so in the case under consideration. In the result, the proud monarch, who had defied the God of these men (verse 15) was forced to acknowledge that "no other God can deliver after this sort:" and a royal decree is drawn forth from Nebuchadnezzar, that no man in all his vast dominions, should "speak anything amiss against the God of Shadrack, Meshack, and Abednego." This decree must be carried home by those time-serving princes, governors, captains, judges, etc., who had come to do homage to the "golden image," and who had fallen down thereto; but are now compelled to return home, not with the praise of the image, but with the astonishing intelligence that the God of heaven is above all other gods, and that his servants—faithful to his commands—are henceforth to have full liberty to honor him, not only unmolested, but none are to speak anything against him. Thus were the contemners of Israel's God silenced by the faithful obedience of his servants, and the manifestation of his power; for which their obedience gave occasion.

IMPROVEMENT.—1. We learn the blessedness of those who faithfully serve God. Reflection on the bliss or joy these men must have experienced, under all the circumstances over which they were enabled to triumph will convince any mind that the consideration, that they were kept from dishonoring God in the hour of trial, and that their firmness was made the occasion of the richer and more glorious display of the excellency and the power of the God they loved, and the spread of his fame abroad, must have imparted a blessedness to them which would prove lasting as life itself. Such a bliss time-servers fail to secure, and sometimes die of mortification and disappointment.

2. We learn that there is no necessity for abandoning right principles, or for complying with wicked customs. After the considerations already set before us, in contemplating this subject, we have no need to enlarge on this reflection; we name it only to impress the truth on the mind. May it never be obliterated therefrom.

3. We learn that God can and does get honor to himself by his faithful people in spite of their enemies.

4. We learn that God will not suffer those who adhere to right principles or to his truth, to be tried above that they are able to bear, but will now or ultimately deliver them.

5. We see the honor that God puts upon his faithful servants.

6. Let us learn to obey God under all circumstances, and at all times. No plea can ever answer for an opposite course; and we can have no excuse, in view of this subject, for concealing an attachment to God's truth and authority. Openly, fearlessly, yet calmly, let us maintain both: and remember, Jesus hath said, "Whoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation; of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he comes in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." Mark viii., 38. Solemn words these. May we heed the warning.

"D." SAYS: "The Judge says there is no such Latin word as diabolus." D. "accepts the statement" that Ainsworth's Latin and English dictionary does not give diabolus; but he says, that in "our friend's Leverett's Lexicon he finds diabolos (diabolus) the devil." (Leverett puts diabolus in parenthesis). Did "D" really fail to see that Leverett's Lexicon itself makes diabolus to be the Greek word diabolos? Does "D." think there is anything like etymology—derivation—in the Latin taking the Greek diabolos and simply giving us (the usual Latin termination) for os (the usual Greek termination)? He really seems to think so; for he cites from the Latin Vulgate one passage from Matthew—Mat. xiii., 39; one from Luke—Luke viii., 12; two from John—John vi., 70; xiii., 2; one from 1 John—1 John iii., 8: and four from Rev.—Rev. ii., 10; xii., 9, 12; xx., 2; and then says: "With these quotations before him, if Judge H. can say there is no such Latin word as diabolos, he can say with equal propriety, there is no such thing as a Latin word." We shall take up these quotations in the sequel. At present we only ask: Did "D." ever succeed in making a 1 by multiplying ciphers? Diabolus being an adoption of diabolos, the use of diabolus for diabolos one hundred times would not make it a Latin word, any more than the use of it once in the same way would. After his quotations, "D." says: "My quotations are taken from Biblia Sacra, vulgatæ editionis, Sixti V. and Clemens VIII." "D." might have been so kind as to translate this for us. But inasmuch as he declines (as we shall see) to go back to the Hebrew, and translate some of that for us, we will not complain of his not translating this Latin. We will try and do it ourselves: "(The) Bible Sacred, of (the) vulgate edition, of [Pope] Sixtus V and [Pope] Clemens VIII." [The same edition we have.] And "D." therefore says: "To the Judge, I have no doubt, the Vulgate will be good authority." Now if "D." had read more of "The Theology of the Bible" he would have been saved from such a blunder. Nay, even the fact, which he had before his eyes, of the labor we had expended in going to the original Scriptures, would have been sufficient to prevent such a mistake. Why should "the Judge" spend so much time and labor in going to the original if he considered the Latin version good authority? By turning to pages 376 and 432 of the book he had before him, "D." would have learned that Romanism asumed to make the Latin language the sacred language; that the Pope and his priests were horrified at the idea that the Greek and Hebrew threatened to take from the Latin the sacred character with which Romanism clothed it. Remarks of Prof. Draper are given on page 432: I cite here some of them: "With a quick and jealous suspicion, the ecclesiastic soon learned to detect a heretic from his knowledge of the Greek and Hebrew." . . . . "They [the Romish clergy] were giving proof that they could not trust their own strength. They could not conceal their dread at the incoming of the Greek; they could not speak without horror of the influence of the Hebrew." . . . . . "The study of the Greek and Hebrew, recognized by all parties to be dangerous to the Latin system." And does "D" know that the orthodox system—prevailing to this day in so-called Protestant Christianity is the same Latin system—the same Romish system—of immortal soul—immortal spirit, hell, devil, devils, eternal torments, etc.; except that so-called Protestantism has struck out the mitigating feature—purgatory; which even Romanism dared not leave out. The naked hell which Protestantism went to, and still holds to, is more than Romanism dared put even to its benighted masses of that day. And is the now prevailing orthodoxy any less horrified that any one should resort to the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures and show in print from them the system they teach? Is "D." quite sure that his own mind is free from this kind of horror at the idea that any man, even of the nineteenth century, should have the temerity (the word, probably, "D," would use) to put before the public what he finds to be the system taught in the original Scriptures? It would seem that "D." was so horrified at our having undertaken to show from the originals (with what success the reader of the book we have published will judge) that the Romish and Protestant personal Devil, and devils, are simply, Evil, evils, that he makes it a special point of attack on a book which shows that that is the Scripture meaning of the words. "D.'s" horror is, no doubt, intensified by the necessary inference, which he cannot fail to perceive, that if there be no orthodox Devil there can be no orthodox hell. The idea that eternal non-existence—eternal death—will be the everlasting wages, penalty, punishment—of the wicked, and not eternal life in misery, which orthodoxy says death means in regard to them, is so awful in "D.'s" mind that he can't give up his Devil because that would be to give up his hell of eternal torments.

This reminds us of an article in the HERALD OF LIFE, of Dec. 11, 1867, stating that an eminent minister not a thousand miles from Brooklyn, N. Y., is reported to have said in his pulpit, not long since: "Take away hell and you will take away the foundation of my religion." What a damning confession! It would be difficult to put in words a severer rebuke than was administered to "this clerical gentleman" by the Editor of the HERALD—a Goliath wielding the sword of truth (the word of God) and cutting away the obstruction in the path of life set up by men's inventions.

This matter of the Devil and devils has become more interesting to us than was anticipated; and we may therefore be led to greater length in our treatment of it.

It will not be out of place in this connection to say, that we derived much gratification from the remarks of our type-setter, a Roman Catholic, as he proceeded with his work. We soon began to see that it was making an impression on him. And when he brought us the proof-sheets in reference to the word damnation used in the Rheims, and the King James version of the New Testament (pages 444, 5, 6, 7: we attended once, and sometimes twice a week at the printing room), he said, the explanation given "would take a great weight from men's minds." And when he had got well along with Resurrection, he said to us, that the Protestant system all came from the old church (as he called the Roman Catholic church), except that Protestantism struck out purgatory, and would have nothing but "the bare, naked hell." He told us that he had taken home what was printed in reference to resurrection, and had, the Sunday before, read it to a friend who had been a Roman Catholic, but had left that church and for a while attended an Episcopal church, but now went to no church; and that his friend was entirely satisfied by what he read to him. And we have no hesitation in saying, that in our judgment, any man who will read the book and still adhere to the prevailing system will prove the truth of the saying: "There is none so blind as he who will not see."

To return to the subject in hand, "D." "anticipates an objection of the Judge, in saying that diabolus is an adopted word for the Greek word diabolos." And, by way of answer, he asks: "Is not theatre (he spells it theater; our dictionaries give it both ways) an English word though it is adopted from the French theatre?" Now the very form of his question admits that theatre is a French word adopted by us; and being given by him as an example, shows that diabolus is the Greek diabolos adopted in the Latin version. The English compound word, for which we now use the French word theatre, is, play-house; and the German is, bühne, and schau-platz, show-place. And Webster has put in his English dictionary the French word avant-courier. Is it, therefore, an English word? My edition of Walker's English dictionary does not give it. The English word is forerunner. And "D." asks: "Is glacier less an English word because we took it from the French glaciere." This is "D.'s" other example and it is more unfortunate. We not only took glacier from the French glaciere, but we misapply, too, the French word. The only definition given of glaciere in Boyer's French and English dictionary is, an ice-house; whereas Webster defines glacier, a field of ice. What philologist—man versed in the history and construction of languages—will say that a French word becomes an English word when adopted by us, or that a Greek word becomes a Latin word when adopted by the Latin?

We come now to the word diabolos, diabolus. "D." says, he "goes back to the Greek and that is far enough." We can readily excuse him for not going further back than the Greek. He goes to diabolos; and he means to say that our word devil is derived from the Greek diabolos. He would derive the word devil from a word of eight letters, two only of which are found in devil, d and l; and there being in diabolos four letters between them.

We take up, first, the word diabolos, and its equivalents; after which we will take up the word devil.

Before proceeding, we will state, for those who have not "The Theology of the Bible" (in which the same matters are stated), that the Latin language, in which the Pope's Sacred Bible is written, has no article; by reason of which that language is greatly wanting in precision; and that therefore, in rendering the Latin into English, our article a or the, or no article as the sense shall require, is to be used; a rule which gives full license to use either of our articles or neither of them, according to the taste of the translator; of which license the Douay, the Rheims, and the King James version, make free use, to suit what they, respectively, prefer should be the sense. Among the Pope's reasons, if he had more than one, for making the Latin the sacred language, and his Latin Bible the Sacred Bible, could there have been a better than that the Latin afforded this license? Next: That the Greek has but one article, the definite article the; and that when the Greek does not use its article, our indefinite article a is to be supplied and this is the rule given in the Greek grammars. Next: That the Greek article, the—before a noun used in an abstract sense, is not to be rendered in translating the Greek into English. This rule applies also in translating from the Italian, and from the French. Next: That where the Greek does not use its article, our article the can never be used. Neither of which rules is adhered to in the Douay, the Rheims, or the King James version. Next: That where, in the book before mentioned, two or more words are given for the sense, either with or without or between them, every one of them is given in the Lexicons as a definition. Of course the translators have selected the definition best suited to their theories.

The Hebrew has not the indefinite article—a. This article, therefore, is to be supplied. It has he, which some suppose may be the definite article; but other authority says, it is the he emphatic; and we have said that we think this latter to be its true character, and have given our reason; and the Greek ho, he, to is given both as the definite article, and as the demonstrative pronoun, in which latter character it answers to the Hebrew he emphatic.

The reader can now judge what probability there is that we have got a true translation from the originals in "D.'s" authority—the Latin Vulgate—Romanism's Sacred Bible; or in the Italian, the Douay and Rheims, or the King James version; all which, like the Latin, and through it, or from it at second hand, have adopted the Pagan superstitions of ghosts—souls—spirits (the three words mean the same thing as the originals plainly show, and as ecclesiastics themselves admit), Tartarus, and Elysium, Pluto, and his regions. The reader can judge whether we can safely rely that any set of men imbued with such a theory can have given us a true version. And what version have we but from men who had adopted the Latin—the Romish theory?

In rendering from the Hebrew, and from the Greek, we shall put in parenthesis the a supplied. And as in numberless instances the Greek of the Old Testament uses its ho, as an article, in one or another gender, case and number where the Hebrew he is not used, (which proves that the Hebrew he is not an article; for if it were it would be found where the Greek ho is used as an article) we shall in such instances give in parenthesis, the, in rendering the Hebrew. And when the Hebrew he is used, and the Greek ho, in one or another gender, case, and number, is used for it, we shall take the Greek ho to be the demonstrative pronoun, answering to the Hebrew he, emphatic. The Hebrew he is not declinable.

We now proceed: First with Diabolos, and its equivalents.

Influence of Godliness.

Two men were once travelling in the far West; one was a skeptic, the other a Christian. The former was on every occasion ready to denounce religion as an imposture, and professors as hypocrites. According to his own account of the matter, he always suspected those who made pretensions to piety, felt particularly exposed in the company of Christians, and took special care of his horse and watch when the saints were around him. They had travelled late one evening and were in the wilderness. They at last drew near a solitary hut, and rejoiced in the prospect of a shelter, however humble. They asked admission and obtained it. But it was almost as dreary and comfortless within as without; and there was nothing prepossessing in the appearance of the inhabitants. There was an elderly man, his wife, and two sons, sunburnt, hardy and rough. They were apparently hospitable, and welcomed our travellers to such homely fare as the forest afforded; but this air of kindness might be assmed to deceive them; and the travellers became seriously apprehensive that evil was intended. It was a lonely place well suited to deeds of robbery and blood. No help was at hand. The two friends communicated to each other their suspicions, and resolved that on retiring to their part of the hut they would barricade the door against the entrance of their host; that they would have their weapons of defense at hand, that they would alternate in watching, so that one should be constantly on his guard while his companion slept. Having hastily made their arrangements, they joined the family, partook of the homely meal and spoke of retiring to rest. The old man said it had been his practice in better times, and he continued it still, before his family retired, to commend them to God, and if the strangers had no objections he would do so now. The Christian rejoiced to find a brother in the wilderness, and even the skeptic could not conceal his satisfaction at the proposition. The old man then took down a well-worn Bible on which no dust had gathered, though age had marked it, and read with emphasis a portion of the Sacred Scriptures. He then supplicated the Divine protection, acknowledged the Divine goodness, and prayed for grace, guidance, and salvation. He prayed, too, for the strangers—that they might be prospered in their journey, and when their earthly journey was done, they might have a home in heaven. He was evidently a man of prayer, and the humble cottage was a place where prayer was wont to be made. The travellers retired to their apartment; according to arrangement the skeptic was to have the first watch during the night; but instead of priming his pistols and bracing his nerves for an attack he was for lying down to sleep as quietly as if he had never thought of danger. His friend reminded him of their engagement, and asked where he had lost his apprehension of danger. The infidel felt the force of the question and all it implied; and had the frankness to confess that he could not but feel safe as at a New England fireside, in any house, or in any forest, where the Bible was read as the old man read it, and prayer was offered as that old man prayed.—Selected by L. An Acknowledgment.

Br. Storrs: Please allow me to acknowledge, through the Herald of Life, the receipt of eight dozen of childrens' stockings from Wm. H. & L. C. Thorne, of this city, to this missior. Truly, the Lord is with us, spiritually and temporally. As we give out to the hungry and naked ones, he puts it into the hearts of his children to send us more. Bless his holy name.

Yours, "in the highways and hedges."

Anna E. Smith.

A Specimen of Modern Benevolence.—Mrs. A. was a church member; she thought herself very benevolent; she gave to almost every cause. We shall see how benevolent she was. She gave six dollars for a pocket handkerchief, and having half a dollar left after the purchase, dropped it in the box for "Foreign Missions." She gave forty dollars for a crape shawl, and two dollars the same day for "Domestic Missions:" she gave ten dollars for a pair af ear-rings, and quarter of a dollar to the "Tract Society;" three hundred dollars she expended on a fashionable party when her daughter Amelia "came out," and fifty dollars went toward repairing the church and paying the pastor. Her elegant cut-velvet hat cost fifteen dollars—she paid fifty cents about the same time toward a new Sunday-school library. She gave three dollars for Eliza Anne's wax doll, and one dollar toward educating a young immortal (?) in Africa. Will God be satisfied with the driblets which chance to remain in the Christian's purse, after every elegant taste has been satisfied, and that, too, when a world is perishing? —An Orthodox Paper.

Nursing Troubles.—Some people are as careful of their troubles as mothers are of their babies; they cuddle them, and hug them, and cry over them; and fly into a passion with you if you try to take them away from them; they want you to fret with them, to help them to believe that they have been worse treated than anybody else. If they could, they would have a picture of their grief in a gold frame hung over the mantel-shelf for everybody to look at. And their grief makes them ordinarily selfish—they think more of their little grief in the basket and in the cradle, than they do of all the world beside; and they say you are hard-hearted if you say, "Don't fret." "Ah! you don't understand me—you can't enter into my trials!"—Blind Amos.

Late "Early."

We said last week, "Our paper is expected to go to press early this week," etc. It was not our fault that it did not; all the matter for it we had furnished the Saturday morning previous; but it was not sent to press till Monday evening or Tuesday morning, and when about half printed the press broke down and we did not get the remainder till Thursday. Saturday we found to our amazement, several packages returned to us, through the Post Office, which had been on a voyage of discovery, but failed to find their true destination, because some blunder had been committed in putting them in the wrong wrappers. How many more have shared a like or worse fate, by never returning to us nor reaching the subscribers, we do not know. If any have failed to get their paper of last week, if they will let us know, we will do the best we can to supply them. In addition to these calamities, our paper was not printed as well as it should have been. Much of the impression was bad. These are a few of the beauties of having to edit a paper and look after all the business matters beside. One needs some of the strength of Samson, the patience of Job, the age of Methuselah, and the wisdom of Solomon, to make all the workings of a weekly paper go smooth, together with seeing after tracts, books, pamphlets, etc. We are willing to do all in our power; but we cannot accomplish impossibilities. We have one consolation: these things will have an end, and the time is not far away. The day of rest from all this turmoil, from men, will soon be here: but till it does come we will do the best we can.

Lectures on the Life Views.

The Editor of this paper will commence a course of lectures, next Sabbath evening, in Brooklyn, N. Y., at Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay Street; entrance on Jay. The object is to bring out before the public, fully, the Scripture doctrine of man's nature and destiny: or, a future life, and the time and manner of entering into it. The question of immortality will be presented as taught in the Bible; and the theological notions on the subject—so long prevalent—will be shown to have no foundation in reason or Scripture. Life future and eternal is for those only who conform to the demands of the gospel: all others will remain eternally in death's dominions.

Questions on the topic considered, each evening, will be allowed after the lecture; but discussion, by protracted debate, cannot be entered on till the lectures are all completed. Those in Brooklyn desirous to know what our views are, will now have an opportunity, and are respectfully invited to attend the entire course. No charge for admission, and seats free.

"D.'s" Answer to Judge Halsted's first article we had not read when last week's paper went to press, and we gave notice to defer it till the Judge was through with his entire reply. Having since examined "D.'s" answer, we concluded to insert it this week, and it will be found on the last page.

Whichever party is right as to the derivation of the word "devil," it does not alter the thing itself. Such a thing as a personal spirit devil, in the orthodox sense, we are satisfied, has no existence as a matter of revelation. But we have had our say, to some extent, on this subject. We hope the controversy may be so far changed, soon, as to pass from the derivation of the name to the thing itself; otherwise our readers will lose their interest in the subject, as many of them care nothing about, nor understand, the controversy about the derivation of the name. A portion of them are deeply interested in it; but they are much the less number. Most of them cannot judge of the accuracy of either party in their various quotations from foreign languages. These remarks are not intended to censure either party in the controversy: both, we trust, are seeking for light and truth. We honor them both as men of learning, ability, Christian candor, and research; and we doubt not that good will result from the controversy so far; and a few more shorter articles will be well received by a considerable portion of our readers.

The main question of the existence of a personal spirit devil is one in which nearly all our readers must feel an interest since the subject has been so far ventilated. Evil exists, and will continue to exist, till the Heir to David's throne shall be installed in his kingly power thereon. Then comes the end of all sin and evil: not, perhaps, in a day or year, but certainly at no distant time; and the world will be filled with righteousness, truth, and peace.

Whether evil is the result of the abuse of a free agency—without which the agent is not accountable—or originates in a spirit-devil let loose to deceive and destroy the intelligent work of God's hands, is a question which it is high time was settled; and it must and will be settled, ere long, we trust in harmony with the perfections of God, common sense, and the reason with which our Creator has endowed us, and which he calls us to exercise on all questions, not excepting his government of our race.

"D. D.'s"—A Good Beginning.

The following is from The Church Union.

SEMI-LUNAR FARDELS.

I am glad, that among other reforms, you drop off the clerical D. D.'s. Nothing can be more clearly condemned by our Saviour than these Rabbinnical titles. "Be not called Rabbi." "One is your Master, and all ye are brethren." "How can ye believe who receive honor one from another, and seek not that honor that cometh from God only?" Nothing more clearly ministers to the gratification of worldly pride than these capital semi-circles. I wish you could make them appear so inconsistent or ridiculous that brethren would shrink from them as a badge of shame. Some may Shrink from ridicule, if not from law.

A minister of the Gospel once called at the office of the New York Observer and requested his address changed to Rev. Dr. Being asked when the degree was conferred he replied, "Well, never, exactly; but it is a way our people have of calling me."

Physicians who take to preaching, perhaps after a failure in the practice of medicine, often rejoice in the glorious title by brevet, Rev. Dr. Indeed I know a horse doctor who has just been received in the ministry of the —— Church, and set over a feeble branch in a small village in New York State, who is suddenly puffed out before the world as the Rev. Dr. Prick those puff-balls.

We can tell the Church Union how to "prick those puff-balls." The "D. D.'s" are mainly needed to keep the falsehood of an "inherent immortal soul" alive, and to defend "eternal torments." That is the chief work to be done by them. Kill those two earth-born notions and you will "prick those puff-balls" effectually; because, with those items stricken out of theology, it would be so far restored to its orignal moral soundness that these "Doctors of Divinity" would be as useless as an "M. D." would be in the kingdom of heaven. Let the Gospel be restored to its primitive simplicity, and "D. D.'s" would be of no value. "Life only in Christ" is so simple, and so comprehensive a truth that it needs no doctoring. But we fear the Church Union will yet have to call in the "D. D.'s" to keep it alive; for it seems to be so full of the moral disease that it cannot bear the sight of the Herald of Life; for, after having itself solicited an exchange, it abruptly left us. We are not disquieted by its absence, for we have full as many exchanges as we can find time to look over; but if the Union wishes any help to render useless these clearly forbidden titles, we will gladly lend a helping hand; yet is a hopeless work so long as itself clings to the disease which makes D. D.'s necessary to its theological system.

If our cotemporary will put forth a good effort to revive the almost obsolete doctrine of "Life future and eternal only in and through Christ," it will soon find why the "puff-balls" continue to live and increase. Until it does this its own efforts for union may be found to be no better than that of one who "beats the air." Why not unite in Christ as the only Life-giver for dying men? Is it afraid of putting too high an honor on him whom it professes to delight to exalt? Let the great Physician have his proper place in your theology, and the mushroom doctors would vanish like the pestilent atmosphere before the burning sun.

"The Credibility of the Scriptures."

"BY J. H. M'CULLOH, M. D."

Some fifteen or sixteen years ago this work first made its appearance in two volumes, octavo, of some four or five hundred pages each. The work was one of immense research and value; but met with the disfavor of orthodoxy, because, theologically, the Dr. came to the conclusion that immortality for man is conditional, bestowed only at the resurrection, and that till then the dead are unconscious. But a very small portion of his work related to that question; but enough was said to retard the sale. We bought and sold many copies of it in those days. We have just received, from Geo. W. Young, No. 25 Chambers street, this city, the same work with the following title page:

On the Credibility of the Scriptures. A Recast, with enlarged views, of a former work on the subject, together with a copious analysis of the religious system promulgated during the Patriarchal, Jewish and Christian dispensations, and of human developments under them. By J. H. McCulloh, M. D., etc.

We have not had time to examine the "Recast," but presume it is a work of equal ability of the previous one, with the additional experience and research of fifteen years. It now appears in two volumes of over four hundred pages each, well executed. Dr. McCulloh says, in his "preface" to this work, he has "arrived at some important conclusions which were overlooked in my former publication, and which has required me so nearly to re-write the whole subject as now offered to the reader, that it may virtually be considered to be a new work."

We shall, probably, notice the work more fully hereafter. It is for sale by Geo. W. Young, No. 25 Chambers street, New York City. Price $4. Postage to be added: probably, about 60 cents.

A Question:

Are Innocence and Righteousness Equivalent?

Are there more than two classes of persons of the whole race of mankind? If not, to which class do those belong who die so young as to have developed no moral character? We know that such are innocent; and if we decide that because of their innocence they must be classed with the righteous, then this is saying that innocence is equivalent to righteousness, or justice, is it not? or, as another has expressed it—"Innocence is justice in repose; and justice is but innocence in energy." But if we say, this will not do, because that in the case of the innocent there has been no development of moral character, then the same reason must forbid our putting them in the class of the wicked, for the wicked have developed character; they have refused instruction, disobeyed commands, and on this account are rejected as wicked. This the innocent have never done, for no one can reject the truth until it is presented to him; and it can be presented to none but such as have come to the years of understanding. Does not this establish the fact that the innocent of our race do not belong with the wicked? Well, then, we must come back with them to the first class named, i. e., the, righteous, or just; or else we must leave them as a third class by themselves, to be dealt with in the future as neither the righteous nor wicked will be dealt with. And mark well just here—it will not do to say, We will let this third class alone, for this is just all that is done with the wicked: when they are dead we let them alone, and God also lets them alone. We know that criminals before an earthly court might think it a privilege to be let alone, because their life is not dependent on their connection with such court. But "when God adopts this let-alone policy" it is a curse fatal to all such as are thus let alone. When he dismisses one from his court, or refuses to call him there as not worthy of a trial, he becomes, so to speak, "an outlaw;" and death eternal is the awful consequence. So we ask again, What shall we say of those innocent ones? where shall we leave our precious treasure? Shall we regard them as mere brutes, or as waifs in society, and say, if God does not care for them, neither should we? But we do care for such; and no amount of reasoning can prevent this deep regard. And love for such innocence, and from these yearnings of affection spring such inquiries, and shall we be blamed or silenced when we thus inquire?

We have stood by the couch of dying innocence, and we often "mourning bend" over buried little ones, and the only relief we find is that Jesus who wept at the grave of Lazarus marks the tears we shed. I say, when we remember that he who wept over that "cave" had power to make alive the one who was buried there, it gives relief. But what relief could this thought bring, as we wept over these little graves, if those for whom we mourn shall not be raised? What should we care for the sympathy of one whose mission as the "Life-giver" did not reach the subjects for which we thus mourn? The mothers at Judea "refused to be comforted" for their children "because they were not;" at least, they would not be "comforted" till this message was sent them—"refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears . . . . for thy children shall come again from the land of the enemy." Though this language was first spoken in reply to a mother "whose voice was heard in fancy" long after she was dead, when the tribe of Benjamin was likely to become extinct, yet it was also spoken to the many mothers in the infant Saviour's day, and this enemy is death, is it not?

And are these children, and all such as these, to be brought from the "land of the enemy" in the same perfected state of moral character as are the righteous? or, must this development of character be made subsequently? We fear there is not sufficient light on this subject, or even interest enough to awaken the mind so as to answer these questions. We could offer some suggestions, but they might not be acceptable. Will not those who have more knowledge and influence give their thoughts on this very grave matter?

We think a question something like the following has once been asked in the Herald, though not answered—"Are those who die characterless in a better condition than were the first pair before they were put on trial?" As death is not a crisis, as it does not in the least affect moral character, as all the wicked, who shall live no more, must reach their crisis of moral character before they reach death, then we ask, Shall the accident (?) of death, which comes to so many of our race before they have developed moral character, deprive them forever of the privilege of doing so, and so they be forever lost? or, shall such have eternal life without said development? Are we not all making too much of death, and too little of life "on either side of the interval of death"? We are well aware that there are some texts which seem to forbid that there can be a state of trial for any who have been once dead. But as the men of "the Herald" would hardly allow that any doctrine should be proved true or false by the use of isolated texts, or texts taken out of their connection, but rather by the even tenor of the whole Book, we think we should answer the above questions only by the latter excellent rule.

H. Young.

Pittsfield, N.H., Dec. 5, 1867.

Response to the Foregoing.

It has been our course for years to leave that on which God has made no special revelation to be developed hereafter, if he sees fit to make such revelation. As to anything positive, as to the future of little children dying in infancy being revealed, we are unable to find it. That there are sufficient indications of God's design to cause the children of believers to share with their parents in the inheritance promised, we are satisfied. But these indications are not such as to make it desirable that they should die in infancy; nor are we informed on what ground God will impart to them a share in the inheritance, only that it will be a free favor, if it is bestowed at all.

To the question, therefore, of Br. Young, "Where shall we leave our precious treasure?" meaning our little ones who die in infancy, we answer—"Leave" them in the hands of our covenant God, who has a greater interest in them than we can have, and who is wise enough to dispose of them in the best and most satisfactory manner. Our "feelings" are no guide, rule, or reason, for concluding they must have a future life. We might as well argue that because we "shed tears" and "mourn" over a "pet" animal—whether a noble horse, noble dog, or any other "pet" to which we were so fondly attached that it was with "yearnings of affection," little less than those felt at the loss of a child, that we laid it in the grave, feeling that we would rejoice if we could know that the delightful creature would live again. No doubt he who shed tears "at the grave of Lazarus," has "marked the tears we shed" over our beloved "pets," when they struggled and died, and we laid them in the dust; and no doubt he has "power to make alive" these beloved creatures: and we believe Mr. Wesley, the founder of Methodism, was of the opinion that his noble horse would come up in the resurrection; but none of these feelings must be suffered to frame a theory of a future life not clearly revealed in the Bible. All such speculations are labor lost. Our whole business, as teachers of religion, is to deal with those of our race who have understanding, to lead them to God, and to his Christ for life eternal. As to the inquiry about those who have not understanding, we may say as Jesus said to Peter, when he asked, "Lord, what shall this man do?" Jesus replied, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." Our Lord and Master will take care of the little children who die in infancy, and we may as well leave that business with him. He understands the matter perfectly, and if we have faith enough to commit ourselves into his hands, let us not be afraid to commit our "little children" into his hands also. Then we shall be blest, and our offspring will be disposed of in wisdom and love.

Queries.

Dear Sir: Should be glad to know your views of a personal devil, if such a thing be in existence or no; and if so, in what form may we apprehend his proximity to us? Not that we would wish to become acquainted with him; but made apprised of his presence. Representations are made in the Scriptures, under the similitude of a serpent, so a spirit, or principle, to a roaring lion; so into a herd of swine, etc. Are we to infer from this, that he personates these different forms, in fact, by assuming their shape, and so personates them? or, are we to take it spiritually? A sermon upon this subject would go far to settle a fixed course of action among a class who are as yet very undecided which mode of interpretation to give it. If an array of Bible quotations could be drawn up before them, a connection methinks could be shown between the first great cause and the ultimate bearing this question has in the government of God, and made to appear reasonable, just, and true.

Note by the Editor.—As our friend was not a subscriber during the issue of the last volume of the Herald of Life, if he wishes to see our views on some of the points of inquiry, will he please ask Dr. Finley to let him see our remarks in the following papers, viz., May 22; July 24, and 31; August 7, 14, and 28; September 11? After that, will he examine Judge Halsted's "Theology of the Bible," together with the articles by him on the same subject, now appearing in our paper? If he does this, we think he will have little difficulty in settling the devil question. The theological devil dies with the eternal-torment theory and the theory of inherent immortality. These three are "the trinity" of paganized Romish Protestantism. Kill one of them, and they all die together. We care not which is first killed, neither of the others can long survive. No wonder a minister said, "If you take away hell, you take away all the foundation of my religion." He means of course, the theological hell. Let that be removed and his devil dies with it, and he has no use for wicked immortal souls, for he has no place to put them, nor a devil to do the work of tormenting them; and we might add, such ministers as himself would be out of employment; because, his "foundation" being swept away, no one would employ him: the Bible would be too easily understood to need his services. Yet he need not despair; for his eloquence might find remuneration in some more honorable employment.

As to our giving "A sermon upon this subject," as our Niles correspondent suggests, we may do so, after a while, if our life is prolonged and time will permit: but at present it is impossible for us to attend to it. Our strength is taxed to its utmost limits by the various things pertaining to the paper; books, tracts, etc., connected with our publishing matters.

"Stop Blowing and Go to Work."

Let me commend to some of our brethren a child's version of a sermon delivered in Chicago recently. The preacher urged that Christians should be active for Christ. They should serve him, not with breath alone, but also with the hands and feet. One of the audience, leading home his little boy of six or seven years asked him if he understood anything in the sermon:

"O, yes, I hear preaching now-a-days."

"Well, what did you hear this morning?"

"The minister said we should stop blowing and go to work."—Christian Banner.

It would be well for some grown people, yea, some professed teachers of religion to practice the child's exposition of the sermon. A certain class can blow well but they wish others to do the working part. "Work while it is day: for the night cometh in which no man can work." So spoke our divine Master. Let us heed his words. A lazy, idle Christian is a contradiction in terms. A lazy, idle man can no more be a Christian than a thief or a robber. He is, in fact, a thief and a robber, sponging out of others that which his honest efforts could produce for himself. Let him "stop blowing and go to work;" so shall he bring happiness to himself and those around him.

A Modern Church Assembly.—Twenty men scheming business and forgetting to raise their heads at the close of the prayer; twenty whom an inordinate breakfast has betrayed into sleepy stupidity; twenty women wondering if their "hair is right" or scanning their neighbors' bonnets; twenty young folks studying postures; twenty intermittent listeners whose consciences prick them into only a disjointed attention—who wonders that we hear so much of powerless preaching? The sun can work wonders in photography, but not on wrapping paper. The material must be prepared. When the congregation goes—as it expects its minister—from the closet to the house of God; when it meets him with eager eyes moistened with sympathy and speaking hunger for the truth; when he can feel that his prayer is upborne not by the faithful few alone, but by the great congregation, preaching will have a new power.—Advance.

Middle Bass, Ohio, Dec. 27, 1867.

Dear Br. in Christ: I had hoped to be able to enlarge my field of labor ere this, but our best digested schemes often prove illusory, and in my case painfully so. My Summer's work, as a pecuniary effort, will probably prove a failure, and I shall be compelled to turn my attention this Winter to replenish the loss of my Summer's fruitless exertions.

This I deeply regret, as I hoped to satisfy the request of a number of correspondents and brethren, of our common hope, in respect of my discoveries in Geology, as it relates to the history of our earth in connection with Revelation. With all due humility I claim to have discovered the true source of this dark and difficult science, which has been so much trumpeted by infidels, both in and out of the church as philosophy so called," "making thereby the word of God of none effect by their traditions."

I may, however, be able perhaps to give a portion of time to the subject, and present some of my evidences, showing the harmony existing between the "Cosmogony" of Moses and the facts of geology in the present development of the earth. The Word of God must be true, and geology equally so; and to harmonize them should be the highest aim of finite minds.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM GEO. H. FISHER.

NEW RUTLAND, ILL., Dec. 24, 1867.

BR. STORRS: We have had the pleasure of hearing the blessed word of life preached by our much beloved Br. Wendell; and we can join heartily in commending him for his faithfulness and zeal in the cause of truth. Our hearts have been comforted and faith strengthened by listening to the plain teaching of that word which "is a lamp to our feet and a light to our path." I never was so strong in the faith concerning the future condition of the wicked dead as at the present time; and to me no future life out of Christ is a blessed truth, and it looks consistent, just, and God-like to let them remain in death, seeing they would not come to Jesus that they might have life. Praise God for the light that we see, and for the assurance that it will increase more and more even unto the perfect day.

We are much pleased with the HERALD, and when we get a number and eat the food in it, it seems a long time to wait a week to have another meal; but if we have it thus often I am sure we won't starve. I have done nothing for the paper except to subscribe for it, but intend to do what I can in the various ways which will help sustain it.

May the Lord give us eye salve that we may see, and faith, zeal and courage to face the storm a little longer; and when the opening heavens shall reveal our coming Lord we shall stand with confidence, and hail him with joy; and, with the family of heaven and earth united, enter into that rest that remains for the people of God and the full fruition of the life that never ends. Your brother in the Gospel hope.

FROM MARIA M. WEAVER.

WESTFIELD, MASS., Dec. 22, 1867.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS: I have recently had cause to re-examine the arguments in favor of Life through Christ alone, and felt anxious to be led by God's spirit into the truth in this matter. My former friends have (unconsciously to me) had much to do toward prejudicing me against what they term "the non-resurrection," and had I gone by sympathetic feeling I should have adhered to the teachings of my friends. I do esteem them very highly, I acknowledge, and look with almost adoration to the intelligent, Godly-minded ones, who have been instructors and guides to my youthful mind. But, though in some cases it has caused a struggle, I have ever looked upon God as Supreme; on Christ as a "friend above all others," and upon the Word of the Lord as superior to the imaginings of mortal man. And after reconsidering my late change of opinion as regards the doom of the ungodly, I can see no cause for regret. The main principle of FUTURE LIFE THROUGH CHRIST, AT THE RESURRECTION, stands the closest criticism my weak, imperfect judgment is capable of giving it. And I must use my own abilities or none. Then I have the Word of the Lord to assist me in my weakness. So I am strong.

And I have found in this examination, that with the increase of light has come an increase of peace and love to my Saviour. O how can people think this God-honoring doctorine leads men to love God less! Why do they think that a belief that makes Christ the King of Life—THE ONLY SOURCE OF LIFE—can ever cause men to forsake him and his laws? It is because they utterly misunderstand the whole arrangement of salvation.

I KNOW, blessed be God, there are some things I know, that I have lived as near the Lord since embracing this doctrine as I did before. And while I endeavor to live by "every word" of God, this word concerning life from the dead is full of spirit. "Variety is the spice of life," but we want the meat first, and then the "spice."

Well, husband and myself expected to have been beyond the reach of wintry winds ere this. We believed that 1867 would be the last year of mortal existence. I desire to be "patient" in waiting "for the Son of God from heaven." We feel as though we had only been consistent with our faith.

The band of Life believers in this place are holding fast the truth, and living consistent lives. May we all be kept in love, and brought to the habitations of the holiest. Amen. We have seen a goodly number come into the faith in other places.

FROM ELD. J. LEWIS.

SHELBYVILLE, ILL., Dec. 21, 1867.

BR. STORRS: This morning finds me well and happy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, our elder brother and LIFE-GIVER; and although my labor is hard and means very small, yet I am fully determined to work on. If God be for us who can be against us. We are having very interesting times, notwithstanding the thunder from the theological magazine is in full blast against us poor fellows. One of the United Brethren preachers said if he did not believe there was a hell of fire, where the wicked went, he would go home and never preach any more! Poor man, like thousands of others, they want hell for a pen, and the old orthodox devil to keep them from murder and theft. They can't bear to have the old non-resurrection gun fired among them. But we love to fire so well that every now and then we send a bomb shell in their ranks, with the contents of the coming of the Lord to take the throne of David, together with all the parts connected with his reign. But of all the shots, that of the no-resurrection of the wicked they dislike the most. O, how they do want to make God a vindictive being; like the man that killed his dog for biting him: and every now and then he would go and beat the old dog with a club. His neighbor said to him, The dog is dead: what are you pounding him for? I know he is dead, he replied, but I want to let him know that there is a punishment after death.

The cause is gaining. We are breaking new ground as usual; and at present we are holding forth in the Patton school-house, three miles from the county seat. I am sorry I am so destitute that I can't pay up what is due the office of the HERALD OF LIFE; and if some who have not paid me for two or three years, would send to Br. Storrs to my credit, all would be right.

I want to say through the HERALD OF LIFE, by way of apology to the brother in Mo., who requested me to write him, that in consequence of my continual travelling, I omitted to do so until I lost the paper containing his request and his address. We would be glad to have him or any other brother come and travel with us if they can fare as we do; that is on foot, without much means. We don't know of any nearer route than from Alton, Ill., on the railroad, to Shelbyville, about one hundred miles. But how long we shall stop here, is quite uncertain, as we expect to go into Fayette County soon.

My post office address, however, will be Mode, Shelby County, Illinois. Hope all interested will write. The opening here is promising, with three times more calls to preach than we can fill. Where is Br. Walter? We wish he would write; and Br. Osborn, hope he will come back. Money here is almost out of the question; but we don't mean to abandon the field on that account; for the poor must have the gospel preached to them.

FROM ELD. JOHN CRAIG.

WESTFORD, MASS., Dec. 25, 1867.

BR. STORRS: God in great mercy has raised me up again to my helpless family—yet, feeble and weak, I feel to thank him for the "all things" that work for my good. I can see how the Father can bring his children through much tribulation to enter the kingdom of God.

I wish now to say to all the readers of the dear HERALD OF LIFE, how thankful we should feel to have such a free, untrammelled paper to visit us weekly to cheer our hearts in these times of so great peril, when the would-be shepherds are so blind as not to see either form or comliness in "No life out of Christ," but hold fast to the withered, palsied limb of everlasting misery. Now to me, it looks very strange how any one, believing that that the wages of sin is death, can suppose that the wicked will ever be brought to life after they are dead. I ask, for what purpose are they made alive? Do I hear, To die twice, or die the second death? Well then, why will not your theological devil have to go through the same process, as he is the greatest sinner of all? Why let him escape with only dying once? This does not look like rewarding every man according to his works. But perhaps as his satanic majesty is not a man, he will escape with the lesser punishment; for, if the wicked are not raised for a blessing, it must be for a punishment. So they must pay the penalty of the law (which is death), and then be raised by some power to life, and die again; which would make it twice. Oh, Br. Paul, why did you say, Heb. ix., 27, that it was appointed unto men once to die? Why did you not say twice, and then we should all believe alike? But here we are divided; some must have them killed twice; but others, who hold to Pauline theology, are satisfied with once. For my part, I believe that God will leave them in the dust of the earth, where they belong. I read in such places as Psa. xlix, of the wicked and their end, how they are as the beasts that perish (that is) when they are laid away in the grave like sheep. Hear what David says ver. 15, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave, for he shall receive me." Now, David, why all this if the others are redeemed also? What better off are you? The wicked are redeemed also, if some in these days are correct. Well, David, as you have called on all the inhabitants of the world to hear, ver. 1, I have heard and believed also, that like sheep they are laid in the grave, death shall feed on them, etc. O blessed be God, the enemies we have seen here, we shall see them no more forever. Amen. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

FROM JAMES H. JACOBS.

FREETOWN, N. Y., Dec. 17, 1867.

BR. STORRS: I have obtained two more subscribers to the HERALD, and hope they will become firmly convinced of the truthfulness of the doctrine it proclaims. I am satisfied it is the best doctrine in the world. It is good; it is Heavenly; it is God-like; it is Christ-like; it is subduing; it is melting; it is lovely; it shows that the goodness of God leadeth men to repentance. Thank heaven, God so loved the world that he gave his Son, that whosoever in the world, that heareth of God and his Son, and believeth on him, shall not perish, but have everlasting life. But, on the contrary, he that believeth not, will perish, and will not have everlasting life; therefore, two, yea, three theories cannot be true:

1. If men will not believe, they will not have eternal life. Therefore, suffering will not be eternal, and cannot be without eternal life.

2. All men cannot be eternally happy and holy without eternal life.

3. Eternal life is gained by obedience; the opposite of which is, eternal death; to remain in death—Prov. xxi., 16. Death cannot be eternal to any who will have a resurrection; for, the dead are raised incorruptible.

There is no getting into eternal death after the resurrection. Thank God, "the wages of sin" must be this side of the resurrection; if not, there cannot be any one to "remain in the congregation of the dead;" and if no one is to remain in the congregation of the death, but all have a resurrection from the dead to life, they will be the children of God, being the children of the resurrection, and they cannot die any more. If so, there will not be a congregation of the dead after the resurrection. But "the wages of sin is death;" and that death is, to "remain in the congregation of the dead."

FROM ELD. R. V. LYON.

SUSPENSION BRIDGE, N. Y., Dec., 1867.

BR. STORRS: I am once more at home, having been absent ten weeks in the States of Illinois and Indiana for the purpose of winning a bride for Jesus, by presenting the Gospel—the good news—the word of reconciliation, which he has commanded to be proclaimed among all nations, in order to "the obedience of faith." Everything seemed to be favorable to the circulation of the truth. I gave between seventy and eighty public sermons. In most places congregations were large, and in all the most profound attention was given to my message, and many embraced it with all their heart, believing that if they rejected it, life in the future would never be gained. Learned and unlearned were attracted by its magic power, and by it led to form a union with Jesus the LIFE-GIVER.

I spent thirteen days with the church of God, worshipping in the Christian Tabernacle, in the city of Jeffersonville, Ind., of which Dr. Field is pastor. Gave seventeen sermons, congregations large, and continued to increase until the close. More came than could get into our place of worship. As the result of my message the city was stirred, saints quickened, and sixteen came out and united with the church of God.

In all places I labored to impress upon the minds of the people, that only as they formed a union with Jesus the LIFE-GIVER, could they ever obtain a resurrection to life, or get out of hades—"the empire of death."

I distributed some $60 worth of my own works for the purpose of exposing a false gospel, and exhibiting the true, thereby hoping to save some.

This is the fourth visit I have made West, (in one I spent over five months) hence I have some knowledge of the people and their wants. It is not every man that will succeed in building up the cause of Christ, though he may have the truth. Cities in the West are not always the best places to find sheep, neither are they in the East.

Believing as I have, for many years, that the message we have to deliver, is essential to hear, understand, believe and obey, in order to be saved in the day of the Lord's coming, therefore I travel to preach, write and publish the message which is the LORD'S LIFE-BOAT; and we who proclaim it are his oarsmen, sent to the wrecked ship (the apostate church) to invite her distressed crew to leave the wreck, and step on board of the Lord's Life-boat, that they may be conveyed safely into port, before the old ship becomes a perfect wreck, and her disobedient crew scattered by the foaming billows.

God grant that we may be faithful to the work to which we have been called, that the blood of souls may not be required at our hands.

REV. MR. LYON.

This gentleman preached in the Court House, on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of this week to good audiences. He advocates the doctrine of the annihilation of the wicked, claims that this earth is to be purified and renovated and become the final home of the saints; and that in the end, everlasting righteousness, and ceaseless happiness shall prevail in all God's universe, and there shall be nothing to hurt or destroy in all God's holy mountain. He also claims that this consummation is soon to take place—yea, that some even of his audience would see the grand event of Christ's coming in his reign, and of the destruction of the wicked. We regard some of the Rev. Gentleman's doctrines as grand and sublime in the highest, and a few of his positions as wild and visionary. He is withal, a profound scholar, an unbiassed free thinker, has unlimited knowledge of the Scriptures from which he quotes fluently, is a tolerable speaker, and deserves to be heard wherever he goes.

I give the above, that the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE, may see, that truth, when disrobed of all the mysticism which an apostate church has thrown around it, does commend itself to the intelligent.

FROM THOMAS W. WRIGHT.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, Jan. 2, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I have read somewhere of a gold-digger whose toil was rewarded by a large lump of the precious metal; quitting his work at once, he ran from claim to claim, telling all his good fortune; at night he slept with it beneath his pillow, and in the day would sit and gaze at it with rapture, but put forth no effort to obtain more. Thus it is with our Christian friends here; they have found something truly precious; they call it experience, or moral perfection, or perfect love; and in the sermons we listen to, in the prayers we join in, and the hymns we help to sing, the same prize is held up to our view until we weary with the repetition; rather will we search on still; thankful for what we have found, we will seek for more, knowing there are treasures as rich, gems as pure still in God's unfailing mine of truth, ready to rejoice the heart and sanctify the life of those that search therein. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding. Wisdom is better than rubies; the gain thereof than fine gold."

Travellers in the desert of orthodoxy: we have alighted on a green spot, and been refreshed; we have been favored by a visit from Bro. Wendell, who has preached unto us, "Jesus and the resurrection." We have regaled on a feast of fat things, and we trust that the truth so well presented by our brother, may not only have rejoiced and confirmed us but may have worked its way to the hearts of his hearers and awakened a desire in them to know if these things are so. The Elders, of course, like their ancestors in Judea, will continue to frown down the "heresy;" but the stream of truth will sooner or later burst all barriers, and flow the mightier for the feeble efforts of man to stay it.

Pray for us, that we may with faith, through grace, work on for the Lord.

FROM ELDER SAMUEL L. WALTER.

CENTRALIA, ILL. Jan. 2, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I wish you, and all God's dear children, a very happy New Year. I pray that it may be so to us all: that we may increase in knowledge, in love to God, and all mankind. O, for an increasing light and understanding of God's great purposes toward man at the "restitution of all things."

I thank my Father, for increased health and strength. I am well. My wife is still in poor health, not able to do but very little. I hope she will soon be able to be about. We have got very little to meet our expenses since we have been out in these parts. If it had not been for a few of God's stewards, and the little of our own, and our laboring with our own hands, we should have been compelled to have left the work: but, thank the Lord, his promises are immutable: we have lacked no good thing.

After I wrote my last, I remained here over the next Sabbath, and preached for the Christians: had a good time in presenting truth; and had an invitation to speak to them again, but was prevented from doing so by a snow-storm.

Monday I went to DeSoto, where Br. C. Jones lives, formerly of Lebanon. He is still trying to break the ground and sow the seed. We attended the Union meeting at night; a good company out. Next meeting on Tuesday, we attended; spoke to the people on the importance of having "fruit in God;" also, about being true Christians. It was the development of a character in harmony with God, etc. I preached by request for them Wednesday evening, as it was a Union meeting. I spoke of "Love" as the grand principle of our holy religion, and without love there was no religion. That it was a matter-of-fact thing, which the world could see; and by which we knew we had passed from death unto life, etc.

I returned to this place Saturday. Went to the Methodist E. C. on the Sabbath, and heard a good practical discourse. A notice was read, viz., "There will be a meeting tomorrow night at the Baptist Church to take into consideration the importance of petitioning Congress to have the Constitution of the United States so amended that it would recognize God and Christ Jesus as the Rulers of this Nation." As I was anxious to see how the professed subjects of "God and Christ Jesus" would turn out, I went to the place, and found it all in darkness, with no one about; but, on inquiry, I learned that the trustees would not let them hold a meeting to talk about having the rightful Sovereign more fully recognized. I thought that if Jesus was to come again, many in the churches would say "away with him." O for more love for him and earnest prayer, "Thy kingdom come." I pray, come Lord Jesus, come quickly. Amen. Yours in hope of life.

S. J. BRIMHALL, Mapleton, Kansas, writes: "My heart's desire and prayer to God for" the HERALD "is, that it may be saved." May its life-giving pages continue to be loaded down with just such food as God-honoring, heaven-bound Christians love to feed upon. It is all the preacher we have on the Life theme in this country, and, like gold, its scarcity makes it valuable.

The present volume with me, so far, contains more rich truth, and rich Christian experience, than any of the preceding ones. There are some original, gospel, harmonizing, and soul-cheering truths in every number. That it may never be less interesting, and its conductors and correspondents be men and women sound in word and in doctrine, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

A BROTHER writes us from North Carolina: It is my candid opinion that there will be a wide field here, ere long, for missionary effort. I do not shun to open the way and proclaim the truth to all with whom I converse, in season and out of season. Were I at liberty to attend to the requests of many friends, I would have large congregations and as many calls to preach as I could possibly attend to. Pamphlets I distributed about twenty years ago have made many converts in South Carolina and North Carolina. I feel assured that your "Six Sermons" have done more good than any six thousand million sermons of orthodoxy, for this simple reason, they tally with the pure word of God, unmixed with error. Such is my sincere and candid opinion. "Be ye thankful." If we would be truly happy, we must be thankful. I would not exchange the emotions of gratitude to God for all the pleasures the wealth, and honors of this world. He that hath gratitude is rich. He that never felt its thrilling emotions is poor indeed.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The writer of the foregoing distributed several hundreds—perhaps we might say thousands—of the "Six Sermons" in North and South Carolina some twenty years since. We trust his estimate of the good accomplished by them may in some measure yet appear. If we were only young again, we would hasten into that Southern field and spend our days in labor there. But we are over seventy-one, and what could such old age do where hard work is needed? May the Lord raise up laborers for that most interesting field: men willing to spend and be spent to give the "light of life" to hungry souls. Our hope is, that God will multiply holy men, full of faith and the Holy Spirit, to carry on the work of proclaiming "Life only through Christ" for dying men.

STEPHEN BENTON, Middlebury, Vt., writes: I feel that I am alone in a land of strangers to our blessed hope; and my heart sickens to see the indifference that surrounds me to the revealed truth of life only through Christ our LIFE-GIVER. I still prize the HERALD next to my Bible. It is all the preacher I have for myself and family, except now and then I hear Br. Stetson, who preaches about nine miles from me, the last Sabbath in each month. May perfect love fill all the hearts of the dear saints, scattered abroad, is my humble prayer. I beg an interest in your prayers that I may have grace sufficient for my day. In Christian love, I remain your unworthy brother.

DAVID H. BAKER, Lawrence, Kansas, writes: People here don't like to read religious papers much. They are content to make as much money as possible; hire a preacher to do their thinking, and believe they are safe. There are a few exceptions: but there is not one here that fully believes the great crowning truth, "No future life out of, or independent of, Christ." Notwithstanding, if a good preacher was to come this way, and proclaim the glad tidings, he would get a large audience and be the means of doing much good.

D. L. OSBORN, Finley's Lake, N. Y., writes: I am often cheered in reading the letters and all the other matter in our good HERALD OF LIFE. I have been trying to preach some; and, as Paul said, "As much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to all" where my lot is cast. First: Because I love it; and it is to me good tidings of great joy that a LIFE-GIVER was born in the city of David some 1800 years ago; and that it was said of him, "He shall be great, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Glory to the Most High, we believe the time draws nigh when this LIFE-GIVER will come to give life, yes, life eternal: for, we think he gives no other; and it is conditional —"He that believeth on me, I will raise him up at the last day." Paul says, "The dead shall be raised incorruptible;" and "The Son quickeneth whom he will." Who are they? Believers. Believe what? The testimony, the witnesses, "the record God has given of his Son." What does God say? This is the greatest of all questions. He says, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."

WORKS RECEIVED.

"MERRY'S MUSEUM, AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR BOYS AND GIRLS:" Published by H. B. Fuller, Boston, Mass. Price $1 50 per year; or, 15 cents for single numbers.

"Vol. I., No. 1, New Series," is before us. It is interesting in its appearance, but of the character of its contents we cannot at present speak, as we have not time to examine it.

"YOUTH'S CASKET AND PLAYMATE, A magazine for Boys and Girls, Edited by Mark Forrester." Published by Wm. Guild, & Co., Boston, Mass.

"Vol. 27, No. 1," for January 1868, is received. This periodical, also, is interesting in its appearance and somewhat larger than "Merry's Museum." Both works are designed to interest children and youth, and doubtless will. We may give some samples of these periodicals hereafter, if we find such articles as are suitable for the children's department of our paper.

The Publishers of the Casket offer to send a copy of their Magazine FOR 1868 FREE OF CHARGE to any one who will assist in getting up a club for it. Send your address to W. Guild & Co., Boston, Mass., and specimen numbers with the necessary directions will be forwarded by them at once.

"THE HEALTH REFORMER: A monthly journal, devoted to an exposition of the Laws of our being, and the Application of those laws to the Preservation of Health, and the Treatment of Disease." Published at Battle Creek Mich. Terms; $1 per year. Address H. S. LAY, M. D.

"CARTER'S COMBINED WRITING AND COPYING INK." J. P. DINSMORE, No. 36 Dey street New York, will accept our thanks for a bottle of this ink, left at our office a few days since. So far as we can judge, from a short time of using it, we are much impressed in its favor.

MR. DINSMORE will, also accept our thanks for his present of "MCADAM'S PANORAMIC CALENDAR:" a most useful and convenient article.

"THE ADVANCE" is a new paper started at Chicago, Ill., by the Congregationalists, we suppose. We have seen but a few numbers, as it has just been added to the list of our exchanges. So far as we have been able to examine, it seems to bid fair to be a useful member of the fraternity. We wish it success in all good things, and that its title may be found to be the characteristic of its course; and that it will not fear to "advance" beyond the creeds and traditions of men into the glories of Bible truth.

We are much pleased with some of its standing regulations; especially with the following,

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.—Manuscripts are received with the distinct understanding that they cannot be returned: the authors must reserve copies. Articles over a column in length may usually be considered as rejected in advance. Communications to be published anonymously must be accompanied with a private note to the editor, giving the author's name. Manuscripts written with pencil will not be accepted.

In some measure we have acted on these rules; but not to the extent we wish we had. We have had much trouble with some writers because they could not have their manuscripts returned just when and how they wished. Some of these MSS. are so long and embrace so much, and have so many useless words, that it takes time and patience to determind what it is best to do with them. After all this, to be found fault with because we do not preserve and return them, is "a little too much of a good thing." Be sure your manuscript is worth publishing before you send it; or else submit to the judgment of him who is called to decide whether it is suitable or timely for the paper of which he has charge; and be sure you keep a copy, if you are determined to preserve it, for we will not be obliged to keep or return it. And this writing with lead pencil or pale ink is an outrage on the editor and compositors.

The motto of the Advance is good, viz., "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before." Do not shrink from your motto, brother Advance, and we may expect glorious things from your birth in these days of peril. May the great Head of the church be your LIGHT, as he is the only LIFE-GIVER for dying mortals of Adam's race. Say unto the people "Go forward;" and in the name of Israel's God lead them out of Egypt, even if you have to pass through the Red Sea of bigotry, superstition and Romish rags, which have so long been the curse of Protestantism, and a dishonor to pure Christianity. Let the true character of God and his government stand out in Bible simplicity, and no longer be polluted by the traditions of men, and the superstitions of heathenism. In such a course The Advance would magnify its office and be worthy of its name.

Poetry.

IMAGINARY EVILS.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

Let to-morrow take care of to-morrow;
Leave things of the future to fate,
What's the use to anticipate sorrow,
Life's troubles come never too late.
If to hope over much be an error,
'Tis one that the wise have preferred;
And often have hearts been in terror
Of evils that never occurred!

Have faith—and thy faith shall sustain thee—
Permit not suspicion and care
With invisible bonds to enchain thee,
But bear what God gives thee to bear,
By his spirit supported and gladdened,
Be ne'er by forboding deterred,
But think of how hearts have been saddened
By fear of what never occurred!

Let to-morrow take care of to-morrow;
Short and dark our lives may appear,
We may make it still darker by sorrow,
Still shorter by folly and fear!
Half our troubles are half our invention:
And often from blessings conferred
Have we shrunk in the wild apprehension
Of evils—that never occurred!

Children's Department.

AN ICELAND ADVENTURE.

It was the beginning of January in Iceland. The old wooden clock on the wall had just struck two in the afternoon, and yet it was as dark as midnight. The old pastor's family were gathered around their warm fire, and one after another of his friendly neighbors stepped in to make a few hours' call. Three lamps, filled with whale-oil, were on the table, and you may be sure that the odor from them was not the pleasantest imaginable.

Among the young parishioners of the old pastor who called that evening, there was a bold sailor named Floko. He was a young man not over twenty-five years of age, and yet he had a number of times made the difficult journey to Spitzbergen and the coast of Greenland, though he had generally been in the company of his father, old Gundebrand, who had been in the habit of carrying on the whale-fishery on a small scale. The conversation in the old pastor's family turned on different subjects that evening. But it was observed that Floko, who was usually very cheerful and lively, was unusually sad. It occurred to the old pastor at a certain time in the evening, to ask Floko what was the cause of his unusual silence.

"It is just one year ago to-day since my father went off to Greenland on a new fishing expedition," said Floko. "He was to be back in four months' time, but he has neither returned, nor have any of us heard from him, and I have reason to fear that he is lost. He went in company with the little colony which left here at the same time, and we have heard of disasters having befallen some members of the colony. My father was too old to go and would not listen to my persuasion to stay at home. I fear I shall never see him again."

Of course these remarks of Floko cast a gloom upon the company, but it is not probable that he would have made them at that time if the old pastor had not asked him the cause of his trouble. The old clock struck eight, and the company separated, each one to his own home. It was very cold out of doors, as you can well imagine, and every time the door was opened it chilled the room in a moment.

The Summer following this little gathering at the old pastor's, there was a sudden alarm on the coast just where he lived. The cry was: "The icebergs with the bears!"

Almost every summer when the ice up about the North Pole breaks up, there are multitudes of polar bears which have become almost starved from having so little to eat during the long, cold Winter. Of course they live on the ice a great deal, and as soon as the ice is broken up a great many of them are carried off with it; and as they are so very hungry, some of them would about as lief float along the ocean as to stay in Greenland and starve. Sometimes these icebergs or rather great ice cakes, float to Iceland, and if any bears happen to be on them at that time, a great excitement takes place as soon as they are seen, for the bears no sooner reach land than they play havoc with everything they can find. At the time that I am now speaking of, there was a large cake of ice floating toward the Iceland shore, and it was plain to everybody that there was something on top of it that moved. It was only one object, and yet as the report went from one to another that the bears were coming, the number greatly increased; so the number of bears was supposed to be from seventy-five to a hundred.

The village gathered together their harpoons and muskets, and all kinds of iron instruments they could find, and came down toward the shore to meet the bears, for they knew that if the bears ran wild many persons would be killed by them.

The people stood on the shore in anxious expectation, yet no one could see more than one object. The nearer the great ice-cake floated toward the shore the clearer that object became; and, behold! instead of a bear, it was a man! When it struck the shore the man rose up, and threw the bear skins off that were round him and said—though he was too cold to speak almost anything—"The happiest hour of my life."

Fortunately, Floko was one of the company who had gone down to meet the bears, and what was his surprise to see that the man was none other than his own father, Gundebrand. It is not possible to imagine the great surprise of the villagers and the hearty reception that the old man met with. The people actually took off their own furs and heavy coats and threw them around him, and bore him in their arms to the nearest dwelling.

Poor old Gundebrand wept like a child, so glad was he to get home once more. It was several weeks before he fully recovered from the dangerous voyage he had made; for he had come on that great cake of ice all the way from Greenland to Iceland. There was the greatest excitement in the village, and, indeed, all over Iceland, at his return, and particularly after he related his marvellous adventures. The old pastor appointed a special meeting in the little chapel, when prayer was to be offered that Gundebrand had returned, and the old man was to state his experience publicly.

The hour arrived for service. Everybody came from far and near, and after thanks were returned by the congregation for the remarkable preservation of Gundebrand, the old man was invited to begin his remarks. I will not attempt to tell you all that he said. Many people would have doubted the words of some persons, but they could not doubt his word, for he had never been known to tell a falsehood. He told how he, together with the little colony, reached the coast of Greenland in safety. The Winter came on much sooner than usual, and their boats were caught in the ice. "One thing after another seemed to be against us," said he. "During the time when our boats were frozen in, and we occupied little huts along the shore, a most violent storm arose and tore away our tents and little houses, and destroyed the whole village where we were. Some people were killed, and those that were left were well-nigh frozen to death, because all our heavy furs were taken off by the blast, and we never saw them again; and, together with our furs, our provisions were also taken. We scarcely had anything left, and, indeed, the whole village was threatened with starvation.

"I do not know how we passed through that Winter. It is impossible for me to describe its terrors. We sometimes had a little whale-meat, which was very old, and before our troubles came on, was not considered fit to eat. Many of the colony have died, but some are still living. I confess that I would have preferred at any time to die instead of live, so great was my suffering. One day as the pleasant weather came on again, I went out to see my little boat that was frozen in through the Winter, and while examing it to see if it was in good condition, behold! two polar bears made their appearance and started after me on the ice. Fortunately, I had my musket with me, but one musket was hardly enough for two bears. You know the little dog that used to follow me always? Well, that little dog was with me at the time, and he fell a victim to the starving bears. It seemed to me that death was right before me; and I suppose that if I had not been used to running on the ice very well, or if the bears had not seen something else that attracted their attention, I would have been devoured by them. But a kind Providence preserved me, though I ran far out on the ice to get clear of them.

"Now, as I was away out beyond my boat, I heard the ice cracking, and then I felt my great danger. If it cracked where I was I knew that I would have to go down into the cold water; and then if it broke up and separated, it would prevent me getting to my boat or getting ashore. To add to my great trouble, the ice broke near where I was, and the great cake on which I stood separated from the rest and floated off. Then I knew that it was impossible for me to reach the land again. What to do I did not know. I had no provision with me, no boat, no friend, and not even my little dog. I prayed to the Lord that if it was his will, I might yet be rescued; but it seemed to me really impossible. I was glad to find out that there were some very thick places in the cake of ice on which I was then floating, for there were mounds here and there, or rather little hills, which indicated depth; and of course I kept near to, or on, one of the highest of these, fearing the ice might break again. By and by hunger came on, as you can well imagine, but even in this respect the Lord took care of me. I found a great many fishes frozen into the ice, and I also found birds here and there that had fallen dead by the cold Winter, and had lain there ever since. On these I have lived through my perilous voyage; and if it had not been for the pleasant sun that I have had during the time, I would certainly have frozen to death."

The account which old Gundebrand now concluded excited the sympathy of the people who listened to him, so that they all wept with him, and said that they had never heard of an experience like that. I will tell you one or two words that the old pastor said when he rose to speak after old Gundebrand had finished:

"Some people may call this chance, and others may call it the perseverance of our old friend Gundebrand, but I call it the preserving care of our Heavenly Father, who knoweth as well how to preserve amid the dangers of a polar winter as to make the sun shine warm in the tropic regions. I trust that all of you will take this experience home to yourselves, and remember that just as an old whale-fisher was cared for by God and his life preserved, and himself sent here to his friends, so are you all the daily objects of God's care; and the preservation of your lives through a single day or a single hour is just as much an evidence of the goodness and the care of Him who numbers the hairs of our heads, as our aged friend Gundebrand, who speaks to us to-day as one raised from the dead."

The choicest pleasures of life lie within the range of moderation.

D.'s Answer to Judge Halsted's Reply.

Questioning motives is unjust and unreasonable in such a discussion as this between the judge and myself; and, therefore, at this threshold of my remarks, I affirm that several sentences in Judge H.'s reply were unjust and unreasonable, as they questioned the motives of both myself and the professor of modern languages whose written affidavit I adduced as part of my argument on the Italian preposition.

Judge Halsted insinuates that "D. was quite sure he was appealing to orthodoxy in appealing to this professor: and that the professor would do his best to help him defend the Romish and yet widely-received Protestant theory—the orthodox devil and devils;" or, in plainer terms, insinuates that the professor of modern languages would be so prejudiced for D.'s view of the matter as to stultify himself and give an unjustifiable verdict on certain Italian words. Again it is insinuated that the professor is controlled by theological motives in affirming as he did respecting Italian words, for the judge says: "Why not professor? Is not your head devil, a devil?" . . . . "And would the professor keep his head devil without any imps—little devils—to help him do his work?" . . . . "But if the professor prefers that we should not include the devil in the plural, the devils, we will now," etc., etc., etc. Again, I say, I object to such methods of arguing. The professor did not come on the stand to testify as to his theology, but as to philology; and the judge has no right to presume to know the professor's theology. He has no right to question my witness on this point.

But, foreseeing that the judge might use such argumentations (and impeach the reliability of my witness by saying, "What will not an orthodox professor do to help out an orthodox minister?") I purposely obtained the written statement—of whom? Of one whom the judge would call orthodox, or biassed in favor of orthodoxy? No! but of one who has been a Second Adventist for about thirty years, who believes in the annihilation of the wicked, that there is no hell, etc., etc., and, so far as I know, believed exactly with Judge Halsted on the subject of a personal devil. If then, the professor of modern languages stands theologically on the judge's platform and would naturally be prejudiced to favor the judge's view, if prejudiced at all, ought not his entire acquaintance with the Italian language, amounting almost to mastery, to offset the judge's knowledge of that language (which is but partial, judging from the mistakes he makes in his article, some of which I shall note), and ought not his affidavit to stand firm even against the assaults of the judge's plausible derivation? So it seems to me. I hope the remainder of this discussion will be conducted fairly, and without impeachment of motives, and that we shall both (the judge and myself) be candid, and, as the Italian maxim has it, aim "Avere il cuore in bocca," "to have the heart in the mouth."

Allow me one more reference to the judge's reply, which I shall quote: "Does D. think that, if there is no such being as a personal devil, he could get the word devil in any better way? [This question I will answer at large, further on.] Does his uneasiness arise from the way in which we get devil, or from his notion that there is really such a being as his devil, and his unwillingness to have his notions disproved? . . . . Why not go to the real question involved, and attempt to show that the Bible teaches a personal devil?" Here, I ask, what matters all this to the question at issue—the derivation of the word devil "from the Italian de and the English word evil?" I see no connection. My private theological views are not in question, and do not affect my knowledge of the Italian, which knowledge may or may not be equal to the judge's, and in his judgment is not, for he says of me: "an unskilled handler of edge tools is apt to get his fingers cut." He refers to my lapsus pennæ in giving del, dello and dell' as the genitive of the article il. But the judge's hands are badly gashed (if my fingers are cut), for, in the second column of his last reply he gives "i and gli as the nominative and accusative plural of il; also ai, a' and agli as the dative plural of il; also dei, de' and degli as the genitive plural of il;" whereas a mere beginner, a novice in Italian should know that gli, degli and agli are not plurals of il, but of lo. And my error did not run through six or seven lines as does the judge's.

But now to the judge's reply, with respect to the argument:

I. The judge says: "We take up D.'s statement that de is not an Italian preposition, and we begin by citing a few verses which, taken together, decline the Italian article il—the. They will give us some instruction beside." Why go to all this length of four columns? The judge appears to cite those passages more for the supposed "instruction" than the exhibition of the method of declining the article il, else the exhibition spoken of could have been greatly condensed. In the citations given, the judge makes del from de il (which the professor told him could not be done) because al is, as he supposes, from a il, and dal from da il, and degli from de gli, dell' from de la. To give these citations, with their "instructions," his honor occupies over four columns of space. But what value have his quotations if del is not from de il (notwithstanding all his constantly-repeated declarations), but from di il? Let us see!

On page 210 of Ollendorff's Italian Method we read: "The rapidity of pronouncing has led to a contraction of the definite article with certain prepositions which precede it; thus pel is used instead of per il, etc. According to this contraction we say and write:

Singular.	Plural.
Del, of the, for di il.	Dei, or de', for di i.
Al, to the, for a il.	Ai, or a', for a i.
Nel, in the, for in il.	Nei, or ne', for in i.
Col, with the, for con il.	Coi, or co', for con i.

Singular.	Plural.
Dello, for di lo.	Degli, for di gli.
Allo, for a lo.	Agli, for a gli.

Also on page 279 we find given della for di la, nella for in la, delle for di le, nelle for in le. Let the reader note that Ollendorff here gives del for di il, not for de il, gives dei for di i, not de i, gives dello for di lo, not de lo, gives degli for di gli, not de gli. Notice further that nel is for in il, not en il, or ne il, also that negli is for in gli, not en gli, or ne gli etc. The reader will therefore see that del is not a word compounded of de il, as the judge assumes from the beginning, but a word meaning of or of the, changed by the process of contraction from di il to del. And on page 21 of Fontana's Italian Grammar we read: "The prepositions most commonly joined to the articles are di, of, da, from, in, in. And then the examples are given, as I have shown above, that del, dello, della, dei, degli, delle are written for di il, di lo, di la, di i, di gli, di le. If the judge asks me why di il should give del and not dil, I answer, why should in il give nel and not nil? But he knows that as nel is for in il, so is del for di il. This being the case, the citations above mentioned are valueless, for they would show, not (as he desires) that del is for de il, but for di il, and his argument falls, ex necessitate. I pass to my

II. Point. But the judge has said, "does D. think that, if there is no such being as a personal devil, he could get the word devil in any better way? I emphatically reply, Yes sir—there is a better way, consonant with the just principles of logic, etymology, and an unshackled common sense. I proceed to give the "better way" desired, touching, however, on the judge's derivation as I progress.

If devil be compounded of the Italian (?) de and the English word evil, this composition must have been done centuries ago, away back in the Anglo-Saxon days, and by some one who understood both Italian and English. But in those good old days this word was spelled, indiscriminately, diafol, deofol, deoful, deofl, divell, devill, etc., as the judge will see by examining Richardson's great English Dictionary in two volumes, or by referring to any Anglo-Saxon Dictionary (for instance J. Bosworth's "Compendious Anglo-Saxon and English Dictionary, London, 1860," or L. Ettmueller's "Lexicon Anglo-Saxon cum Synopsi Grammatica.") The language was not then settled with regard to its orthography, since there were eight clans or divisions of the Anglo-Saxons in Britain.

But look at this matter a moment! If the word was compounded as the judge intimates, it must have been made of the Italian (?) de and the Anglo-Saxon word then used for what we now spell—evil, or, as the word was indiscriminately spelled, efel, yfel, hyfel. The compound form would be then de efel, de yfel, or de hyfel, changing in process of time to divell and to devil. Therefore we are come to this that some Anglo-Saxon man invented the Anglo-Saxon mongrel word "devill" (which, in my last article I quoted from Richardson's Dictionary) from the Italian (?) de, of, and Anglo-Saxon word efel, or yfel, or hyfel, (meaning evil) while at the same time, there were many similar forms of spelling the same word then in use, as I have said before, when I gave them above. Who believes that de and efel were compounded, by some early linguistic Angle or Saxon to make a word expressive of a thought which was even then expressed, in their own natural and generally spoken tongue, by diafol, deofl, etc.? Look at the question in another light. The German for devil is teuful, and the Dutch duivel, which is nearly related to the Anglo-Saxon deoful, or Danish diævel. What need is there of going to the formation of a mongrel word, when all the sister languages have the word devil in a form of spelling exactly cognate to the one which our learned friend would make? When all the sister languages were affluent in words expressing devil, was the Anglo-Saxon mother-tongue of Britain so poor as to be compelled to run away down to Italy for a monosyllable and then tie it on to the commencement of evil, to make a new word—devil? I cannot believe this. And, under the circumstances of the case, no lexicologist would trust to such a derivation when one far more natural and simple could be obtained from cognate languages, spoken at the time when this mongrel word is said to have been manufactured. Your honor: Is not my way a "better way?"

III. It might be right and just for me to retort upon the judge by asking a question (similar to the one asked by him) viz., Does the judge acknowledge that if his derivation be not just, and therefore non-admissible his idea contained in the word devil, namely of evil, falls away, and his arguments thereupon remain untenable? Does his uneasiness at our questioning of his derivation arise from the fact that, if our derivation be acknowledged, the idea of a personal devil must consequently be correct? I simply say, these questions might be retorted on his honor, the judge, but I forbear to press them, and have filed my objection to such illegal modes of assaulting an opponent.

My answer to the judge's reply is already longer than I intended it should be, and I forbear tresspassing further on your columns, hoping that the judge has light now, will have more light to-morrow, and further light in time to come. D.

That Blessed Hope.

"Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ."—Titus ii., 13.

Why is it called "that blessed hope?"

Because it is a well-spring of consolation and joy to the church during the absence of her Lord.

Says Dr. Hodge: "The second advent of Christ was the object of longing expectation to all the early Christians. So general was this expectation that Christians were characterized as those 'who love his appearing.' If the second coming of Christ is to Christians now less an object of desire, is it not because they think the Lord 'slack concerning his promises'?"

Mr. Barnes says: "The earnest expectation of the coming of the Lord Jesus became one of the marks of early Christian piety."

Says Baxter: "Would it not rejoice your heart if you were to see the coming of the Lord, and to see his glorious appearing and return? If you were not to die, but to be caught up thus to meet the Lord . . . would it not be the greatest joy that you could desire? . . . The thoughts of the coming of the Lord are most sweet and joyful to me; so that if I were but sure that I should live to see it, it would be the joyfullest tidings to me in the world! Oh! that I might see his kingdom come!"

Says Henry, on Revelation xxii., 20: "This is Christ's farewell to his church, and the church's hearty echo to Christ's promise, 'Come Lord Jesus.' Thus beats the pulse of the church—thus breathes that gracious spirit which actuates and informs the mystical body of Christ, and we should never be satisfied till we find such a spirit breathing in us and causing us to look for that blessed hope. What comes from heaven in a promise should be sent back to heaven in a prayer."

"The bright appearing of the Lord" is the theme of many of our most precious hymns.

Says the seraphic Rutherford: "Oh! when will we meet! Oh! how long is it to the dawning of the marriage day! O sweet Jesus, take wide steps! O my Lord, come over the mountains at one stride! Oh! if he would fold the heavens together like an old cloak, and shovel time and days out of the way, and make ready in haste the Lamb's wife for her husband! O heavens, move fast! O time, run, and hasten the marriage day, for love is tormented with delays!"

Ought not every pious heart likewise to long for this glorious appearing, when

Hope shall change to glad fruition,
Faith to sight and prayer to praise?

Great prominence is given to this theme everywhere in the New Testament. The Redeemer's second appearing is held forth as the very polar star of the church. "As once he hath appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself, to them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

The grace of the first advent is received by faith, and the glory of the second is apprehended by hope: thus, in the cross and the crown the believer finds all his salvation and all his desires.—Rev. E. P. Marvin in the American Pulpit.

What Is Thought?

We are often amused at the strange views entertained by many relative to thought. Those who hold that man is only "a house" to hold a thinking, spiritual being, get some very strange theories, and arrive at some very strange conclusions, very far removed from physiological facts and true mental phenomena. Without spending time to combat what we conceive to be wild errors, we will give a direct answer to the question at the head of this article: Thought, in no man, and all the animal creation, is the result of an active brain. Thought is no more a component part of man than is love, hatred or pain; and when the brain stops acting, as in sound sleep, and still more perfectly in death, then there is no thought, or any sensation of joy, love, pain, or any other emotion.

We are sometimes asked, "Is thought a property of matter? We would answer this question by asking another, Is pain a property of matter? We answer just as truly so as is thought; but neither thought or pain are essential properties of matter, but are peculiar properties existing in certain kinds of organized bodies, possessing flesh and blood. Our Creator has so organized animal matter that it can feel pain, love, hate, remember, and think. This is true of men and animals. No one can dispute but that animals think, feel pain, love, and remember. If the brain is the organ of thought, then, when it is deficient, as in the idiot, the thoughts will be correspondingly wanting; or when undeveloped, as in the infant, then thought will be weak. If the brain is the organ of thought, then the more fully the brain of an animal resembles that of a man, the nearer it will approach to man in intelligence. Facts sustain this position. If the brain is the organ of thought, then, when that organ is deranged, there will be corresponding mental derangement, which we know is the case. Thus all facts go to demonstrate that the brain is the organ of thought. This being true, how can man think when the brain is dead and in the grave? It would be as reasonable to say a man can run with his legs cut off. The Bible is in harmony with the foregoing facts; for it declares that "the dead know not anything."

When will men be willing to turn from mysticism to the simplicity of truth? It seems strange that any one should ever believe the lie of Satan, which teaches us that a dead man knows more than a living one. We think no doctrine can be more absurd, or contrary to all true philosophy and sound reason, or opposed to the plain teaching of the Bible. Thank the Lord, many devoted Christians now see the truth clearly, and are rejoicing in the light.—Crisis.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be prepaid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

THE GOSPEL HOPE.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

"BE ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and reverence." 1 Peter iii., 15.

The exercise of hope is common to man. It is well understood to be made up of desire and expectation. Neither of these alone constitute hope. The first without the last would be despair; and the last without the first would be aversion. The two must be combined to form hope. The principle is well defined in the minds of men in relation to the ordinary affairs of life; and the man who should tell us he hoped to possess ten thousand dollars on the morrow, we would conclude had not only a desire for that sum, but a reason for his expectation; and if he had none, or no good reason for it, we should not hesitate to say he is a fanatic or a fool. Why should we expect less in matters of religion? Men say they hope to be saved, they hope to go to heaven when they die, etc., that is, they desire and expect to go to heaven when they die.

Now, we ask such a reason of the hope that is in them? A good reason must be based, first, on a promise of God. If there is no promise of such a remove at death, then the expectation of it is without foundation, and the exercise of mind is presumption, and not the gospel hope. The promise of such a remove at death must not be a matter of mere inference or conjecture; it must have a "Thus saith the Lord." God does not leave his creatures to mere conjecture, or the traditions of men, in matters which relate to blessings he designs for them: he gives the most plain and positive assurances or promises. Thus the apostle speaks, Heb. vi., 17, "Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath: that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us."

Here we see, for the existence and stability of hope, God does not leave us without a certain and definite promise. Hence, if we have a hope of entering heaven at death, we shall be able to fix on a clear promise of God to that effect; else we have no well-grounded expectation of such an event, and our hope is baseless. Where is such a promise? With meekness produce it, and let us have the reason of such a hope. We do not ask you for the traditions of men on the subject, but for a Bible promise. Will you give it? You are bound by the gospel to do it if you can. Can you produce such a promise? If so, where is it? We wait for an answer. But, alas, we wait in vain. No such promise is found in the Bible. The notion stands in the wisdom and traditions of men, not in the truth and power of God. If we are correct, then the hope of going to heaven at death is not only a "good hope;" there is no gospel reason for it: it is a fancy—yea, it is presumption.

The gospel hope, then, is quite another matter from the hope of a large part of the professedly Christian church. The gospel hope is that of eternal life through and by a resurrection from the dead, and not of an entrance into heaven when we die. For this hope we have clear promises in the Bible.

What are the promises? We will give you a few examples. Luke xiv., 14. The Saviour had commanded concerning feasts not to call the rich, etc., lest a recompense be made thee; but call the poor, etc., and "thou shalt be blessed, for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed [when you die? No, but] at the resurrection of the just." Here is a clear promise of the time when the reward of well doing is to be bestowed; and it is as wide of the common notion as the resurrection day differs from the day of death. That we do not mistake in this matter, we turn to John vi. In this chapter, four times our Lord states the time when, and the means by which, his followers are to receive their reward; and we ask if it looks like a promise of going to heaven at death? See verses 39, 40, 44 and 54. "This is the Father's will, which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the last day." Here is no intimation of going to heaven at death, but there is a clear intimation that without a resurrection from the dead Christ's followers would be lost. Yet, as it is the Father's will that they shall not be lost, he has given to his Son power and authority to raise them from the dead at a stated period of time, viz., "at the last day." In the next verse he is still more definite as to what he raises them up for. "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." "Does Jesus say, I will reunite his soul and body again in the last day? No. "I will raise him up." What does him signify? Is it his body? Him is that man; not that man's body merely. He is raised up, and is at the last day, and for the purpose of giving him that which the Father hath willed, viz., Everlasting Life.

That our Lord's followers thus understood the matter is evident in the discourse of Martha with him, John xi.: "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died," said Martha, verse 21. "Jesus said unto her, [thy brother has gone to heaven? No, but] thy brother shall rise again." "Martha said unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Such was her faith, and such her hope; and such is the hope of the gospel. Remember, Jesus had declared "Lazarus is dead." But he does not flatter with the fallacious hope that he had gone to heaven, but he does comfort with the true hope—The Resurrection.

Another case in point is the question of Peter, Matt. xix., 27, "Peter said unto him, Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee; what shall we have, therefore?" Here is a plain question about the reward to be hoped for. Does our Lord say, Ye shall go to heaven when ye die? No such thing. How unlike the theology of this age is his answer. Mark it well. "Verily, I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." From Matt. xxv. 31, we learn when Christ will sit in the throne of his glory. "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." It is not till his return from heaven; his promise to Peter and the other apostles was not of heaven in an intermediate period, but looked down to the time of his return from heaven. This point is clear; but we shall have occasion to insist upon it more fully as we proceed.

We have glanced at some of the promises, and see that none of them look like an assurance of a reward prior to the resurrection. We will now examine the type and see if that is not as clearly against the idea of any man entering into heaven till Christ returns. To understand this part of the subject the type and antitype are to be taken in connection. We shall hence notice the law of the holy of holies, and the high priest's entrance therein, with Paul's remarks on the subject in Hebrews.

In Leviticus xvi. we have the law referred to which relates to the offering of the high priest, first for himself and then for the people. In the holy of holies was the mercy seat and the Shekinal glory, or symbol of the presence of God. It was there the blood of the slain victim was to be carried by the high priest and sprinkled upon the mercy seat, and before the mercy seat to make an atonement. Now mark verse xvii., "There shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he [the high priest] goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out," etc. So sacredly was the holy of holies guarded by the law that even the two hundred and fifty Levites, connected with Korah, claiming that "all the congregation were holy," when they approached the door of the tabernacle, to intrude into the holy place, there came out a fire from the Lord and consumed them: see Numbers xvi. The people of Israel generally were prohibited, on pain of death, coming nigh the tabernacle: see Numbers xviii., 22. But the main point to which we call attention is the fact, no man was permitted to enter the holy of holies while the high priest was therein, nor until he came out. Now, if we find this is truly a type, we may learn that it is no small sin to attempt to enter heaven before Christ the High Priest comes out. We now turn to Heb. viii., 1, "We have a high priest who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens; a minister of the sanctuary—agion—holy—and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man. For every high priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer. For if he were on earth he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer gifts according to the law: who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle, for see, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed thee in the mount."

Here we learn the fact that the Mosaic tabernacle was but the type of the true, and we may also learn that the Aaronic high priesthood was a type of that of Jesus; for, saith Paul, ch. ix., 11–12, "Christ being come a high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands; that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption." He adds, verses 23, 24, after having spoken of the Aaronic offering, "It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these. For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us."

Thus have we a clear statement of facts, and find the antitype of the entrance of the Aaronic high priest into the holy of holies. Christ has entered the true holy of holies, even heaven itself, and no man is to be permitted to enter there till he comes out: the attempt of itself is sin, though it may be it has been the sin of ignorance; of that God only is judge. We fear it is the result, in many, of wilful ignorance. Christ is gone into the holy of holies; are we to seek to enter there? If we do, it is at our peril. What shall we do? Do as did the people of Israel when their high priest was in the holy place. They waited without, watching and praying till he came out. Thus Paul, in closing Heb. ix., says: "Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

This is a clear reference to the work of the high priest under the law. With the blood of the offering for sin he went into the holy place, and sprinkled it upon and before the mercy seat while the people prayed, confessed their sins, and waited, looking for the high priest to come out. So Christ has gone into the true holy place, even heaven itself, and there appears in the presence of God with his own blood: and to those who acknowledge him as their high priest, confess their sins, watch and pray and look for him to come out, he will appear in due time from heaven, for their salvation.

How blasphemous and presumptuous to attempt to enter the holy place, heaven, while our High Priest is there. May Christian men be made aware of such presumption, and cease to talk and act in such an unscriptural manner. They may flatter themselves that it is very innocent to teach and talk about going to heaven at death; yet we venture the affirmation that it is not only sinful to do so, but tends to subvert the gospel hope by substituting another and entirely different hope, and hence is "another gospel" than that which Christ and his apostles preached. This we are aware is a heavy charge; yet we believe we have fully sustained it, but shall now proceed to confirm and strengthen it.

[To be concluded next week.]

THE SOVEREIGNTY OF JEHOVAH.

IT has ever been the lot of truth, like the Lord of it, to be crucified between right-hand and left-hand thieves. The enemies of truth, on all hands, are various. While some say the Bible is a legend of lies, and others that faith in Christ is a fable: there are others who tell us they have Christ, and are one with Christ, and yet with audacious effrontery cry down the ordinances of the gospel, and consider the means of grace as too burdensome for a free-born conscience, and too low and carnal for self-righteous man. There is as much beyond the truth, as on this side thereof; as much in out-running the flock of Christ, and the Lamb that leads them, as in straggling and loitering behind.

The doctrine of God's sovereignty as evidenced in his eternal decree of unconditional election, will not relish with those who have anything of their own. It will not do for those who eat their own bread, wear their own apparel, and who, because religion in this day walks in silver slippers, yea, more, in golden sandals, find it convenient to make an outward profession of Jesus—saying, "only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach." Isa. iv., 1. Free will and free grace are very opposites. "Not unto us, oh! Lord, not unto us, but to thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake." Psa. cxv., 1. When such language as this proceeds from the heart, it is the humble lispings forth of what can only be learned in the school of Christ under the precious teachings of the Holy Spirit.

I know that the sovereignty of Jehovah; the free love of God in the choice of the church in Christ Jesus—His divine pre-destination, as exemplified in election and reprobation—I know by experience, that a state of these glorious truths, cannot fail to draw forth the latent rancour of the unregenerate mind. Be it so. I join issue with the apostle, and say "Yea:" It is truth. "Yea, let God be true, but every man a liar." Rom. iii., 4. The God of creation and of providence is manifestly a perfectly sovereign God—nothing external can either restrain or influence him. In all his conduct he is guided solely by his own perfections. He owes nothing to his creatures—but as it is due to himself. Their rights are the mere results of his own character. He is accountable to no being; for all things are accountable to him. There are many things which we may say he cannot do; but he cannot, because he will not. He cannot do anything inconsistent with the perfections of his own character. This is what the Scriptures mean when they say that he cannot deny himself. He cannot unjustly punish his creatures, because this would deny himself. In such an event he would cease to be what he is. It is as impossible then for God to punish unjustly as it is for him to cease to exist.

As respects his sovereignty and his perfect property in his creatures, he has an absolute right to do as he pleases. The mercy of the gospel is free mercy. It is pure mercy, without any view to merit, either before its reception or afterward. Before it is received, there is nothing but sin in him who is to receive it. There is nothing to even qualify him for grace, more than there is in those from whom it is withheld. After it is received, it makes a change in the life and heart of the receiver; but this, instead of being re-payment of debt, is an additional obligation. Our good works are of God, as well as our faith. The mercy which God bestows is wholly without money and without price. Now this is a kind of mercy, of which human science knows nothing. It is disliked by the wise, and by the foolish, by the learned and by the unlearned, by the virtuous and vicious, by the infidel and by the bigot, by the scoffer and by the devotee. Men naturally wish that kind of mercy in God, that will combine with a portion of human merit, more or less, according to their respective necessities. The most profligate are not willing to be deprived of all ground for boasting. They are willing to have eternal life at a low price, but not if it is offered gratis.

In the reading of the Scriptures nothing strikes the mind more forcibly than the sovereignty of the Jehovah. The ways of God are to deep for us; we cannot fathom them. Psa. cxxxix., 6. The Book of God is everywhere stamped with the seal of sovereignty. This is the more striking, as there is nothing more displeasing to the mind of man. The fanatic is still bolder than the philosopher in blaspheming this attribute; and the sanctified raver, with the boldness of an infuriated demon, will dare to denounce as an Almtghty tyrant, the Lord God, who reveals himself the sovereign Jehovah. There is no degree of force which audacious man will not employ, to banish sovereignty from the Scriptures. It strikes continually at the pride of man. God sends the message of mercy in such a way that many cry out that they would rather expose themselves to his wrath, than receive such a forgiveness.

The sovereignty of God is seen in the substitution of Christ to bear the curse of the law in the room of his people—not of unbelievers. Isa. liii., 5–8. John i., 29. Gal. iii., 13. Gal. iv., 4, 5. 1 Peter ii., 24, 25, etc. Sin is often represented in Scripture as debt. The representation is true, but it does not give the full character of sin. Sin must be viewed as crime, as well as debt. In the payment of debt, justice can make no difference, whether it comes from the debter, or from any one who is willing to advance it. Justice cannot refuse to accept payment from any substitute. But it is not so with crime. The Sheriff could not execute another who should present himself in the room of the prisoner. An absolute sovereign might, in his sovereignty, accept such substitution. God, then, in accepting the substitution of Christ, acts in sovereignty, and provides what the law has not provided. The law under which man was made knows nothing of fulfilment by substitution. The acceptance of Christ, as our substitute, is in sovereignty. "This," says God "is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Here is a declaration of the Father's acceptance of the Son, in the room of the guilty. There is sovereignty not only in God's choice of his people—there is sovereignty also in his conduct toward them. Even to them he gives no account of his matters. One he places in affluence, another in poverty: to one he gives much knowledge, to others very little; to some he gives health, others have scarcely a day free from pain. They all have troubles, but some have troubles beyond others. Sometimes he continues the least distinguished of them to the utmost term of human life, while the most talented are cut off in the midst of a glorious career of usefulness. In ten thousand ways the Lord shows his dealings with his people to be in sovereignty, as well as mercy. They must not presume to question his comparative treatment of them. That he does all things well, they must believe on his own testimony.

Men foolishly assert that "none of the human race, as far as they know, except Jesus Christ, is yet elected to eternal life"—that is entirely another matter, and depends entirely upon the fact whether we are found in Christ at his coming: for God "hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." I have quoted the foregoing from a recent writing upon the subject of election. I would ask if God elected only the head, and not the body of Christ, from before the foundation of the world? "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us" (who are meant by "us" but believers; in fact shall we dare assert that Paul is writing to any other than the church—the body of Christ?) "with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ; according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by or in Jesus Christ to himself," (on what principle of action?) "ACCORDING TO THE GOOD PLEASURE OF HIS WILL." Ephes. i., 3–5. Has Paul made a mistake? He seems to overlook man's will and substitute God's!

Let us look at John 1. "He came unto his own," (people in the flesh) "and his own" (Jewish) "received him not"—"that which is born of the flesh in flesh"—"but as many as received him" (spiritually—intelligently—discerningly) "to them gave he power to become the sons of God—which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, BUT OF GOD." "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Where is the will of man? It seems that power from above is needed to discern spiritually. 1 Cor. ii., 14, 15. Let us hear our Lord himself—the glorious head of the mystic body—who says in John vi., 37—"All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out"—44th verse—"NO MAN CAN COME to me, except the Father who hath sent me draw him, and I will raise HIM up at the last day." "It is written in the prophets—they shall be taught of God—Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of God, cometh unto me." Who will dare assert, in the fear of God, that election, which is choice—is not here unequivocally stated? But mark the result—as it is now, so it is then—many of the disciples went back, and walked no more with our dear Lord. See 65th and 66th verses.

To assert and preach the doctrine of election to eternal life of his people, by God, has ever been enough to stir up wrath and enmity in the carnal mind of man. Again, our Lord says in John x., 26. "Ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you; my sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me, and I GIVE UNTO THEM ETERNAL LIFE, AND THEY SHALL NEVER PERISH, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand. My Father who gave them me is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand." What blessed security for believers; safe in Christ. Who can read John xvii., and deny unconditionally eternal election? 2d verse—"As thou (the Father) hast given him (the Son) power over all flesh, that he (Christ) should give eternal life to as MANY as thou hast given him; and this is life eternal, that THEY MIGHT know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." Here most clearly is saving knowledge restricted to the election of grace: "for by grace (or favor) are ye saved, through faith—and that (the faith) not of yourselves (but the faith), is the gift of God." Ephes. ii., 8. In the 9th verse of John xvii., our Lord says, "I pray not for the world (of unbelievers) but for them whom thou hast given me"—23d verse—"that the world (of believers) may know that thou hast loved them, as thou hast loved me—and thou lovest ME BEFORE THE FOUNDATION of the world." Compare Matt. xx., 28. Matt. xxvi., 28. Mark x., 45, and Heb. ix., 28, and see the strict accord of Paul's understanding with our blessed Lord's assertions. Can any man read the 9th chapter of Romans, and then deny that eternal election flows from Jehovah's sovereignty? I could write column after column, without exausting the evidence, that establishes this heaven-born truth.

Jehovah's plan of salvation and work is truly divine and equal. 1 John v., 7. Our heavenly Father hath, of his own will begotten us, in his eternal decree. Jas. i., 18. The Father hath chosen from eternity—the Son hath redeemed all whom the Father hath chosen, and the Holy Spirit, proceeding from Father and Son, hath sanctified, and will sanctify, or set apart, through this truth, all whom the Son hath redeemed. How I adore the glory of God as manifested in Christ—and now THE BELIEVER is complete IN HIM. Col. ii., 10. For what purpose then is the preaching of the gospel? Clearly to make known to the elect of God their position in Christ, as the pure result of sovereign grace. Hence we preach to men "whosoever will let him drink of the water of life freely." But will men drink if they are not thirsty? Christ died to redeem or save HIS people from their sins, therefore his name was called Jesus. Matt. i., 21.

In the name of God, I write to oppose the demoniacal doctrines of free will and universalism. If Christ died for all, then all men will be saved, or else the efficacy and power of his blood is denied. Did space and time at the present permit I would refer to all such passages as are quoted to support belief in universal salvation. I will note one in Heb. ii., 9, where Jesus is said to taste death for every man: it is in the very next verse restricted "to MANY sons brought to glory," and in verse 11 "to sanctified ones." I am surprised that men who have for years preached and read the Bible, should not perceive that the word "world" is of various significations, and is often limited in its sense. So with the terms "all" and "every"—instead of indicating a universal affirmative, must be used distributively. To those who deny and oppose the Scriptural doctrine of unconditional election, I would say, beware—for ye oppose not men, but GOD, who doeth according to HIS OWN WILL in the army of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth." Dan. iv., 35. Rom. ix., 20. Some have thought that, "this subject of election was virtually dead;" but, blessed be God! it still lives, and will, until the Lord comes—notwithstanding these last days of peril to truth. I believe it, rejoice in it—and will preach it, whenever and wherever, the way is opened of God; and would add, "because the hand of Amalek, is against the throne of the Lord, therefore, the Lord hath sworn that the Lord will have war with Amalek, from generation to generation. Exod. xvii., 16. PERSECUTION.

IN a former article, I showed that, in the early part of our dispensation, when the church was located mainly in Asia, and also, that during the middle ages in Europe, God permitted sore and bloody persecution to fall upon it; and that this fact gives us reason to believe that the church in favored America, in these last days, may be left to taste the same cup of bitterness. And also, the fact that, while the church here has been blessed with light and knowledge beyond all precedent, and blessed—favored in every direction, as the church never was before, it has, at the same time, grown proud and worldly, and un-Christ-like as it never did before; compelling us to believe that nothing but the rod will ever bring her back again to her first love and works, so as to be in any fit condition to meet her returning Lord.

I do not, however, rely upon this evidence, but shall try to bring proof direct from the prophetic word to show that bloody persecution will yet be the lot of the people that do know their God."

Turning to Rev. 6th we find a description of the opening of the book that was sealed with seven seals, and the effects that followed the opening of each seal. Whatever the three first may symbolize, I think their need be no mistake as to the meaning of the fourth. "And when he had opened the fourth seal, ... I looked, and beheld a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was death, and hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth."

What can this symbolize but the great persecution under the papacy for near 1,260 years? I have never seen this idea disputed, and for myself I have no doubt of it, so I let that pass.

"And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held; and they cried with a loud voice, saying, how long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And, ... it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season until their fellow servants, also, and their brethren that should be killed as they were should be fulfilled."

When was this seal opened? I think there can be but one reliable answer to this question, and that is, at the end of the great persecution under the opening of the previous seal.

If we vary from this point, we are afloat on the sea of conjecture, and may place it any where we please during that tribulation, and this portion of the prophetic work becomes about as much like a "light in a dark place" as a Jack o'lantern, and about as worthy of being taken heed to. But let it stand as it evidently was designed to, and we have brought to view a great tribulation, in which a "fourth part of the earth" suffer death, at the close of which are seen under the altar the souls, as persons of those slain, who are represented as calling for vengeance on their murderers, and they are told that they must rest until their fellow servants, and brethren that should be killed AS THEY WERE should be fulfilled. Now, the question is, has this been fulfilled! If so, when, where! I know not, nor do I believe any one does. But, if not, it will be, and it cannot be a great while before it comes, and, for a little while, the demon of persecution will riot in the blood of God's faithful ones until this portion of the word of God is "fulfilled." Not that all will be killed, or all suffer alike; this has never been the case, but enough to accomplish the object for which these things have ever been permitted. It may be that we have nothing to do with anticipations about these things while living for our Lord and Master, and looking for his return: and it is very true that "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," and we are not, as Br. Storrs says, "to draw upon the future for evils or trials;" and yet, if this is a part in prophecy, it belongs to the church, and it ought to be regarded by her as a great blessing to be made acquainted with coming trials, so as to be fully prepared to meet them. In this way, it seems to me, only, can the same word of prophecy, to which we do well to take heed, be made to us as a light shining in a dark place.

JOHN V., 28, 29.

A GOOD deal is yet said about this passage, and it is quite difficult to satisfy thinking minds that it teaches the return to life of the righteous and not of the wicked. They say, "Why, it says, they that have done good come forth, and they that have done evil come forth, and in both cases to the resurrection; and if it means that one party were made alive, why not both?" And it does look like rather close work to make out that one class is made alive, and the other not. Br. Storrs, in his tract "The Doom of the Ungodly" makes the clearest case of it that I have seen, even more so than Judge Halsted; but, after all, it does lack that easy simplicity that characterizes almost every part of the teachings of our Saviour. I have been long since satisfied—perfectly so, as I wrote in the HERALD OF LIFE, that the whole matter, commencing with verse 24, is parabolic, in harmony with all his teachings to the Jews, for "without a parable spake he not unto them." Math. xiii., 34. Certainly, the condition of the dead in their graves—ignorance and darkness—is most strikingly illustrative of the condition of this world without the gospel of Christ. But when the voice of the Son of man in the gospel comes to men, at once their condition is changed: they come forth from that state of darkness and ignorance where they were, into the light of heavenly truth; they experience a moral resurrection. What is the result? He that believes "is passed from death to life" (see verse 24); while he that believes not is condemned (chap. iii., 18), not at the last day, but now, "already;" and here is a point I wish to press upon the attention of all. If the wicked were resurrected at the last day, it would not be a resurrection of damnation, or condemnation, but a resurrection of destruction—the execution; not the sentence. They are damned when they reject Christ in his gospel. The sentence is executed when our great LIFE-GIVER calls all his sleeping ones out of their graves, and gathers them to himself; while all the wicked dead, death, hell, and every other foe, are all submerged in the lake of fire together. The grand plan is stated in verse 24. Believing hearers of this word obtain such a certain hope of life that they are said to have already passed from death to life, or come forth to a resurrection of life. Verse 25 tells us that the plan was already in operation. The hour had now come when some did hear his voice, or word, and live. In verses 26, 27, he refers to his authority for acting and teaching as he did; and in verse 28 tells us that—not a few, as then, but all, should hear the same voice, or proclamation; and when he gave the commission to his disciples, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to EVERY CREATURE;" he prepared the way for its complete fulfilment, and the wonderful events of the day of Pentecost well nigh accomplished it, as Paul plainly intimates—"their sound went out into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world." Rom. x., 18, and Col. i., 23. To know what we are to understand by "they that have done good," and "they that have done evil," we have only to turn to the parable of the sower, Lk. viii., 15. They who possess "honest and good hearts," from which, as from a fountain, would flow good deeds—hear the word and understand it, and bring forth fruit while those possessed of evil hearts, being, of course, doers of evil, hear, but bear no fruit; and are condemned. So that, whatever others may think, I can see no literal resurrection of the dead in this passage, but only a graphic and striking illustration of the work of the gospel of Christ among men in this dispensation. Submitted in love.

PROSPERITY LIKE STREAMS OF WATER.—Prosperity is more hazardous to our spiritual interests than adversity. The former contents us without God; the latter makes us feel our need of him. The streams of goodness which flow around us are designed to lead us up to the Infinite Source; but, alas, the larger and more numerous these streams are, the less inclination have we to drink at the spring-head. Therefore it is that God so often reduces the size and number of these streams, or wholly dries them up. It is that we may draw from the original Fountain.

EVERY MAN LIKE A LEANING TREE.—"If the tree fall toward the south or toward the north, in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be." (Eccl. xi: 3.) There is a solemn meaning crouched under this metaphor. The tree will not only lie as it falls, it will also fall as it leans. And the great question which every one ought to bring home to his own bosom, without a moment's delay, is this, What is the inclination of my soul? Does it, with all its affections, lean toward God, or from him?—J. J. Gurney.

IS NOT THE POPE ANTICHRIST.—A correspondent of The Paris Union, writing from Rome, gives the following as the very words of Pio Nino in reply to the late address presented to him: "Alone, in spite of my unworthiness, I am the successor of the apostles, the Vicar of Jesus Christ. Alone I have the mission to direct the bark of Peter. I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Those that are with me, are with the church. Those who are not with me are out of the church, they are out of the Way, the Truth and the Life."

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 15, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"THE SOVEREIGNTY OF GOD."

THIS subject occupies a large space in the present number of our paper. Perhaps it is well to give it this one ventilation; but we have no idea that our readers, in general, will care to see the HERALD OF LIFE occupied to any considerable extent with the subject. Br. CHAMBERS has had his say, and Br. THORNE has calmly replied. Here the matter must rest for the present. Our great work is to "preach the gospel" in "all the world, to every creature." That is the "Sovereign's" command; and let all ministers "beware" that they do not restrict it, or charge the divine Redeemer with hypocrisy in it, nor impeach the Sovereign of the world as if he had sworn to an untruth when he said, "Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye from your evil ways, for why will ye die?"

No Christian calls in question the "Sovereignty of God." To call it in question, and utterly reject the interpretation put upon the action of that sovereignty by some sincere but mistaken interpreters of the Scriptures, is another matter. That interpretation we do reject, and shall continue to reject it as both unsound and opposed to a righteous judgment of the world by its CREATOR. Fifty years, and more, study of the Bible, will not be thrown away by us, to embrace the notion that for the larger part of the human family there is no such thing as even a possibility of eternal life; and that for the other part there is no possibility of a failure: and all this settled by "the sovereignty of God" before he created man. Let those believe it who can—we judge them not—but for ourself we reject it, and are satisfied that the warning of "Beware—for ye oppose not men, but God" is more appropriate for the other party to this controversy.

Free-grace and free-will are not "opposites" any more than free sunshine and free labor are opposites. There are blessings antecedent and blessings consequent. That is, there are blessings bestowed on men prior to anything they have done or can do. These are of free grace or favor. There are other blessings, the bestowment of which is conditional, and can only be possessed by free-will in action.

To illustrate. God has given the earth for vegetation, the rain to moisten it, and the sun to warm the soil. This is free grace: it did not depend on any will but his. Next appears man. God has freely given him a form, limbs, knowledge, etc., to cultivate the earth. Is he to have a crop without the exercise of free will? Suppose the man folds his hands and neglects to improve the antecedent blessings of free-grace; will the earth bring forth without his aid? Has he any right, and would not all rational men say he was a fool, to expect a harvest while he neglected to employ his free-will in exertions to improve on the free sunshine, rain and soil? Do not consequent blessings depend on the right use of his free-will in the matter? If he starves by indolence, can he charge his failure on free-grace as not being sufficient? By no means. He might have had his store-house filled as well as his neighbor, if he had put forth his free-will in like exertions.

God's dealings in the matter of religion are not dissimilar to those in natural affairs. First: He so loved the world that he gave his Son, etc. Second: He gave his Spirit to reprove the world. Call that the rain, if you please. Third: He gave his word. That is the "incorruptible seed." Fourth: He has given men understanding, reason, love of life, and many faculties, all designed to lead them to seek after a life higher than the present one. Here are blessings antecedent, or the blessings of free grace. Now, he calls upon free-will to use these blessings, as the condition of consequent blessings, or further benefits: all illustrated in the parable of the talents. The man with one talent possessed the free-grace, but he refused to exercise his free-will in the improvement of it, and hence brought a curse instead of a blessing on himself.

Free-grace and free-will must be married to produce offspring. One is the father cause, the other the mother cause; and you may as well expect a child to be born without father or mother as a soul of man in life eternal without both free-grace and free-will operating together. That is the order God has established; and he that separates them "puts asunder what God has joined together"—he rejects the marriage that God has established, and seeks to divorce the parties. Let free-grace stand in the foreground, and give it the prominence as the husband; but let free-will, in all her modesty, stand by its side as the loving wife, and like Sarah, of old, "obey" it, calling it "Lord," supreme. But do not kill the modest, unassuming wife under the pretence of exalting the "sovereignty" of the loving husband. Such a course is murder in the first degree, and let none make an attempt to sow discord between them by representing them as "opposites." They are no more so than a loving husband and an affectionate wife. They may have different offices to perform, but both are essential to a family: united they are happy; but divided the house falls.

Free-will may resist free-grace, and thus fail of consequent blessings. This is illustrated in the Saviour's language to Jerusalem—"How often would I have gathered thy children together . . . . and ye would not." Math. xxiii., 37. Here is free-grace and free-will. Free-grace would have given a blessing, but free-will refused and lost it. Free-will is also recognized by our Lord when he said, "Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life." John v., 40. Free-grace had life for them; but free-will refused the medium through which it was offered.

AN EXPLANATION ASKED.

BR. STORRS: Please show what the hour of Rev. xiv., 7, and xvii., 12, the half hour of viii., 1, and the 40 years referred to in Micah vii., 15, mean, and where to place them, and oblige your loving brother.

W. F. GARDNER.

Washington, D. C., Jan., 1868.

We do not profess to understand everything found in the prophecies; nor are we disposed to attempt an explanation of all therein. On the "hour" referred to in Rev. xiv., 7, we suppose it means simply, "the time of his judgment has come." The Saviour said to the woman of Samaria, "The hour cometh . . . . when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in Spirit," etc. That is, the time cometh, etc.

Rev. xvii., 12. The "one hour" here spoken of, we presume, means no more than a short time, without defining the precise period. The "half-hour" of Rev. viii., 1, we think, marks only the division of the two allegories into which the book of Revelation is divided; for that book is evidently a double allegory: the first very short, commencing with Chapter v. and ending chapter viii., 1., at which point a half hour's silence is introduced to indicate the division, when the second, and vastly enlarged allegory commences, which runs through to the close of the book. The first allegory being a mere "Index" to the last.

Micah vii., 15, does not mention "forty years;" that idea is but an inference. The language is, "According to the days of the coming out of Egypt will I show unto him marvellous things." It may mean no more than, as in the time when I brought you out of the land of Egypt, without intending any definite period; but, as in those days of deliverance, God showed that people and their enemies marvellous things, so he would do again at some future period. The context seems to indicate that those things relate to the final deliverance of God's people from all their oppressors. But time and events can only determine, with certainty, the precise import of the language there employed.

THE RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED.—NO. 1.

BY NATHANIEL FIELD, M. D.

(1.) It is assumed, that because there is no eternal life out of Christ, therefore, the wicked will not be raised from the dead to suffer punishment. If, then, according to this view, the most diobolical criminals should be so lucky as to escape punishment in this life, they will never be punished at all! As natural death is no punishment, but a common destiny of all mankind, saint and sinner, the withholding eternal life from the wicked is no punishment, as it is a gift bestowed upon the righteous by the grace of God. It follows, then, that all punishment must be inflicted in this life, seeing there is none after death. Hence, the day of judgment, so far as the wicked dead are concerned, is past. The phrase "after death the judgment" has, therefore, no practical meaning.

(2.) Again, Paul says, "Knowing the terrors of the Lord we persuade men." Does he mean by terrors natural death? If this be his meaning, it is often more terrible to the righteous man than the worst sinners. Many a saint has died at the stake under the most terrible and excruciating tortures, while fiends in human shape and infidels have often died suddenly without pain or concern about a future state. Indeed, I have often seen men die who never made any profession of religion, or gave the subject a thought, and some downright infidels, and they died as calmly and as unconcerned as if they had been the most devoted Christians. If this is all that will ever be experienced by such men, then there is no meaning in the terrors of the Lord as a motive to repentance.

(3.) Again, Paul says, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." If this fearful thing is natural death, and falling into his hands is merely to be left in the grave forever, thousands and millions die without the least fear of the consequences. Consequently, this expression is meaningless and powerless.

(4.) If there be no resurrection of the wicked, and no punishment beyond the grave, then the most atrocious villians, whose hands are stained with a hundred murders, fare as well in the end as the moralist, whose greatest sin was neglect of the salvation of the Gospel! The wretch who is steeped to his eyes in crime, and who has escaped punishment in this life, suddenly dies like a beast, and thus expiates all his crimes against God and man! The authority of God and the majesty of his law are not vindicated and maintained in the punishment of evil-doers. And so the hardened culprit, who has defied his government, and ridiculed the doctrine of eternal life, goes unwhipped of justice!

It follows, then, from these considerations, that the greatest crimes which can be perpetrated can incur no greater penalty than a forfeiture of the blessings of the Gospel. This is all that is meant by "the wrath of God abiding upon the sinner!"

JEFFERSONVILLE, Ind., 1868.

RESPONSE TO DR. FIELD.

OUR great respect for this liberal-minded Br. induces us to give place to him to state his objections to the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead. His objections have often been met, but it is only a few weeks since the HERALD OF LIFE first visited him. He comes, therefore, with old objections, which generally occupy the minds of new beginners in this controversy. In responding, we have placed before paragraphs figures (1), (2), (3) and (4), and corresponding ones before our remarks on that paragraph. This is done to save quotating. The reader will understand what we say by casting his eye back on the numbered paragraph.

(1.) What is the "punishment" denounced against transgressors? Is it suffering? Is it torment of any kind? Is it a mixture of suffering and dying? We do not ask whether both these elements do not sometimes follow transgression as a consequence of sin; but are either, or both of them, the proper penalty of the divine law? Is it not clear that "The wages of sin is death?" Not dying, nor the pain of dying, or any of the circumstances of passing into the state of death. The punishment is death, without regard to how or when the sinner dies. When he is in death, if that death is to be eternal—that is, is never to be removed—then is he in that punishment which is denounced against transgressors. It is not "the common destiny" of any saint thus to be in death. "The withholding of eternal life from the wicked" is a punishment of loss. "What is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world and lose himself?" "The day of judgment," so far as the decision of a man's destiny is concerned, "is past" when a man dies; but the final, executive judgment is not past till Christ raises his saints from the dead: raising them, only, he condemns the wicked dead to "remain in the congregation of the dead:" that is the final, the executive judgment which determines forever the future of the righteous and wicked dead.

We think we have thus shown that "after death" is the executive judgment; though Dr. Field has fallen into the common way of quoting scripture erroneously. "It is appointed unto men once to die" (not twice); "and after this" (appointment—not, "after death") "the judgment;" the determining judgment—that is, men are appointed to die once; but after it is thus appointed, God gave to all men a time of trial, to determine whether they shall live again. This life is the day of judgment to decide who shall live again: and when Christ returns from heaven, he will "execute the judgment written," by giving life and immortality to all his saints, dead or alive; and confirming in death all the wicked dead, and consign to everlasting destruction, or death, all the living wicked who have rejected him. If these considerations have "no practical meaning," or use, we entirely misunderstand man's mental and moral constitution.

That our construction of this text is correct seems to us demonstrated by what follows: "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many;" (that is, Christ died once: went down among the dead, but rose again to life;) and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin for their life."—Syriac. To whom does he appear? "To them that look for him." For what does he appear to them? To give them life; and to make them "without sin" forevermore: hence no more subject to death—they are immortal.

(2.) Paul's expression, "The terror of the Lord," etc., is an address to Christians. The term translated terror, is phobos. The same term in chap. vii. 1, is translated "fear"—"perfecting holiness in the fear of God." The term, therefore, necessarily, has nothing to do with the idea of terror. The respect and love of God, by the Hebrews, under the Old Testament, is very often expressed by "the fear of God." With them the expression was one of the strongest to indicate their regard for God: so that, "The fear of the Lord was the beginning of wisdom." It is "the goodness of God" that "leadeth men to repentance." We say, once more, it is not the manner of dying, nor dying itself, that is punishment due for sin: but DEATH: death unrevoked. If that is not "terror" enough for any thinking man, we are sure terror will be expended on him in vain, even if you carry it out to eternal torments.

(3.) Is it not a "fearful thing" to have life totally and eternally extinguished?" "Thousands and millions die without the least fear of the consequences" who have been taught the doctrine of inherent immortality and eternal torments. What does that prove? Does that make such a horrid doctrine true? Is Br. Field's view of a resurrection to be tormented and die again false, simply because it is not so fearful as the doctrine of eternal torture? Will he admit that?

(4.) This section of Br. Field's argument for the resurrection of the wicked dead might be accounted valid, if torment is the wages of sin; but the divine testimony is, death is its wages. Can Dr. Field not see that there is no greater punishment known in human or divine government than this? Suppose a man has committed "a hundred murders," and at last is convicted; and another who has committed but one murder is also convicted at the same time; would the Dr. have the "atrocious villain," of a hundred murders, tortured, by hanging him by the neck 99 times till almost dead, but sure not to let life become extinct till the hundredth time putting him on the gallows, lest he should "fare as well" as the other who had committed but one murder? And why is not such a system of torture practiced in civilized as well as in savage countries? Is it not because the influence of Christianity and the Bible forbid it? A sure proof that the Bible does not teach the torture theory.

"The authority of God and the majesty of his law are vindicated" by the full execution of the announced penalty, which is death—to "remain in the congregation of the dead." Prov. xxi., 16. "The hardened culprit" . . . does not "go unwhipped of justice:" justice has its full claim, which is to hold such in death. To do more than that, and add torment "beyond the grave," would be injustice, because it would exceed the threatened "wages." "All that is meant by 'the wrath of God abiding upon' the sinner" is, "they shall not see life:" they are condemned to "remain in the congregation of the dead." That is all justice claims: and "is thine eye evil because I am good" in letting such remain among "the beasts that perish?" We believe "these considerations" will have weight on the candid mind of Br. Field.

"Was Paul's call on his way to Damascus an election to grace and apostleship? B."

Certainly it was. But does that prove he was also unconditionally elected to eternal life? That is the question at issue. Did Paul so understand it? If so, why does he say "I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection, lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway?" 1 Corth. ix., 27. Why does he tell us that he labored and suffered, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead?" Does this all look as if he believed himself elected, unconditionally, unto eternal life? Paul understood that an election of grace might end in a reprobation of justice; our Lord had taught him so. What else is the parable of the talents? Three persons had an election of grace. To one was given five, to another two, to another one talent. Here God's sovereignty is seen. He divided the talents according to his own will. The recipients of these talents were called upon to improve their election of grace. Upon that improvement depended their election to a higher position; or, if you please, their election to eternal life. One did not improve, and came under the reprobation of justice. Does any one say the other two received more grace; that was the reason they succeeded? If the amount of grace given is the cause of the success, then how did the man succeed who had less than half as much as the one with five talents? and did not the first have a useless amount of grace? and had not the third ground to file in the plea of an insufficient amount of grace to enable him to succeed? and would justice have rejected such a plea? Here are three persons clearly elected of grace, by a Sovereign who had the right to bestow his goods as he pleased, and he wisely "gave to each according to their several ability." He gave only what he knew they had ability to improve. As a righteous Sovereign he could not require an improvement where there was not "ability," neither could he allow the wilful neglect to improve what his grace had bestowed to pass without censure. The election of grace was what made the man responsible, and the neglect to improve the election of grace was what constituted his guilt, and made his condemnation just.

This parable is a clear illustration of the election of grace: it is unconditional in its bestowment of various degrees of divine aid; but that aid is to be improved by free minds: no forced improvement can make any one responsible, praise, or blame-worthy. And where there is no ability, a wise and just sovereign can never condemn for not doing. What would be thought of the sovereign who should demand a subject to run a race who was without legs? especially if he should condemn him to death because he failed to comply, or to do an impossible thing? Would not all reasonable men call such a sovereign an unprincipled tyrant? and would not such verdict against that sovereign be approved by every unprejudiced mind?

Let it be remembered, then, that while an election of grace is admitted, that every man is a subject of it, or he would not be a responsible being: but this election of grace by no means secures, absolutely, any man's election to eternal life; it is by the use of this grace that such life is secured. Grace is he "ladder" let down from heaven, without which no man could move in that direction, but hands and feet must be used to climb it, else "the grace of God" is "received in vain;" and the man perishes because he would not use his free limbs (or free-will) to climb the ladder of God's free grace.

Our readers generally, probably, do not wish this question to occupy any considerable portion of our paper. It is true the government of God is involved in it, and right views of that government are of vast importance to a realizing sense of our obligation to God, and for our love to him. But if the subject is to be further discussed, let the point be clearly understood as to what the controversy is about. It is not, whether God is a sovereign, but whether that sovereignty is exercised in an unconditional election of certain individual persons to eternal life? which necessarily draws after it an unconditional reprobation of all other persons to eternal death. The disconnection of the two ideas is impossible. We maintain he has elected the whole human race to the possibility of eternal life—that is, "the grace of God that bringeth salvation (Syriac, life), hath appeared to all men:" and our Lord commanded his ministers to preach this "gospel to every creature, in all the world;" and who shall question the possibility of its being free-grace, honestly offered, to all? and that it carries with it the ability, to every man, to accept it and live forever?

BR. JACOB GRIM has two articles this week. The first was intended for last week, and will be found on the last page of this, and should be read before the one inside, as the latter is the continuation of that on the outside.

THE DEVILS OF DR. SPEAR.

THE second character brought forward by Dr. Spear, for the devil, is that of "the roaring lion, going about seeking whom he may devour." It seems to us that the Dr. should have said, in the outset, There are twenty-one devils in my theology; then he might have avoided many of the difficulties in which he has fallen. Under the first head, of the "Old Serpent," we showed, conclusively, that God condemned it to go on its belly all the days of its life; and the extent of the mischief it could inflict upon the seed of the woman was "to bruise the heel." But this serpent has somehow thrown off the curse, and now goes about like a roaring lion seeking whom (he may, not only, in the language of Scripture, bruise the heel, but whom) he may devour, eat up whole. It seems strange that from the days of Adam down to those of Peter none of the inhabitants of the world ever speak of his dignity under this head; and yet Peter says, "whom resist, steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world." This is strange language for Peter to make use of; and yet none of the prophets or apostles speak of the devil as a roaring lion; but they all had the same afflictions to undergo.

As this is the only place in the Bible that this remarkable language occurs, what does Peter mean in his 1 Ep. v., 9? If we can answer this then we are done with the roaring lion, of so much terror to this D. D. We lose many of the metaphors in the epistles, from our irrational modes of explanation, and neglect of the history of those times. Of these allusions the following may suffice. Rom. xvi., 20. "And the God of peace shall bruise (tread) satan under your feet shortly" —not the devil, as some ignorantly suppose. Adversary in English, is satan in Hebrew. Christ said to Peter get thee behind me satan: devil in English. This is a terrible translation of the Saviour's address to Peter.

Again we read in Rev. ii., 9, "But are of the synagogue of Satan" (of the devil). Who supposes for one moment, that the devil had a synagogue built, where his followers met to worship him? But the text explains itself. The synagogue of satan was only a synagogue of the Jews, unbelieving, adverse to Christianity. Jesus said to his disciples, "Behold I send you forth as sheep among wolves (not devils); be ye therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves. But beware of men (not devils); for they will deliver you to the councils (of the Jews), and they will scourge you in their synagogues." Matt. x., 16, 17. Here is a warning from Jesus to his disciples to beware of these unbelieving Jews. Again, we find in Mark xiii., 9, "But take heed to yourselves, for they shall deliver you up to the councils (of the Jews); and in the synagogues ye shall be beaten: and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them." Luke xxi., 12. "But before all these, they shall lay their (the Jews) hands on you and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogue (of satan), and into prison, being brought before kings and rulers for my name sake. Your enemy (satan, the Jews) goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour; knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren." Paul, or Saul, was an angel or messenger of this roaring lion, seeking whom he might devour. Acts ix., i. "Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest (of satan) and desired of him letters to Damascus, to the synagogues, that if he found any (disciples) of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound to Jerusalem." These unbelieving Jews were constantly stirring up strife in their synagogues against the disciples; and the apostles were constantly encouraging their followers to bear up under their afflictions, knowing that the Lord had promised to put an end to these persecutions by the overthrow of their city and the breaking up of their synagogues; or, in the language of the apostle, "The God of peace will shortly bruise satan under your feet."

To give an instance of the power of this devil, we will quote one text of what was the labor of one of his subjects or ministers. It is said, after the conversion of Paul, Acts ix., 31, "Then had the churches rest throughout all Judea," etc. And in his 2d Epistle, chapter ii., Peter is evidently speaking of the destruction of this devil, as a roaring lion, when he says, "But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there are false teachers among you. . . . . The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." This same synagogue of satan persecuted Jesus, and finally put him to death. Well might Peter say, "knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world." Jesus foretold the destruction of their temple, the overthrow of their city, with much minuteness in Matt. and Luke. It was published and read throughout Judea, and mentioned in the apostolic epistles for years before it happened; and a general expectation of this event pervaded the whole Christian communities, from Jerusalem to Rome; and indeed through all the Roman empire. The allusions to these predictions are frequent in all the apostolic writings. It was necessary they should be so, for this reason: the Jews, as long as they possessed the government of Judea, the temple and the metropolis: as long as they had any particle of influence at home or abroad, used it with relentless cruelty against the Christians. Yea, the apostles had to succor the minds of their persecuted brethren, and exhort them to patience and perseverance by reminding them of the speedy dispersion of them throughout the nations. So that all the Christians throughout the Roman empire looked for the catastrophe; and so it came to pass that such of the Christians as were in Jerusalem and Judea, about the time of the siege of Titus, fled, according to the directions given by the Saviour; and thus not a believing Jew perished in the siege.

Thus, then, when this Jewish devil was overthrown and destroped, he ceased going about like a roaring lion; and one more of Dr. Spear's devils is dead. The Dr. says, "It is for the most part the history of the devil in this world which is given in the Bible. We cannot get the personality of the devil out of the Bible any more than we can get that of Christ out of tht Bible;" so says the Dr. And we think if the whole Bible is made up of the history of the Devil, if you take away the Dr.'s devil, you take away all his gospel. He might say, as one said of old, "You have taken away my gods, and what have I left?"

JACOB GRIM.

POPULARITY NO EVIDENCE OF APOSTLESHIP.

"Do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ."—Gal. i., 10.

BR. STORRS: The experience of a long and varied ministry had taught Paul the truth above quoted, that if his preaching had elicited the applause of men, had been received pleasantly by the masses to whom it was addressed, then he would have had ground for more than mere suspicion that the doctrines were his, not "His that sent him."

What estimate then are we to form of the popular ministry of the present day? How is it, that thousands and tens of thousands of unrenewed men and women attend regularly the services of the churches of the various denominations, listen to the sermons therein preached, and leave them shouting the praises of him to whom they have listened, ready, almost to canonize the preacher of their choice, the sainted messenger from on high? Is the carnal mind no longer "enmity against God" and his truth? or, do "the prophets prophecy lies and the people love to have it so?" Alas! there is ground for more than mere suspicion that this is the case; the inference is irresistible that like cause would produce like effect, now as then; that there must be a perversion or concealment of truth, such as Paul taught, or similar displeasure would be manifested.

Reasoning, as I do, from the experience of the great apostle, believing that his declaration is an axiom applicable to all times, one that has been sealed by the blood of martyrs, that it may be as suitably addressed to the Editor and readers of the HERALD OF LIFE as to the "church at Galatia," I find in it word of comfort for you, my dear brother, and those of like faith, who are now struggling with popular prejudice, misrepresentation, and calumny. You are not "seeking to please men, but to be approved of God." The displeasures you are awakening is an evidence that your teachings are offensive to human pride, which has been so long and subtly fostered: the "dignity of humanity" is insulted by the Scriptural and emphatic application you make of the divine threatening, "thou shalt surely die:" the "lie" is bandied with the same freedom and agency as beneath the "tree in the garden:" the insult that was then offered to deity is alike addressed to you, "'tis false: we shall not surely die. God knows we are immortal, that we have a never dying-soul, that must exist as long as he. What hateful doctrines are these which you are disseminating, that you would have received by those who are made in the image of God? What! we are no better than the beasts that perish? does 'one event happen to both?' Away with teachings so degrading; this, your materialism, is rank infidelity, the worst form of atheism." They are offended!

Or, when turning to the sayings of him, "who brought life and immortality to light," you assert that "there is life only in Christ," thus repeating his message, you find that you are indignantly met with pagan creed, ingeniously interwoven with orthodox translations and teachings, by which "the word of God by tradition, is made of none effect," by which the announcement "I am come that ye might have life," is made void; by which, in effect, you are told that this, "the work which God had given him to do," was one of supererogation; that life was, and is, inherent in man; that all that was needed was for him to collect the scattered dust of them and their kindred, at the last day, and then, the spirit, the soul, the life, that had for a time been separated from it, would, of its own volition, resume its place and functions; that it is already in glory, in angelic form, only waiting till the tenement is again made fit, prepared, glorified for its reception; that Christ meant not life, although he said so: eternal blessedness was the term he should have used—'t was a mistake! Alas! how impious are such assertions; such beliefs! equalled only by their absurdity. How painful to you must be these perversions of your master's sayings of the truth you so much cherish. Be not discouraged, however; press forward in your good, but trying work; preach the "LIFE-GIVER" to a dying world. Honor your Saviour by making him the Alpha and Omega of Christianity: the "all in all;" the life. Gather strength from even the very opposition and misrepresentation of the world, and the church, so called; be assured that there is testimony, in the very nature of your trials, to your embassy, the displeasure of men is gospel proof of the validity of your commission. S.

A POSITIVE SPIRIT.

THE following, from the Prophetic Times, so fully expresses our views, that we rejoice to give it to our readers, and hope the advice given will be heeded by all those who study the prophecies. Immense injury has already been done to the cause of the advent by a positive spirit, both in reference to time and events. Where so many have failed let us all use care, lest we stumble others.

[PRIVATE INTERPRETATION OF PROPHECY.]

Ever since the ascension of our Lord from Olivet, the church in times of trouble and persecution has looked for relief to his promised return. One persecuting Emperor after another, and subsequently one persecuting Pope after another, has been named as the Antichrist, and the time of the Second Advent has been as often designated, and after each such error has been exploded, there has been a reaction, in which the whole subject has been ridiculed, and men have said more scornfully than before, "Where is the promise of his coming?"

The errors of the past should teach us modesty and caution; and, therefore, while we insist upon the literal truth of Scripture, and exhort all men to repent because "the Lord cometh," and while we point out the signs of the present time, which give us good reason to believe that the glorious Epiphany is near at hand, we should also be very careful not to assume the prophetic office ourselves, nor to press our peculiar views in such a manner as to leave the impression upon the minds of others that the truth of Scripture is necessarily bound up in our interpretation of it.

Christian parents have made infidels of their children by teaching them that either the Bible or geology is false. The church of Rome compelled Galileo to retract, as a damnable heresy, that which he knew to be truth; and if the Pope satisfied the astronomer that the Scriptures were irreconcilable with the Copernican theory, his infidelity was inevitable.

I am profoundly and sadly convinced that great danger is to be apprehended from the undue positiveness of certain writers of the present day in regard to the identification of Louis Napoleon with Antichrist; and I venture to affirm, that if this monarch shall die without having made a covenant with the Jews, and without persecuting the saints and setting himself up as an object of worship in Jerusalem, the authors of such books as "Armageddon," "Louis Napoleon the destined Monarch of the world," etc., will have done the cause of Millenarianism more damage than scores of such writers on Eschatology as Hatfield, Shedd, and Berg, or even than David Brown, whom I take to be the most plausible and unfair of all our opponents.

I beg not to be misunderstood in this matter. I do not deny that Louis Napoleon may be the Antichrist. The arguments urged in favor of this theory are ingenious, and some of the coincidences are very remarkable. It is right and proper that they should be investigated and used as motives for watchfulness and preparation. It is our privilege and our duty always carefully to study the signs of the times. But the criticism that I make is, that these writers seem to claim an infallibility in regard to their private interpretation, almost equal to that which the Pope claims for himself in matters of faith; and that they ignore the great truth that God is able to cause all the prophecies to be fulfilled by means which we have never dreamed of. While Napoleon lives, those who have been fixing the day and hour, may save their reputation by correcting and revising dates in subsequent editions; but should he be cut off by disease, it will be more difficult than ever before, to stem the current of modern spiritualizing interpretation. There is reason to fear, that a large class of readers, who have no time or inclination for investigating the truth themselves, may have these theories so identified in their minds with the prophecies, that if the theories shall fail, the great truths which underlie them will be rejected.

The year 1866 was long designated by many good men, both pre- and post-Millenarians who hold the year-day theory, as that in which the Millennium would begin, and the church looked forward anxiously to it; but that year has passed, and we are now ready to enter upon 1868, and still we must watch and wait for the Lord, and pray "Thy kingdom come."

May I not exhort those who believe and teach the literal truth of prophecy, in opposition to the fashionable method of spiritualizing away its meaning, to avoid all positive and dogmatic statements about the "times and seasons?" Let us study them, take warning from them ourselves, and point them out as warnings to others; but let us also carefully avoid pinning our own faith, or the faith of others, upon our private interpretation, however plausible or probable it may appear; lest we be found to have been building with untempered mortar, and thus doing harm instead of good to the cause of truth. Letters and Extracts.

FROM CLAMOR FRANKE.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, Jan. 3, 1868.

BR. STORRS: It is my happy privilege once more to have to say to you and our dear friends of the HERALD something in relation to the late visit of our beloved Br. Wendell to this city and vicinity. And foremost of all I wish to bear testimony to our dear brother's genial and kind spirit. His visit here has truly been a feast of fat things to me. He has a way of presenting the truth which is sure to carry conviction to honest hearts. If all our brethren only knew how well adapted he is to break ground for the reception of our Life views, I am persuaded they would not lack in means to sustain him in the field as an Evangelist. May God help us all to feel our responsibility to give to others what we have so freely received, a knowledge of our glorious Life doctrine. But I am digressing.

I want to tell you all about our meetings, the two Sundays past. In my last letter I told you that Br. Wendell preached on the first Sunday after his arrival here, in Grace Church Newport, Ky., and Asbury Chapel, Cincinnati, both Methodist Episcopal churches. Upon the urgent request of the pastor of Grace Church, Br. Wendell preached a second time for him, in the morning of the following Sunday. The subject of the discourse was, "Christ's refutation of Saduceeism," from the text so familiar to us all, Luke xx., 27–38. The interpretation he gave these passages, viz., that our Lord proved to the Sadducees a resurrection of dead saints only, such as live in the purpose of God unto him, and that he is their God, the God of the living, and not the God of the dead (of those that live not unto him), was, I think, well received. There was a good attendance and the closest attention was given to the subject. In the evening of that day Br. W. preached in the (M. E.) Union Church, in Covington, Ky., (Br. Langley, Pastor) which, by the way, is a magnificent structure, erected at a cost of something near $90,000.

He spoke fearlessly, and with great liberty from 1 Thess. iv. 13–18, upon the scriptural hope of the righteous dead. There was quite a large turn out, and much interest was manifested.

After having thus preached four times to the people here, Br. Wendell expressed a desire next to visit Richmond, Ind., to comply with Br. Hall's request to stay over the following Sunday and preach to the people there. Accordingly we had posters printed here, announcing the subjects of Br. Wendell's discourses, and sent them to Br. Hall to be distributed over the town. I accompanied Br. Wendell.

We left Cincinnati on Saturday afternoon (Dec. 28) 2 1-2 o'clock, and arrived at Richmond at near 6 o'clock. We immediately repaired to the hall which Br. Hall had engaged for that evening and next day services. Some 30 to 40 persons had assembled when Br. W. opened the meeting. He was very attentively listened to and after the sermon several asked him to explain the meaning of certain passages in the Bible, which they thought did not harmonize with his views. He disposed of them without any difficulty, and everything passed off in the most amicable and agreeable manner. On the following day (Sunday) he preached three times in the same hall. These Sunday meetings were very interesting indeed, more so than the one held Saturday evening. Quite a number came forward after preaching, and freely exchanged their views with Br. W., and, I have reason to believe, not a few were well nigh persuaded of the truth of his arguments. If I ever enjoyed myself it was on this occasion, when our dear brother, untrammeled by human fetters presented the glorious Life doctrine in all its fulness and beauty.

I am not without hope that the seed sown here will bring forth fruit to a better understanding of God's will to man. Br. Hall is the only man in Richmond who holds to our views. He was in his earlier days a Methodist preacher, and he is now going to use his gifts to preach and exhort the people to turn from the fable of inherent immortality to Jesus, our LIFE-GIVER, who has said, "I am the resurrection and the life." May God bless and make him an instrument in his hands to do much good.

Early on Monday morning I parted from Br. Wendell on the cars which were to convey me back to Cincinnati. I left at 7 o'clock, and he was to leave with the 9 o'clock train for Dayton, and thence to Detroit, Mich. Yours in love, looking for our dear Lord and LIFE-GIVER.

FROM WM. FORRESTER.

ROCK STREAM, N. Y., Jan 6, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I feel truly thankful that I have the privileges of the gospel; although poor in this world, but I feel rich in faith, giving glory to God through his Son Jesus Christ; through whom I expect soon to have eternal life, if I endure faithful to the end; which I hope and trust will take place this year. Yet I feel that I can wait longer, as Noah did when on board the Ark, if it is the will of the Lord. But I long to hear the trumpet sound and see God's glory blaze around, when sickness, sorrow, pain and death shall be felt and feared no more; when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters now cover the sea: when every creature that hath breath will praise the Lord; when the wickedness of the wicked shall come to an end. I am much pleased with the HERALD OF LIFE. I do fully indorse its general sentiments, although they are quite unpopular. In these days the truth of God is offensive to the world, or those who live after the flesh, whether in the churches or out. My prayer is, to my Heavenly Father, to help us, who profess to be his disciples, to walk humbly before him, in the spirit of Christian kindness; that he may at last say, It is enough: come up higher.

DR. J. BILLINGS, Bangor, Me, writes: I send you $5 for a new beginner. Since I came to this place, I have advocated the truth on the Life theme. This brother heard, and commenced searching the Bible, and is now satisfied what is truth on the resurrection question. He wants the HERALD OF LIFE, and some tracts.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We have sent him BIBLE VS. TRADITION, instead of tracts; thinking that will help him most to what he wants. We will also send him some tracts if he or you will name what ones he wants.

H. G. ARMSTRONG, Trenton, N. J., writes: There is little or none of the Life preaching in Trenton. The Advent Herald people held their Convention here last October, and their meetings were well attended. Why can't a little stronger meat be given us?

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We trust a good deal "stronger meat" will "be given" you, next Spring, if Br. E. Wolcott is permitted to get his tent into the field once more. Do not be discouraged: the truth on "Life only in Christ" will be proclaimed in Trenton in a short time.

A. A. BABCOCK, Albion, Mich., writes: Inclosed find $2 for your paper. I have taken three religious papers: they all think the wicked dead must live again that they may receive the punishment due for their crimes. With all their arguments, which have been many, they have not been able to convince me but what God's word is true—"all the wicked will he destroy." Some he has destroyed at different times; and soon will he come, and with flaming fire will he consume the ungodly, who will not yield to his sceptre.

C. S. CALL, Newport, Vt., writes: The people about here do not wish to hear anything about a future life by a resurrection. They believe all mankind will have life; for they cannot lose the life of their immortal souls. Heaven is to be their home: all must appear before the judgment seat of Christ, etc. I tell them, Christ said, No man hath ascended up to heaven. Peter said, David hath not ascended to heaven. If the Saviour's words are true, and as good a man as David has not ascended up to heaven, when do you think you will get there? Better believe the sure word and let the traditions of men go.

CYRUS M. REYNOLDS, New Preston, Conn., writes: I cannot do without the HERALD OF LIFE. I read it with pleasure, and I trust with profit. I am fully persuaded that the doctrine of "No life out of Christ" is true. This is a solid foundation; and I feel to praise the good Lord for the light that is shining from his holy word. A few of us here fully believe in life only in Christ; but we find opposition if we talk on the subject. I wish it would please the Lord to send some one this way to break up the ground. I believe good would be accomplished.

SAMUEL BROWN, Milwaukee, Wis., sends for $5 worth of tracts, and writes: The immortal soul question is being presented by the Rev. Mr. Love, and I want to distribute the tracts in the church. I have given away nearly all you previously sent me, and there seems to be a disposition to read on the life question. I am suprised at the anxiety manifested to learn on the subject. May God bless and prosper the truth, and confound error, is my prayer.

JULINE FRENCH, Providence, R. I., writes Your sermons in the paper, are to me a feast of fat things. "The Purifying Hope" is most excellent. I have reason to praise the Lord for the light that shines upon his word through the labors of his servants who do not shun to declare the whole counsel of God. I feel to rejoice that the HERALD can be sustained. I think it grows better and better. Yours in hope of life.

CARTER'S REPLY TO THE TANNER.—The Rev. J. Carter, a Puritan minister, once came unexpectedly behind a Christian of his acquaintance, who was busily occupied in his business as a tanner. He gave him a pleasant tap on the shoulder; the man looked behind him, started, and said, "Sir, I am ashamed that you should find me thus employed." Mr. Carter replied, "Let Christ, when he cometh, find me so doing." "What!" said the man, "doing thus?" "Yes," said Mr. C., "faithfully performing the duties of my calling."

FITZ-JAMES AND HIS SOVEREIGN.—It is said of Sir John Fitz-James that the instant he was seated on the bench, he lost all recollection of his best friends that would in the least degree have interfered with his administration of justice. A relative once solicited a favor of him. "Come to my house," said he, "and I will deny you nothing; but in the king's court I must do you justice." The attorney-general was weak and criminal enough to request his interest on the part of the king, in a cause to be tried before him. "I will do the king right," he replied. A verdict was given against the crown, and the attorney-general expostulated with Fitz-James, who dismissed the subject by adding, "I could not do his majesty right, if I had not done justice."

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1843. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

The Heavenly Land.

BY MARIA M. WEAVER.

The heavenly land, the holy land;
No tongue can ever tell
The joys of that immortal band
Who there with Christ shall dwell.

The music o' the heavenly land
Mine ears at last shall hear;
In glory bright the deathless band,
Thank God, will soon appear.

The lasting beauty of that land,
The trees, the fruit, the flowers—
Will far surpass the fading things
In such a world as ours.

Thanks be to God, the loved shall meet,
All free from woe or pain,
From east and west with joy they'll come,
And never part again.

O holy land! O peaceful clime,
City of pearls and gold,
My weary heart pants after thee,
Thy light let me behold.

Ten thousand times ten thousand years,
And millions pass away,
And yet the eye has shed no tears
Nor has the head turned gray.

Forever and forevermore
Beauty and youth remain;
O blessed Giver of such bliss,
We pray thee, Come and reign.

"The Sovereignty of Jehovah."

Response by L. C. Thorne.

That the writer of "The Sovereignty of Jehovah" is laboring under a serious misapprehension respecting the opinions of others upon that particular subject is apparent, since he unwisely assumes that they who discard as unscriptural the Calvinistic doctrine of predestination, deny God's sovereignty. They, on the contrary, contend that with God rests uncontrolable power, absolute sovereignty; and differ from those who cling to the election and reprobation notions of Calvin only in regard to the manner of exercising that power. Very much, therefore, of the writer's labor is thrown away upon an effort to remove an imaginary difficulty.

He says there are some "who tell us they have Christ, and are one with Christ, and yet, with audacious effrontery, cry down the ordinances of the Gospel, and consider the means of grace as too burdensome and too low," etc.

If it is intended to charge this upon them who deny the darling theory of the writer, or even upon them who maintain that some of the outward forms and ceremonies, so dear to many professing Christians, belong back under the Mosaic dispensation and are, consequently, now of no force or value, but rather stumbling blocks, then on behalf of such we utterly reject it as an implication of hypocrisy and self-righteousness having the widest possible remove from application to them, and therefore unworthy of notice.

"Free will and free grace," says he, "are very opposites." It might be somewhat interesting to know by what course of reasoning he arrives at this conclusion. His position probably is that as the carnal mind is enmity against God, a controling influence must be exerted over it through some agency, that the creature may be enabled to yield obedience to divine requirements; and that such an agency is this free grace. Hence, when a person becomes a subject of such favor, he no longer possesses the power to exercise absolute free will; hence, free will and free grace are opposites.

Now, there is, in fact, no such thing as absolute freedom of will, any more than there is absolute freedom of action; for there is not a concern in life, however trifling, in forming our judgments upon which, as a base of action, we are not influenced to some extent by considerations over which we have no control. For instance: you desire for certain reasons to influence the actions of a person. You go to him and give expression to words that convey to his mind your will concerning him, and he does as you desire. That person has not exercised absolute freedom of will, because he has been influenced by considerations which you presented; nevertheless, he has, in the ordinary and correct sense of the term, used free will; i. e., unaffected by any compulsory power.

So it is with God. He loves the creatures that he has made "in his own image," and has placed before them a blessing of untold and inconceivable value, unto the possession of which they may, upon certain conditions, attain. By the revealed word and the gift of the Spirit, both of which are manifestations of grace, and, if heeded, will lead to the great consummating blessing. God conveys to the mind of the creature information respecting his will concerning it. The knowledge of God's will influences the mind, but it does so in no greater degree than the knowledge of any other fact, except as it involves considerations of vastly greater moment. So that while no person exercises absolute freedom of will, there being no such thing, they who are the subjects of divine grace enjoy, no less than others, a will free from actual compulsion. Free will and free grace are not, therefore, "opposites," but simply independent of each other; the former being quite exercisable by a subject of the latter.

A statement of the doctrine of election and reprobation is scarcely calculated to "draw forth the latent rancor of the unregenerate;" for, as we have seen demonstrated in scores of cases, they say "if we are among the elect we shall certainly be saved; and if among the reprobated nothing that we can do will alter the matter." Thus, soothing and comforting themselves with the thought that they have no will or action to display in the work, they continue in their course. But supposing a statement of the doctrine to have the imputed effect, what follows? Is not that a dangerous doctrine the influence of which upon mankind is damaging? But perhaps it has on some individuals the one effect and on some the other; while on none a desirable one. Earnest, active Christian men long since learned that any doctrine which excites in the sinner fear or hatred of God is utterly useless; while now the fact is being rapidly recognized that such doctrines are not only utterly useless but wretchedly erroneous.

We agree with our brother that grace is not given because of merit, else would no human being receive it; for all are sinners, and as such deserve the "wages of sin," which "is death." But how does he know that a portion of grace is not given to every man under the gospel dispensation? As a matter of convenience to his theory he assumes that it is not; but where is the proof? He tells us the "message of mercy is sent in such a way that many cry out that they will rather expose themselves to his (God's) wrath than receive such forgiveness." Well, according to his theory, what matters it, if they do? Their condition is rendered none the worse by anything they may say. By giving expression to such sentiments they are simply fulfilling an eternal decree! So our friend is wielding a weapon which, if effective, would cut both ways. Not only would he deprive the members of the church of Christ of the enjoyment of free will in the service, but would exculpate the enemies of Christ from all blame by making them mere machine-like agents, compelled to execute an eternally decreed will of omnipotence.

He asserts that, "the sovereignty of God is seen in the substitution of Christ to bear the curse of the law in the room of his people." The sovereignty of God is seen in the fulfilment of the redemption scheme by the death and resurrection of Jesus, and in a thousand ways beside, but certainly not in Christ's substitution to bear the curse of the law in the room of anybody; for such a doctrine is no part of revelation. The curse of the law carries every human being into death. That is inevitable. They all suffer the penalty. Infinite justice demands the life of the sinner himself, and his life it will have, for Jesus never proposed to rob justice of its claim; and God has not revealed a plan of salvation that involves it. If the violated law of any State should demand the lives of a thousand culprits its demand could not be satisfied with that of one man who had not forfeited it, though he should volunteer to make the sacrifice; but the law being satisfied by the sacrifice of the thousand, that man might, if he possessed the power, give to each of the thousand another life without doing the law any injustice. In the all-wise providence of God, all men possess sinful natures; all have sinned; and infinite justice demands their lives. Jesus, having led a perfectly sinless life, by his death and resurrection secured the right to redeem from death by the same resurrection he experienced, all them who by conformity to divine requirements develop a character in harmony with his own; which right he proposes to exercise by imparting to them a principle of life other than that forfeited, the law being permitted to have and to hold its claim to all eternity.

The Scripture doctrine of atonement, then, has no "substitution," or suffering in "the room of" in it. All is simple, easy of comprehension, no difficulty in understanding how it is that God can "be just," (to himself and to the law) "and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." Isa. liii. is alluded to as affording proof that Christ died in the room or stead of us. The language is, "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes are we healed, ... the Lord hath laid upon him the iniquity of us all." It is, perhaps, unnecessary to say, since it is probably recognized by all, that under the Mosaic dispensation there was no forgiveness of sins. Ordinances of sacrifices and offerings were instituted which secured to faithful observers a passing over, or transmission of sins from year to year until an end shall be made of sin by "one sacrifice" for it "for all time." From the beginning the wages of sin has been death, and to every one of those who had been faithful to the law, their sins presented an impassible barrier to eternal life. So that, had not the divinely-appointed sacrifice of Christ been made, they must ever remain in death whither they have been carried by the claims of justice. The sacrifice was made, their sins blotted out, and themselves made subjects of a future life by a resurrection from the dead at the final consummation. As, therefore, the divine economy required that Christ should lay down his life as the price at which he might purchase the right to effect human redemption, truly did the prophet say he (Christ) "was wounded for our transgression, he was bruised for our iniquities." Forseeing the peculiarly aggravating circumstances of violence attending the sacrifice, well might he portray in words of such eloquent sadness the Messiah's humiliation and suffering. John i., 29. Gal. iii., 13, and iv., 5, and 1 Pet. ii., 24, 25 are in perfect harmony with this view. All teach that Christ died to redeem believers from the curse of the law; not that they might escape it entirely, and thus cheat it out of its claim.

In the sense of designated, predestinated in the divine counsels, we do say, that, as to individual cases, no one knows that any of the human race, "except Jesus Christ, is yet elected to eternal life." In the sense, however, of chosen, but not inaugurated; selected, but not invested; many whose accounts were closed by their falling asleep in Jesus, are elected.

"M. S. C." asks, "If God elected only the head, and not the body of Christ from before the foundation of the world?" When he elected the head (Christ) of his church, he surely must have determined that there should be a body; but we find no Scripture authority for believing; on the contrary, abundant evidence to justify us in rejecting the idea, that he then chose from among the countless millions that should live, every individual member of his church. They were to be such as having been tried were found faithful, that God might be altogether glorified. Our Lord told the Jews, Matt. xx., 16, "Many be called, but few chosen." Here we first have a large class (many) who are called, and finally a small class (few), selected from the "many," who are chosen. When the large class, the many, were called they must have been in some degree subjects of grace, for a call from God necessarily implies ability on the part of the called to obey; and we agree with our friend that the ability is a conferred one. If, then, when grace is received, it always "makes a change in the life and heart of the receiver," as "M. S. C." seems to assert, and that change is one unto salvation, as he intimates, then all the "many" spoken of by our Lord must have been changed in their hearts and lives. Thus we have eternal reprobation of some of Christ's followers; which is, to say the least, reprobation with a vengeance.

In Matt. xxii., 14, our Lord states the same thing. He is discoursing to the people the parable of the marriage feast, thereby illustrating the broad invitation of mercy under the Gospel dispensation. The first part of the parable is manifestly designed to represent the call of Christ to the Jews, and their treatment of it; while the latter part represent the extension of the call to the Gentiles; also, their treatment of it, and the final judgment, and marriage supper of the Lamb. First, many had been invited to the feast who came not, and the language respecting them is, "They which were bidden (called) were not worthy." Then the call was extended to all, as many as could be found. When the guests were assembled the king came in to see them, and found there "a man which had not on a wedding garment;" and he commanded his servants to cast the man out; "for," said he, "many are called but few are chosen." This derives additional significance from its connection, as the parable of the feast is an allusion to an ancient custom in which none were invited for whom the maker of the feast had not provided garments for the occasion, and which were to be had for the asking. Peter declared, Acts x., 34, 35, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him. Acceptance materially differs from "unconditional election." Free, uncompelled acceptance is prompted by approbation, resulting from satisfaction given or created by voluntary acts pleasing to the accepted. If, therefore, the doctrine of "unconditional election to eternal life" were true, there could be no such thing as acceptance on the part of God; for when he has received his children he has simply carried out his determination to have them; and Peter would be entirely wrong in saying that people are, upon certain conditions, accepted with God. But we think it really safe to assume that Peter is right, and that acceptance with God is conditional; fearing him and working righteousness being the stipulations. Paul assured Titus that "the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared unto all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly," etc.

If this grace changes the heart of them to whom it is sent, without regard to any free-will action on their part, rather controls their actions, and it hath appeared to all men, then will all be saved. But such a conclusion would not suit our friends of the election faith, as that is one of the "demoniacal doctrines." The Gospel message is "glad tidings" of conditional salvation; a part of the conditions being sober, righteous, and godly living, and it is the office of the Spirit, which is of grace, to both teach men how to conform to those conditions and assist them in doing it. It may be objected that the "all," in this text, is restricted, its application being limited to believers, some of whom Paul was writing to. Well, admitting it to be so, what then? "Why," say some, "they are believers because grace has appeared to them," (which is true) "and their being believers is evidence that they are among the unconditionally elected." If this be true then there is no danger of their being rejected in any event. But did Paul believe any such thing? Let him answer. He admonished the Corinthian brethren to so run that they might obtain, always striving for the mastery (over their own lusts). "I," said he, "keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that by any means when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." Paul, then, not only taught that believers have a free will work to do, but recognized also the possibility of himself failing of the prize.

John vi. 44, "No man can come to me except the Father who hath sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day," is adduced in support of the theory of eternal election of individuals. Let us see if such a doctrine is involved in it. The quotation is prefaced with what we believe (in the exercise of our free will) and always strive to maintain, viz., that "power from above is needed to discern spiritually." That power is the spirit; a portion of which God in infinite love gives to his creatures: and, if heeded, will insure richer manifestations of it, so that the faithful may increase in the knowledge of divine things. But if unheeded will be withdrawn. Thus, while God gives the power, the use of it is our own, and we receive large gifts if faithful in small ones.

Bible students of universally-acknowledged ability, attach to the verb "draw," in the text, the meaning of alluring, enticing, inciting; and their authority for so doing is that the best Greek writers use it in that sense. Show to children that which is desirable and they are by it drawn to the possessor. If offered to them they will run after him; but they are not forced to do so; they follow through the desire they feel to get the thing they value. So God draws man. He shows him his needs and how they may be supplied; man, feeling a desire to obtain eternal life, goes to Christ, the "resurrection and the life." The expression in verse 45, "they shall be all taught of God," explains the preceding verse. God teaches us to know ourselves; that finding our need of salvation we may flee to him who has become the author of it; but we are not compelled to do so; we may go without if we do not choose to comply with the terms. The communication of this knowledge concerning ourselves is a manifestation of grace. We, therefore, "dare assert, in the fear of God," that election, as evidently held by our brother, "is not here unequivocally stated." It may be asked, will the circumstances under which the language was delivered justify an attachment of such meaning to the word "draw?" Yes, and are strongly in its favor. He was talking to the Jews. He had come to them as a messenger bearing tidings of sweetest mercy. He it was that would destroy that mountain of sin that had been accumulating throughout the whole period of the Jewish economy. His blood was to seal the testimony of love. He would not only redeem them, but demonstrate how it would be effected. In many ways God was then through Jesus showing forth his mercy, his love, and all the excellencies of his character, that the Jews being no longer benefitted by the ceremonies of the law, might be incited to come to Christ in love, rendering heart service.

Rom. viii., 28, 29, are thought by some to strongly favor the doctrine of election. In verse 28 we have, "who are the called according to his purpose." Dr. Taylor, and his position is endorsed by Dr. Adam Clark, translates it the invited, and says it "is a metaphor taken from inviting guests." Verse 29. "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." We have good authority for stating that foreknow, here, signifies to design before, to bestow the favor of being God's people upon a nation or class of men for the purpose, of course, of carrying out omnipotent designs.

Eph. ii., 8 is claimed in support of the position that saving knowledge is restricted to certain ones who, it is urged, are subjects of predetermined election. The text reads, "For by grace are ye saved; through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." The whole argument sought to be deduced from this text is based upon the assumption that faith is the gift of God. Is not the assumption unwarranted? An able Greek scholar says that in the original "that" is in the neuter gender and cannot stand for faith as it is in the feminine; but it has the whole sentence that goes before for its antecedent. What is is the subject of the text? Why, salvation. By grace (favor) are ye saved; ("unconditionally?" No,) through faith; and that (the salvation) not of yourselves; it (the salvation) is the gift of God; (not of works, so no man can boast of having earned it). Is the act of faith, then, man's own? Certainly, and by the exercise of free will. God never believes for a man, any more than he repents for him. But it may be asked, is not faith in some degree the gift of God? Yes, there is a sense, a limited one, in which it is. It is the gift of God just so far as regards the power of exercising it, the act depending immediately upon man's will; for faith is a cordial belief in the veracity of God, in the declaration of his word; and belief is assent of the mind. Nor does it follow that the power is given just when the evidence upon which an exercise of faith is required, is presented. The warnings, so frequently met with in the word of God to them who do not believe, show that many who have the power do not exercise it. Did time and space permit, we think we could satisfactorily show that many passages relied upon to sustain the theory of unconditional individual election to eternal life are positively opposed to it.

In writing against this doctrine we can assure our brother that we feel we are not opposing God, but a faulty interpretation of his word. While we would advise "M. S. C." to preach it whenever and wherever the way is opened of God," will there be thought to be any impropriety in venturing the expression of a wish that he will do it upon such occasions only?

The advocates of the doctrine of election, it seems, preach to "make known to the elect their position in Christ." This contrasts strangely with the plain teaching of Scripture that repentance must precede entrance into the fold of Christ; and the necessity of preaching for the purpose of turning men to repentance. Jesus sent his disciples upon such a mission, "and they went out and preached that men should repent." He also told the people "except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." If they were in him by election before the foundation of the world they could not possibly perish; and if they were not so in him they could not do otherwise than perish. Jesus recognized no such doctrine, but placed the responsibility entirely upon them. He had done and would do his part toward their salvation, and except they did theirs, and repented, they should perish. See acts xxvi., 20; iii., 19, etc. God has declared that he "takes no pleasure in the death of him that dieth," and commands men to "turn and live."

How beautiful, how easy of comprehension, is the Gospel, that precious message of illimitable love, when not obscured and mystified by human inventions. May we all seek grace to preach the pure Gospel, showing forth its power by blameless lives, that many sinners may be won to Christ, and God be thus altogether glorified in all them that will glorify him. And to him and his dear Son, our Redeemer and great High Priest, be all the praise.

"The Devil:"

What is he? Who is he? Where did he come from?

In the Independent we find a sermon preached by "Rev. Samuel T. Spear, D. D., on "Demonology.' And, as the subject has been under investigation for some time in the Herald, we think, if possible, the question may as well be settled; therefore we have divided the subject into three divisions, which we think will meet the whole question. The "Rev. D. D." says,

"I find that the Demonology of the Bible, as to the reality and personality of 'the devil and his angels,' is just as clear and positive as the Christology or theology of the same Book." Again he says: "As the case is put in the Bible, we are reduced to just this single alternative—either we MUST BELIEVE in the existence of a personal devil, or we MUST DENY the authority of the Book."

Now, how many persons are governed by the Dr.'s MUST, we know not; but for ourself we disclaim anything of the kind; and for fear some one of the readers of the Herald may have some lingering fear of the person called "the devil," and render unto him some kind of homage due to another, we are willing to add our mite to break down this stronghold of superstition. Another "D. D.," a few weeks ago, remarked, "Take away hell and you take away my gospel." Verily, it looks as if their divinity was sick, and needed D. D.s to apply their healing art to bolster it up. Dr. Spear says:

As we intend to deal honestly with the Dr. and with the subject, we will first examine this "old serpent." This passage occurs twice in the Bible—in Revelation xii. and xx., and in which John Cochran, in his interpretation of St. John, says, "There is not a particle of proof that satan (personally) is designed there is strong evidence for the conclusion that he is not designed, and that the language is symbolical."

We will call attention to this "old serpent" mentioned by Dr. Spear. This old serpent has seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads, and his color was red, and his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven. Now, the book does not inform us whether his tail reached up to heaven, or whether it was the magnetic influence in the tail which was exerted for that purpose. But, as the Dr. has taken this passage as literal, and informed us we MUST believe in this personal devil, or "old serpent," or give up the Bible, we hope he will inform us something more about the "old serpent." Again, in chap. xii., 7, we find a great war in heaven between Michael and his angels, and this dragon; and good news is proclaimed for the inhabitants of heaven, for "The great dragon was cast out, that 'old serpent' called the devil." But alas for us, for he is cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. I would like to ask the Dr. a few questions just here. At what period in the world's history did this battle take place? Was it before the "old serpent" was found in the garden? If so, how do you account for this song, "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down . . . . and they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death." If this war took place prior to the time we find this serpent in the garden, this is strong language to use before man was created, or before there was any word, or any shedding of the blood of the Lamb. If the Dr. says this war was a subsequent event, we ask him, Please explain how the devil and his angels got into heaven again to make a fight there, and cause such rejoicings when they were cast out? "All literal, of course, Dr!" We find this "old serpent" again in Revelation xx., and I confess I have always thought the Lord took a great deal of unnecessary trouble to make a chain strong enough to bind this devil for one thousand years, and then, afterward, in the language of the Dr. and John, "he MUST be loosed a little season," on the principle that it is all "literal!" As John Cochran, in his interpretation of the book of Revelation, says,

"It becomes, then, instead of the oracle of divine truth, the mere toyish trumpet-piece of commentators, the sound of whose blasts, however, are sometimes woefully loud, as in 'the Great Tribulation.' If satan, the spirit, be in the Revelation, a very shrill blast may be sent forth by the trumpet, provided he can play well. But satan is not there, and the note is a false one. All the variations performed on this note are likewise false, such as the resurrection of the martyrs in the literal sense; their reign with Christ for a thousand literal years; the assault of Gog and Magog when this period is finished; the living of the immortals and the dying of the mortals together on this earth; the conflagration of the world; the general resurrection, and the final judgment of all men; none of which subjects are spoken of in the Revelation, except as symbols of something different. These are themes, baseless, then, which, employed by a performer endowed with strong lungs, make an awful music." So says Cochran."*

*Note by the Editor.—John Cochran is a Scotchman, and a gentleman (of the Presbyterian church) of deep study. His work on "Revelation" was published by the Appletons, in this city, some eight or ten years since. He is of the "Orthodox" school, and believed in a spirit-devil, at the time of publishing his book; but he rejected the idea of his being actually seen in the book of Revelation, or represented there, and thought the obscurity resting on that book was, that "Commentators had got the spirit-devil into it." And, we confess, we thought him right. That is the mischief in all the theological interpretations—"They have got the spirit-devil into them." We hesitate not to say that John Cochran's book on Revelation was, and is, the best and most rational commentary we ever read upon that book. But it kills the spirit-devil, without the author intending it. That, possibly, is the reason it has been so long out of print, or another edition of it has not been called for.

To our first question: "What is the devil? Dr. Spear answers, "The old serpent:" therefore to the law and the testimony. The first we hear of a serpent is Gen. iii., 1. There we read, "The serpent was more cunning than any beast of the field which Jehovah God had made: and he said unto the woman," etc. Here the presumption is that the serpent was a beast of the field. But, says the objector, "It does not say so; and I believe the devil was inside of the serpent." But the book does not say so. And there is just the same evidence that the devil was in the serpent as there is that an immortal soul is in man, and that is just none at all: it is all assumption. We find this serpent again in the 13th verse. "The serpent deceived me, and I did eat." "And Jehovah God said to the serpent, Because thou [not because the devil in you did it] hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field: upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life."

Here are a few important facts for the Dr. and for the readers of the Herald of Life. This serpent was under the power and control of Jehovah. First: he was judged for his actions, and condemned; not as an immortal being, not as a being of the intelligence of an angel. The Dr. says, the "Scripture devil is not a being of climate, or country, or age; not simply a character of antiquity now obsolete. This devil is not yet dead, and his power is not dead."

This serpent of the Scriptures was confined to a country, did live by eating, and its life-time was numbered by days. This serpent had the power to beget seed, like any other beast of the field; for, says Jehovah, "I will put enmity between thy seed and her seed." Now we have traced the genealogy of the generations of men down until we come to the time of the flood: and in Gen. vi., 5, God says, "He saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. . . . And Jehovah said, I will blot out man, whom I have created, from the face of the earth; every man [margin] and beast, and the creeping thing . . . . that I have made. And behold I, even I . . . . destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven: everthing that is on the earth shall die."

In Gen. vii., 4, God says, "And every living thing that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth." Here we have the testimony of God, that every thing that he had made, he would destroy. Now this serpent belonged either to the clean or unclean beasts; or he belonged to some other class of things; and as no notice is taken of anything except Noah and his family, and the class of animals, etc., that went into the Ark with him; if even this "old serpent," was able to stand the ravages of time for upward of two thousand years, we read of no mention made for his preservation in the Ark. We wonder where the Dr.'s "old serpent" was during the flood? But hear what the Dr. says: "According to thispicture [drawn by the Dr.] he is a cunning devil and ingenious, being anything but a fool." "He is ingenious," says the Dr., therefore, think you, he was going to be drowned by the flood? What if the Lord did say, "Upon thy belly shalt thou go all the days of thy life;" he is no fool says the Dr., cannot he transform himself unto an angel of light and cheat the flood? Yes, and the Lord too? for, where did this serpent get the power to remove the curse, "Upon thy belly shalt thou go all the days of thy life?"

"We cannot get the personality out of the Bible any more than we can get that of Christ out of the Bible; and whoever denies the proposition may as well at once call himself an infidel, and thus, so far as he is concerned, end the question." D. D. Spears.

Not so fast Dr., we are not going to let you off quite so easy. Jesus Christ went about for over thirty years, and was personally seen by his enemies, as well as his friends; and even after he rose from the dead, the apostle said, We did eat and drink with him. Can the Dr. say as much for his devil? But the Dr.'s devil is a cunning fellow, he is no fool, he is not going to let people see him! The Editor of the Advent Herald differs from Dr. Spear, for he says that Martin Luther saw him in the castle of Wurtenberg; and John Wesley saw him in the shape of a black hog. But as neither of these characters are mentioned in the Dr.'s twenty-one descriptions, Luther and Wesley must have been mistaken. If the Dr. had said there are personal devils in the Bible, we might have admitted his argument. But when he says, these twenty-one descriptions relate to one personal devil, against whom we, as Christians, are called to fight, we beg leave to call in question his assumption; and shall take up his twenty-one heads in due time and examine them in the light of Bible truth. We think we have shown that the garden devil, or Eve's devil, is dead, long since; and we have nothing to fear from him, however we may dread his seed. Yours,

Jacob Grim.

THE GOSPEL HOPE.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

[Concluded from last week.]

"BE ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and reverence." 1 Peter iii., 15.

Let us look at Paul's language relating to the gospel hope. Acts xxiii., 6, "Of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question." Then surely he preached the resurrection of the dead as the gospel hope, unless he was called in question for something he did not preach. But let us see, Acts xxvi., 6–8, he says, "Now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers; unto which our twelve tribes, instantly serving day and night, hope to come. For which hope's sake, King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" Here again is seen the burden and hope of apostolic preaching. It is a future life by a resurrection from the dead. He adds, verses 22 and 23, "Having obtained help of God, I continue unto this day, witnessing to both small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come: that Christ should suffer, and that he should be the first that should rise from the dead," etc. Not only is the resurrection the apostolic burden and hope, but he affirms the same things were the theme of the prophets and Moses: the hope is one. Not an intimation thus far of the notion of entering the holy of holies—heaven—at death, or at all; it is the hope of the resurrection. He has shown us that was "the hope of Israel," as well as the hope of the gospel; and chap. xxviii., 20, in his bondage at Rome, he saith, "For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain."

But we will now see whether Paul does not with equal clearness state the hope of the gospel in his epistles. 1 Corth. xv., 12–19, "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there is no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen . . . . then is your faith vain . . . . then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished," i. e., they are lost out of being—there is no hope for them; for, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." That the apostle has reference to the hope of a future life by a resurrection is clear from what he saith at verse 32, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus [exposing my life] what advantageth it me if the dead rise not?" Plainly affirming he had no hope of going to heaven at death, and that he had acted a foolish part in hazarding his life at Ephesus, if there is no resurrection. Such a course would be folly indeed; rather "Let us eat and drink," if there is no resurrection, "for to-morrow we die," and there is no hope beyond that. Such is the apostle's conclusion, if there is to be no resurrection of the dead. But this reasoning is both absurd and false, if he could or would go to heaven at death.

But again, Paul saith, Rom. viii., 23, after speaking of the groaning creation, "And not only it, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting [to go to heaven at death? No, but] for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body;" not its dissolution at death. He adds, "For we are saved by hope; but hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth why doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it." And what does the apostle affiam he and the Christians of his time were "waiting for?" Answer, "The redemption of our body," that is, for the coming of Christ from heaven, and the resurrection. This will be clearly seen by comparing what he saith here with Phil. iii., 20, 21, "Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body," etc. Here is no ground for mistake or doubt. Paul was not expecting to go to heaven at death, nor at all; but he was looking for Christ to come from heaven—not when his vile body should go to corruption, but when the time should arrive for it to be fashioned like to Christ's glorious body, which is not till the resurrection. This is further confirmed by his language in the same chapter, where he tells us how he labored and suffered, "It by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead;" verse 11. How unlike is all this to the common idea of an entrance into heaven at death. The hope of Paul is thus distinctly stated; and it is the gospel hope, and demonstrates that modern Christians are as ignorant of what that hope is as the pagans themselves. In fact, the theology of these days has substituted an immortal soul for, or instead of, Christ, and hence a hope of going to heaven at death instead of a future life by a resurrection from the dead at the last day, as Christ has promised. A fatal mistake, this, by which Christ is robbed and dishonored, while death is crowned "Prince of Peace," and as the door into heaven! Christ, however, declares himself to be the door, and affirms that those who climb up any other way are thieves and robbers. He is "the resurrection and the life;" without him, and without that resurrection which he has promised at the last day, there is no gospel hope of a future life or immortality. Let men beware how they attempt to approach the holy place into which Jesus, our High Priest, has entered. That is no part of the work of a Christian even to attempt an entrance into heaven at death, or any other period. Paul states again, 1 Thess. i., 9, 10, what the work is that we have to do: "For they themselves show what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead," etc. Here the work of a Christian is distinctly stated; and it is no part of his business to be looking, expecting, or hoping to go to heaven at death. Let this be remembered.

To the Colossians Paul saith, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory:" not at death, but when Christ returns "from heaven;" it is then, and not till then, that we will appear in glory.

Once more, Paul, in writing to Titus, states clearly what is the gospel hope, and what is the work and duty of Christians in relation to it. Titus ii., 11, 13. Among the things which the grace of God teacheth is "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts"—to "live soberly . . . . in this present world"—aioni, age, or time—"looking for that blessed hope, and"—kai, even—"the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." Here we see what the gospel hope is. It is the return of Christ in his glory, at which time he will raise the saints who are dead and change the living ones, as Paul clearly states, 1 Thess. iv., 16, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first," etc.; also, 1 Corth. xv. 51, "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment . . . . at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed," etc.

Thus Paul's testimony is uniform. It is the hope of eternal life, by a resurrection from the dead, at the return of our Lord Jesus Christ in his glory. If no resurrection, no hope; if no return of Christ in glory, no resurrection; then all who have died are perished out of being, and will live no more forever. In all this there is nothing to sustain the fable of going to heaven at death. No: men must wait till our High Priest comes out of the holy place where he has entered, even out of heaven itself. If he never comes out, our hope is vain, and we perish.

We will now see if other apostles are in agreement with Paul on this subject. 1 Peter i., 3, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again to a lively hope," or a hope of life, an immortal life—"by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." Here we see the resurrection and the life subsequent to it; and dependent upon it is the gospel hope. Following that is "An inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you"—in the hands of him whom God raised up from the dead, and who, as our High Priest, has entered heaven, or the holy place. In his hands is the inheritance reserved, "ready to be revealed in the last time," in the hope of which Peter saith, "Ye greatly rejoice, though now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness . . . . that the trial of your faith . . . . might be found unto praise, and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ:" i. e., when he shall come out of the holy place, or, from heaven. Peter adds, v., 13, "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace"—favor—"that is to be brought unto you at" [death? No, but at] "the revelation of Jesus Christ." Thus we see to what the gospel hope has reference, and when it is to be realized; not at death, but at the return of Christ from heaven. So again Peter expresses this matter clearly in Acts iii., 20, where he saith, God "shall send Jesus Christ . . . . whom the heavens must receive [or retain] until the times of restitution of all things which God hath spoken," etc. Thus, turn which way we will, the great truth that the gospel hope is "the return of Christ from heaven and the resurrection of the dead," meets us in full view. Alas, that men should turn off their eyes from it to deify death, and steal a march to heaven by means of the King of Terrors!

Let us turn to one more witness on this subject. 1 John iii., 2, 3, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when" [we die? No, but when] "he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Surely we shall not be like him at death; for he has his resurrection and glorious body. Death, then, is not the point of time John speaks of. No; it is when he shall appear, when he comes out of the holy of holies, "from heaven!" that is the gospel hope; and John adds, "Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure;" that is the effect of this hope; its tendency is to promote holiness. Such is the character and influence of the hope of the gospel. Let all remember this truth, and lay it to heart. Men professing the hope of the gospel, who are not made Christlike by it, have reason to call in question the reality of their hope. If we hold the hope we have been speaking of in theory, the greater will be our guilt if we do not let it have its practical result on our hearts and lives. Again, we repeat the apostolic affirmation—"Every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he"—Christ—"is pure." No other standard will answer. How much reason have we to bewail our past shortcomings. Let us hasten to God, through our High Priest, while he is yet in the holy of holies, for that mercy which shall blot out our past sins, and enable us for time to come to walk as Christ also walked, that when he shall appear—come out of the holy place—we may meet him with joy, and receive the crown of life.

DEVIL: OF EVIL.

JUDGE HALSTED'S RESPONSE TO "D.'S" LAST.

WE give a short article to close the discussion, on our part, on the preposition de. In subsequent articles we will proceed as we have before proposed.

We are glad that D.'s second article was published at this stage of the controversy. We are very glad to learn that the Professor to whom D. appealed "believes in the annihilation of the wicked, that there is no hell, etc., and, so far as D. knows, believed exactly with Judge H. on the subject of a personal devil." We begin to think that D. himself, if not already, is fast becoming a disbeliever of such notions.

D. thinks he has found a better way to get devil than we have proposed. If he has we have no objection, provided it be not a personal devil. His better way, if he could get through in it, would come out just where we do. He says the Anglo-Saxon word for evil is efel, or yfel, or hyfel. He thus gets evil; but how does he get d'efel, defel, of evil? We want the of. He thinks we need not go to the Ital. or Lat. to get the of from the preposition de; for he says: "What need is there of going to the formation of a mongrel word, when all the sister languages have the same word devil in a form of spelling exactly cognate to the one which our learned friend would make?" But still we ask, Where does the d in devil come from; and what does it mean? Sound the e in devil like the e in evil, and the meaning of devil is at once suggested. We think the d in devil means of, de evil—d'evil—devil—of evil. Does D. agree that devil means of evil? If so, and if he can find de, or d', or d, for of in one of the "sister languages," and should prefer it to the Latin and Italian de, we have no objection. But he has not told us whence he would get the d—of, to make devil,—of evil I have said, "the Latin and Italian de." The Italian is formed from the Lat.; and some of its words are the exact Lat. words. And the Ital. i is sounded e long, "like ee in sleep," says Graglia; so that the Ital. di is sounded like the Lat. de; and there can be no doubt it is the Lat. de. And the Lat. de—of, answers our purpose just as well—deevil, of evil. We have only to strike out one of the e's, and write devil—of evil.

The incompleteness of D.'s answer to our mode of getting devil will be manifest on a reperusal of our second article. D. says: "The judge makes del from de il, which the Professor told him could not be done." Again, he says: "But what value have his quotations if del is not from de il, but from di il?" D. put his whole argument on the assumption that del is not an abbreviation of de il. Now we submit that our quotations show conclusively that del is an abbreviation of de il—of the. It is not disputed that il is the: and the Italian, to make of the, does not strike out the e and write dil for di il, but strikes out the i and writes del for de il. True the professor told us that del is not for de il; but we prefer the authority of the written language. And D., after having read what we said in answer to the Professor, contents himself with falling back on what the Professor had said, and with using the words, "if del is not from de il, but from di il." Will D. or the Professor tell us by what process they will get del from di il? Again, i is the nominative plural of il—the, and dei—of the, is the genitive plural. Why does not the Italian write dii for the genitive plural? The two vowels ii could be put together as well as the two vowels ei; yet the genitive plural is written dei—of the. And so in the genitive singular, according to what the Professor had said, the Italian should be written dil for de il; but the written language is del for de il.

D. says he "adduced the Professor's written affidavit." Did he really get the Professor to make oath in writing that del is not for de il? If he did we have only to say that we prefer the written language to the Professor's affidavit.

If, after the quotations we made, D. will still insist that the Italian does not use de in connection with its definite article to express of, and make of the in the genitive of both singular and plural: if he will still insist that (il being the) de il is not of the, and that del is not a contraction of de il; and that (i and gli being the nominatives plural of the definite article masculine), the genitive plural dei and degli do not express of the, we must be content to let him enjoy his opinion, and to argue for it as long as he pleases.

Again, to show further the incompleteness of D.'s answer. In his first article he said, we must get devil either from dell' evil, or from di evil, and said, "Let him choose the one most fitting, and it will not give him his devil by any legitimate method of contraction." We did not take dell'. D.'s "error," which we pointed out, was the reason why we did not; but took del, the genitive singular of il, formed by de il; contracted to del; and think we got devil by a legitimate method of contraction from del evil; and for this we refer to our first reply. And as to di evil, the alternative D. gave us, we showed that di is written d' before a vowel, making d'evil, so that we have only to strike out the apostrophe and we have devil. D. is silent as to whether this is not a "legitimate method of contraction."

D. thinks we fell into as much of an "error" as he did, in reference to lo, a form of the Ital. definite article masculine used before certain nouns. But the difference between his case and ours, we think, is material. He insisted that (as one of the only two ways he gave us) we must get devil from dell' evil, that is, from the genitive of lo and evil; thus denying that devil could be got from del evil; insisting that del, the genitive of il, was not for de il, of the. He did not deny that devil could be got from del evil by a "legitimate method of contraction:" his objection was to our using del before evil, and getting devil by contraction from del evil. Now, this being the question between us, it was not at all important that we should make the distinction between i and gli, the two forms of the nominative plural of the Ital. definite article masculine, and between dei and degli, the two forms of the genitive plural of the same article; our object being to show that both i and gli express the, and that the de before each of them expresses of.

We take il to be the proper Ital. definite article masculine. Graglia says, "il is used before masculine nouns which begin with a consonant; and that lo is used before masculine nouns which begin with an s followed by a consonant, as studio, and sometimes beginning with z, as zelo." From this it is apparent that lo is very seldom used, in comparison with il, and that, as it seems to us, for pronunciation.

True, in our article we gave: "In the plural, i—the and gli—the, are the nominative and accusative of the article il; and dei, and degli of the, are the genitive plural of il, etc." It was not, then, important for our purpose to distinguish between i and dei, from il, and gli, and degli from lo, our object being to show that de is used for of. But when it became important, in order to show D.'s "error" we took the distinction between il and lo in our same article. If D. is satisfied that his "error" was a slip of the pen, we might well be satisfied if, being intent upon the preposition de—of, we had made a slip of the pen in not sooner making the distinction. We will not say positively, that it was with us a slip of the pen, in the proper sense of that phrase. It might very well be that under the circumstances the distinction should be at first overlooked.

WHY WILL YE PERISH?

"GOD so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." John iii., 16.

To mortal, dying men none of all the precious truths of Scripture are so vastly important as that Christ, to consummate the great redemption scheme instituted in infinite love, came into the world to save sinners, and that he faithfully performed the work. Was the Son of God sorely tried and afflicted? The perfect meekness, the unparalleled humility with which he bore all, ought alone to have been sufficient to establish faith in his sonship; but mighty miracles were added. Was he forty days in the wilderness subjected to the gnawing pains of hunger? He had power to convert the very stones into bread, but forbore, being willing in all things to yield implicit obedience to will of God, thereby becoming a perfect example to believers. Did his own people impose upon him vile insults and personal injuries? Legions of angels awaited his bidding, but he patiently suffered and called them not. Did he at last die an ignominious death upon the cross? He freely "gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Was the whole work stupendous? He accomplished it, and offers salvation to a world lying in wickedness and fast passing into the realms of death. The apostles (Paul especially) plainly, urgently, and persistently preached, as a reason for repentance and belief in Jesus, what was not questioned by primitive Christians, viz., that had not the redemption scheme been perfected by the death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ, the race must have perished: and our Saviour himself set forth the impossibility of a future existence except through him, "the door," the "resurrection and the life." Since, then, God has displayed such wondrous love in the gift of his Son, and Jesus such marvellous condescension and sacrifice to bring salvation within the reach of perishing man, how truly astonishing is it that so many thoughtlessly reject it.

Reader, if you are impenitent, did it never occur to you that your persistent refusal to become a follower of Christ is, of itself, a sin? It is so, not only because you thus do despite to the spirit of grace, which you know is ofttimes striving with you in silent, gentle pleadings, pointing out the path of duty; but in rejecting the proffered gift you continually treat with contempt, the merciful provision of the Creator's boundless love. In all matters of business you do those things first which you judge to be most important. In neglecting the acceptance of the offer of eternal life upon the terms proposed—and it is to be had on no other, for you are wholly and absolutely mortal—you virtually affirm its unimportance, or, presuming upon the goodness of God, determine upon the gratification of self, expecting finally to go to Christ just in time to obtain the priceless jewel at no personal sacrifice whatever. To attempt to deceive yourself respecting the value of future life is both futile and dishonest, while the desire to obtain it with little or no effort betrays a supremely indolent, selfish, and beggarly spirit. Were we to faithfully serve God from youth to old age we would but discharge our simple duties as subjects of his creative power, and must still be indebted to him for all that "exceeding and eternal weight of glory" accruing to them who have part in the resurrection at the coming of Jesus. Remember what God has done for you. Remember the humiliation, labors, and sufferings of Christ: his degradation and poverty; how he "that was rich became poor for our sakes" that we "through his poverty might be rich," and then say if this "great salvation" is not of more value than all things else beside. Life and death are set before you. One or the other must be your destiny; the choice is with yourself. To the one you are rapidly tending and must inevitably come; to the other the Son of God has made it easy for you to attain. You may not plead ignorance of the way, for it is so plain that "wayfaring men though fools" can walk therein and "not err." If you choose the better part, "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear," you will be accounted worthy to "appear with him in glory." If you serve self rather than God, you will die as the fool dieth; and when the righteous are glorified you will be left in death as too vile and corrupt a thing to have any place either in heaven or on all the earth. Contemplate well, then, your position; what you are, what the Lord has done and proposes to do for you, and then determine to give yourself entirely to him. God loves you while you yet have no love for him. He has given his own Son, and asks you to believe on him. Believe, repent, obey. Fear not the scoffs of the ungodly. If they point at you the finger of scorn and "speak evil against you falsely," the greater will be your strength and peace from him who has suffered all, who is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," and knoweth how to "succor them that are" tried. Salvation is freely offered: why will you perish?

Stand up! stand up for Jesus:
The strife will not be long;
This day the storm of battle,
And next the victor's song.

THE RABBI'S ADMISSION.

A LEARNED rabbi of the Jews, at Aleppo, being dangerously ill, called his friends together, and desired them seriously to consider the various former captivities endured by their nation, as a punishment for the hardness of their hearts, and their present captivity, which was continued sixteen hundred years, "the occasion of which," said he, "is doubtless, our unbelief. We have long looked for the Messiah, and the Christians have believed in one Jesus, of our nation, who was the seed of Abraham and David, and born in Bethlehem, and, for aught we know, may be the true Messiah; and we may have suffered this long captivity because we have rejected him. Therefore, my advice is, as my last words, that if the Messiah, which we expect, do not come at or about the year 1650, reckoning from the birth of their Christ, then you may know and believe that this Jesus is the Christ, and you shall have no other."

ANTICHRIST.

THE following is from the Prophetic Times: We give it for what it is worth: but confess we have no faith that Napoleon III., is to be the Antichrist. We once thought he might be; but we long since abandoned the idea. Yet, that his dynasty is one of prophecy, and "goeth into perdition" soon, we do not doubt.

NAPOLEONISM AND THE JEWS.

I submit an item contained in a letter from the Rev. Mr. Shimeall, bearing date October 29th. You may not consider it of much consequence, but, as it appears to me, it has a peculiar significance.

Mr. Shimeall says, "I beg to trouble you with the following incident. Connected with the Baptist church are three brothers by the name of Knapp: Halsey, Samuel, and William, all of them in the ministry, and all of them men of extraordinary talent. William, the youngest, now about thirty-three years of age, beside being a general scholar, not only translates and writes, but speaks various different languages, with fluency. He went to Europe to bear witness to the premillennial coming of the Lord, of which he is an able advocate, before the crowned heads, statesmen, diplomats, etc., of the old world, and is now in Jerusalem. Well, with these facts premised, the incident I have to relate is as follows. Having delivered the discourse ('Post-millenarianism 150 years old,' of which I have a copy) in Br. Halsey Knapp's church, in Thirty-third street, New York, he desired me to prepare another on 'The distinction between the many Antichrists and the last Antichrist of prophecy,' etc. I did it, and preached it to his people last Wednesday evening. In it I purposely avoided to state who I believed would be the said Antichrist. When I took my seat, Br. Knapp arose, and addressing the audience, said: 'Brethren, I have a communication to make to you, of which, I wish you to understand that Br. Shimeall, who has just addressed you on the subject of the last Antichrist, knows nothing. This afternoon I received a letter from my brother William, who is now in Jerusalem, and after stating that he had conversed with many Jews in the Holy City, and especially with their learned Rabbi, they all stated, that they as a nation had relinquished all hope of the coming of the Messiah, as looked for by the Gentile Christians, but added, that OUR MESSIAH, will come, and he is nigh at hand. We are now negotiating with him, HE to restore our nation to Palestine, and WE to acknowledge him as our Head, or Messiah; and that person is Napoleon III! Again writes my brother: "You on the other side are greatly misled as to the actual state of things in Europe. Every kingdom, state and nation in old Europe is leavened with republicanism—they are worn out with misrule, war, and bloodshed created by the crowned heads of Europe, and are even now ripe for revolution; and their purpose is to sweep them all by the board and form one vast confederation of nations under one head, and that one head, will be Louis Napoleon!"'"

COMPROMISERS.

To embrace certain doctrines of the Gospel because they are popular, and to reject others taught with equal clearness, because they are unpopular, is in reality to reject the Gospel altogether. You may as well invent your own religion. Many go away from Christ because of the reproach that comes upon them from following in his footsteps. All that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. There is no escaping it, but by denying Christ. Yet how very few are willing to bear it! Most persons yield a little here, and a little there, to soften the asperity of the opposition against them, forgetting that just in proportion as, by these means, they get away from the cross, they get away from Christ. They love Jesus, but not enough to sacrifice social position for his sake. They seek to save their lives, and so, of course, they lose them. These are the days foretold by the prophet, when "men shall be lovers of their own selves, heady, high-minded," "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." Has not this time already come? Are there not many who will not endure the truth as it is in Jesus? Is there not trouble at once, if their idols are touched? How often do ministers confess that they do not preach as close as they would, for the "people will not stand it."—Earnest Christian.

WONDERS IN HEAVEN.—John Newton said, "When I get to heaven, I shall see three wonders there; the first wonder will be, to see many people there whom I did not expect to see; the second wonder will be, to miss many people whom I did expect to see; and the third and greatest wonder of all, will be, to find myself there."

THANKFULNESS.

"REJOICE evermore: pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks: for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." 1 Thess. v., 16–18. "Giving thanks always, for all things, unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Eph. v., 20. "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." Coll. iii., 6, 7. "By him let us therefore offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually: that is the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name." Heb. xiii., 15.

Here is a thankfulness peculiar to the Christian: a thankfulness always to be in lively exercise. This with its associate graces are not plants that grow, or flowers that bloom only in the Summer's sun; they are for all seasons and climes. Of what a superior excellency is God's plan for our happiness than any or all of man's devising. What, to be glad at all times and for all things! "O how shall I feel thus?" says a poor desponding one. We have endeavored to give a clew to this in a former article on "All things work for good." We think the acceptance of truth on this subject will so harmonize our minds to God's government that we shall not only feel it a duty, but one of our high Christian privileges to "give thanks always for all things." The great trouble with us, brethren, is, we are not in the right position. We must hold our hearts, or minds, as we would a sunglass, so that the rays of divine truth can strike upon them fairly, keep them steady in this position, and soon we shall be all aglow: the vital principle will permeate our whole being! The experience of too many makes religion quite too superficial: a creature of passion or feeling; enjoyed socially; not as a life-element of their being. This should not be; indeed, it must not be. If we expect to possess the divine nature hereafter we must have its image here.

"Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed," (or doing: mar.) Gal. i., 25. A. B.

A LOST ARTICLE.

MARATHON, N. Y., Dec. 17, 1867.

BR. STORRS: Many years since I remember to have seen, in some religious newspaper, an article headed "A thousand dollars won, but not paid over."

The circumstance that elicited the article was, that an infidel club (I think in Boston) defiantly offered one thousand dollars for a demonstration that such a personage as Jesus Christ ever existed on earth.

The article of which I speak made out the demonstration past the possibility of a doubt. In my opinion, it was the best thing I ever saw, in so many words. I meant carefully to have preserved it, but by lending or otherwise I lost it; yet, as it cannot seem possible that every one has been careless as I was, I take this method of endeavoring to bring it again to light. If spoken of through some widely-circulated newspaper, my hope is it may be exhumed and brought to light. Some persons preserve the files of their papers; some keep rich articles in a scrap-book. If this article lies hidden in any of these ways, I am quite sure any of your readers will be highly gratified by its reading. And whoever reproduces it will at least be honored by your obliged correspondent,

L. D. TANNER.

P. S.—If you find and reprint the article, I will send you a dollar on receipt of two copies. L. D. T.

DECEPTION.

THAT men are deceiving and being deceived, we think no one will deny if they will compare the popular preaching of these days with the Bible.

A speaker to a large audience in Chicago a few weeks since was relating our Saviour's suffering, death, burial, resurrection, and ascension—concerning which he gave the narrative as recorded in the New Testament, until he came to the ascension. He then remarked that the men of Galilee, looking up beheld him as he arose in the air, saw him go into heaven and sit down on the right hand of God; "and now," said he, "the way to heaven is open." Sinners were exhorted to come to Christ, to prepare for death, and gain an admittance to heaven.

As we turn over the sacred pages in vain do we look for any such exhortation as this. But find, on the contrary, that while they looked up after their Master who was taken from them, a cloud received him out of their sight; and two men told them that he would come again in the same manner he had been taken from them. They did not see him sit down on the right hand of God. But we are told of this part of the matter many long years before the babe was born in Bethlehem. Says David: "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool." Then he would return according to promise and destroy the last enemy, death. So that instead of exhorting men to seek an entrance to heaven we should exhort them to seek for glory, honor, and immortality, and they will get eternal life when the last enemy is destroyed at Jesus' second advent.

"I go to prepare a place for you, and will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there you may be also." Oh! that men would preach the Word, and let the traditions and commandments of men go to the four winds.—Voice of the West.

SOUL, BODY, AND SPIRIT.

"THE soul is a separate and distinct part of man." So some would have us believe. Because, say they, "The Bible recognizes its existence as a part of man." This they say is evident from the expressions, "my soul," "his soul," "their souls," etc. Let us ask Which part of man is it that speaks, when the man says, "my soul?" Is it the body? Does the body talk without a soul to talk through it? If the soul is the active agent, residing in the body as its house, then when the man speaks it must be his soul that does it: hence, it must be the soul that says, "my soul." And if the argument of our opposing brother is good for anything, it proves that the soul has got a soul. But if it still be maintained that it is the body that speaks in this case, then what speaks when the man says, "my body"? Is it the same part of man that spoke before? If the body speaks now it follows that the body has got a body. At this rate we may prove that a man has at least two bodies and two souls: and if each of these is as fortunate in possessing another, unless you tell us exactly where to stop, we do not see but a man ought to be named "Legion." For instead of being one man he must be many.

Because the Scriptures speak of a man's soul, and of his body, to infer that they are parts that are "entirely distinct," is to introduce confusion in our judgment. We might just as well teach that man is made up of four "distinct parts," as of two; for, the Scripture command is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind and with all thy strength." Mark xii. 30. To infer from such expressions that man is composed of several parts, appears to us preposterous in the extreme.

THE DEATH AND APPEARANCE OF MOSES.

IN Dr. McCulloh's "Recast" of the "Credibility of the Scriptures," which we noticed some weeks since on the case of Moses' appearance on the Mount of Transfiuration, which is supposed to prove the consciousness of the human soul after death, he speaks as follows:

There are many objections as to the accuracy of such an inference, for in the first place, as Elijah did not die, but was translated, his reappearance in a visible manner throws no light on the general subject. And there is such a mystery concerning the termination of Moses' mortal career, that his case cannot be fairly estimated by the ordinary phenomenon of death. The account given in Deut. xxxiv. is that Moses ascended to the top of Mount Pisgah, from whence Jehovah showed him the promised land. It is then stated, "So Moses the servant of Jehovah, died there in the land of Moab . . . . and he (Jehovah) buried him in a valley . . . . but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day."

By whom this addition to Deuteronomy was made it is impossible to conjecture. The general opinion of commentators ascribes it to Ezra, but by whomever written, it must have been long after the death or disappearance of Moses, as is evident from two passages in it, the first of which is, but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day: i. e., at some time long posterior to his disappearance. The second passage is still more forcible in the inference: "And there rose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face." This implies at least that many of the Old Testament prophets had already appeared among the Jewish people; for without many such persons had been recognized as prophets among them such a comparison could not have been made.

But under all circumstances of the case, Moses' departure from the world was under conditions of which we are totally ignorant. We cannot therefore consider Moses to have died the ordinary death of other men, and as such cannot admit that his appearance on the Mount of Transfiguration justifies us in supposing that the souls of men in general are conscious after death.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—We are a little surpised that Dr. McCulloh, in taking this position, had not gone a step further and shown the probability that the account of Moses' death is an interpolation. It certainly has evidence on the face of it that it is so. We confess the thought was first suggested to our mind by the Dr.'s quotation of the account. It says, "Jehovah buried him (Moses) in a valley in the land of Moab over against Beth-Peor, but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day." How then did any "man" know how to tell so exactly where he was buried? Most likely, then, no man knoweth of his death unto this day; and his appearance with Elias is pretty good evidence that he did not die, but was translated.

We have not for years claimed inspiration for historical accounts, and hence do not claim for them infallible accuracy. Good men wrote those accounts according to their understanding of them at the time, or from traditions handed down to them from others, and their general accuracy can be relied on; that fact Dr. McCulloh has clearly shown. Those historical accounts cannot command faith where they are clearly contradictory in themselves; nor should we insist on others receiving them as a revelation from God, unless we wish to bring discredit on the Bible itself. As to the doctrines of the Bible as given by Moses, the prophets, and Jesus Christ, and the prophecies, from the same authors, they are entirely another matter. But even for these, we are not to claim that the precise words in which they are recorded, in all cases, are given by inspiration. The inspiration is in the sentiments. Each writer employing his own peculiar phraseology in expressing the thing which is revealed, or the sentiment made known. By disregarding this view we give weapons to unbelief and arm it against all conviction of the value of the Bible itself.

The Bible is a great and glorious light. It is to the moral world what the sun is to the natural world. We do not reject the sun because we sometimes discover a dark spot on its face, or because a dark cloud may hide it altogether for a time; no, nor when it is under a total eclipse, for even then its light is not wholly obscured, and we wait anxiously for its clear brightness to return. So let us regard the Bible: with all its faults, or the fault of those who wrote, transcribed, or translated it, it is the only sun of truth to enlighten our pathway into the future, and teaches us how we may enter into life eternal. Yet we need, also, the Spirit of God as the living atmosphere to breathe in, or the sun itself will shine in vain. The Spirit and the word agree. Here is harmony, and here is life to all who walk in the light of the one and breathe the atmosphere of the other. Let both dwell in us richly; so shall we live forever.

A PLEA FOR SATAN'S LIFE.

BR. STORRS: I have often thought to write for our paper, but as often the thought would intrude, Do not worry our Editor's patience and seek to occupy valuable space in his paper with any commonplace remarks: wait until you have something of consequence to communicate. And now, while the case of that noted personage, the devil, is up for solution, I would like to call attention to facts that exist which have been overlooked. In appearing for his "majesty," as a witness I offer as an excuse that I like to see fair play even in his case. Let all the testimony be adduced bearing on the case, then let the judge decide. Before giving in my testimony, allow me to make a short digression.

I once heard a zealous Methodist lady say that combativeness was a peculiar characteristic of believers in the complete mortality of man. They were always red-hot for argument; she never saw one but what was. Now, if this is indeed so, there must be a natural cause for it, as there is for most other things. The cause, I think, is apparent in the fact, that, inasmuch as they have reason, common sense and the Bible all on their side, in holding an argument with their opposers, other things being equal, they are pretty sure to come off conquerors. Victory serves to elate their feelings, inspires confidence in themselves, and a zeal for the truths they defend, which makes them eager to renew the contest whenever opportunity offers. Certainly defeat does not have that tendency. That victory serves to elate the victors, let me adduce a case from Scripture to illustrate. When the seventy disciples were sent forth (Luke x.), great success attended their missionary labors; and they returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject to us through thy name. They were greatly elated at their success; the Master thought a little too much so; and he administers a gentle reproof; citing an example (which should serve as a warning to them) of the disastrous effects of pride. He says: "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven. Behold I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you. Notwithstanding, in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven."

Now, who or what was this satan, that fell from a high estate in consequence of pride? The poet has it, "Aspiring to be Gods, the angels fell." But we will not bring the poet on to this stand as a witness, inasmuch as his inspiration may not proceed from a reliable source, but we see our Saviour alluding to the circumstance, to warn his disciples against pride, and to teach them a lesson of humility.

But what I wish to call attention to more particularly, is this monster iniquity that has sprung up within the few years past, called spiritualism, or "spiritism," as Judge H. terms it. That there is an omniscient, omnipresent devil, with such powers as are ascribed to him by the popular theology, may not be true; but that there is an intelligent evil spirit, or spirits, called "seducing spirits," "spirits of devils working miracles," that in these times of apostacy, and "departing from the faith," are permitted to hold communion with mortals and practice their deceptive arts on such as will give heed to them, does not modern spiritualism most conclusively show? The besetting sins of mortals, called the works of the flesh, are enumerated by the apostle, Gal. v., 19, 20. Can any of these work miracles? True, he has witchcraft among them; but can this work an intelligent miracle, except as the tool of an intelligent agent? I have hitherto ascribed the juggling tricks of spiritism, directly to his satanic agency; and how else can we account for them? "A tree is known by its fruit." I have no wish to retain this evil personage among my articles of faith; but when I seek to eject him, this obstinate form of "spiritism" stands in the gap and I cannot get him by.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. E. CASTERLINE.

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR.

Our friend's difficulties in "getting by" the devil of "spiritism" is very natural. That that delusion is of a devil (adversary) we have no doubt. There are a great many devils in the world, and they work in various ways: but the existence of the theological spirit-devil is another question, entirely. This kind of devil or satan has no existence in the Bible testimony; but there is not only evil satans but good ones also. The term, satan, if we do not mistake, occurs for the first time in the original of the old Testament, in Numbers xxii., 22. "The angel of the LORD stood in the way for an adversary (literally—a satan) against" Balaam. Here is a good satan. One of these good satans was sent to destroy the wicked Ahab, by being "a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets." The LORD sent him on this mission in righteous judgment on Ahab: nor could that wicked king complain, because these prophets only prophesied as he desired to have them.

Can we wonder, then, if God employs the same agencies in deceiving the "spiritists," seeing "they received not the love of the truth that they might have life"? It is explicitly said, "For this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned (condemned to death) who believed not the truth (that gives life) but had pleasure in unrighteousness." Here is the secret of spiritism. It is sent as a righteous judgment on those who do not "love the truth" that God has appointed "for life." They have chosen to follow the lie of inherent immortality, and adhered to the doctrine of the conscious existence of the spirits of dead men; and that at a time when God was causing a blaze of light on the Life question; but they have rejected that light and resolved to go in their own chosen way, regardless of God's truth; hence he has given them over to a delusion; and as they want, and actually pray for spirits to communicate with them, Ahab-like, God has sent them a strong delusion, not by the ministration of wicked spirits or angels, but angels of his own appointment as ministers to execute wrath on such as prefer lies to truth. On God's part it is a righteous judgment, that all such may perish in their own deceivings, Ahab-like. All "the miracles" wrought among them—if such there are—are appointed in judgment to complete their delusion. So far as any supernatural agency is concerned in the matter it is by holy angels, who are satans to these lovers of lies; and by this means they will be punished with death eternal "because they received not the love of the truth, that they might have life"—Syriac.

We wish not to be misunderstood in these remarks. We are satisfied the greatest portion of spiritism is merely the works of the flesh, and carried on by human magnetism; yet that forms a part of the "strong delusion" to which its votaries are consigned for their hostility to the truth of God. The system is the natural growth of the doctrine of inherent immortality, and a spirit in man that consciously survives at death; ignoring, in fact, the great Bible truth of a resurrection of dead ones; making such resurrection impossible, because useless, and a re-imprisonment of the supposed free spirit. For this corruption of the word of God, the unavoidable punishment is following; and a multitude of devils and satans are engaged in the business; but all the bad ones are of themselves: so that, using the singular number, to indicate the wicked leaders, as a body, they are called "satan," "working with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish;" [that is, who are given up to perish] "because they receive not the love of truth that they might have life."

As to our Saviour's speaking of "the disastrous effects of pride," in his discourse with his disciples, when he said, "I beheld satan as lightning fall from heaven," we think it had no reference to pride. He was certainly encouraging his disciples to work on, and tells them, "I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy," etc. What is embraced in the expression about satan's falling from heaven? We conclude it embraces the assurance that the ultimate triumph of the cause, in which he had commissioned them to act, was certain; it was not a cause that could fail: but in the end all evil should fall and come to an end, as lightning falls from heaven. Capernaum, and other wicked cities which had, or would reject him and his mission, though now "exalted to heaven, should be brought down to hell," not excepting the wicked city of Jerusalem, (which had been exalted to the very gates of heaven), because it had become preeminently satan to him and his cause. It was to fall like lightning from its heavenly condition, and be debased below all other satans, or adversaries: and to be a warning to all the future opposers of Christ and his truth. All these satans are to fall, perish, and be no more. Peter, for a short time, was one of them; so Jesus called him; but he was afterward "converted," and then he "strengthened the brethren," as Jesus bid him do: but the poor "devil," Judas, "fell headlong" like lightning from heaven, "and all his bowels gushed out," and that was the end of that "devil."

The land is full of devils and satans in these days; in church and State. But the time of their "fall, like lightning from heaven," is just at hand: then will the kingdom of God come, and Jesus will have the government of "this world," sitting on the throne of his father David, and execute justice and judgment in the earth; and all these State and church devils and satans will be driven out of the world, as Jesus once, with a "scourge of small cords, drove out all the buyers, sellers, and money changers" out of the temple at Jerusalem. These satans, under the name of "church fairs," "tall steeples," and "popular preachers," will "fall like lightning from heaven:" and these State satans, who profess to love the people, but seek office only to plunder them, will go in the common lightning fall, and sink into perdition together, and the loud "Alleluia" will go up from the redeemed throng, who are forever delivered from these devils and satans who have corrupted God's truth and the people by their abominations.

We have thus spoken plainly, but we believe truly, on these matters. May the Lord give us grace to tread under our feet all these "serpents and scorpions," so that they shall have no "power by any means, to harm" us. It is about time, we think, that the real satans and devils were trodden under foot, and their wicked work should cease. So let it be.

WHERE ARE MEN JUDGED?

THE general teaching is, that God investigates and decides on the characters of men in eternity, or in another life after a resurrection from the dead, while the Bible very clearly and distinctly teaches that he judges in the earth, as the following passages show:

"He is the Lord our God, his judgments are in all the earth." 1 Chron. xvi., 14.

"He is the Lord our God; his judgments are in all the earth." Ps. cv., 7.

"Verily he is a God that judgeth the earth." Ps. lviii., 11.

"He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth." Isa. xlii. 4.

"For when thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." Isa. xxvi., 9.

"I am the Lord which exerciseth lovingkindness, judgment and righteousness in the earth. Jer. ix., 24.

"A king shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment in the earth." Jer. xxiii. 5.

"I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created, in the land of thy nativity." Ezek. xxi., 30.

"And Jesus said, For judgment am I come into this world." John ix., 39.

"Behold, the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth; much more the wicked and the sinner." Prov. xi., 31.

"Now, is the judgment of this world.' John xii. 31.

This testimony is explicit and emphatic, and shows beyond all doubt that God judges in the earth. And there is no passage which teaches a different sentiment—in no single instance is it asserted that man is judged in eternity. We never read of men going into another life, or world, to be judged; neither do we read of judgment after the resurrection state. The resurrection and a judgment after are never associated together. Hence when we read of judgment, nothing is said of the resurrection from the dead; and when we read of the resurrection, nothing is said about judgment except it be an executive one. God judgeth in the earth; now is the investigating jungment; and often the execution immediately follows, as in the case of Sodom, the old world, Egypt, the Canaanites, Babylon, Jerusalem, and many cases that might be named; and when death overtakes the sinner there is no ransom that can deliver him from death's dominion; though as to the declarative judgment, fixing him in that state, it takes place at the resurrection of the just. The wicked dead being left in the state of death, are thereby declared "unworthy of everlasting life;" and so are judged to "remain in the congregation of the dead." Such is the Bible presentation of the subject: and let all men lay it to heart, and realize they are now passing through the trial judgment which is to decide their eternal destiny; and let them learn to live soberly and righteously in this present time, for soon the trial will be over and execution will surely follow.

DR SPEAR'S DEVILS.

THE next point or character brought forth by Dr. Spear is the "god of this world." The Dr. says, "In allusion to his power over wicked men he is called the god of this world;" "and such men are called the children of the devil." I must confess that I am utterly astonished at the interpretation given of this passage of Scriptnre. My desire has been to know the truth, no matter where it leads me; therefore we will deal honestly with the Dr.; and whatever we may say shall only be the convictions we have of the truth, and at the same time for the good of the cause.

First, then, the Dr. presented to us the devil as the "Old serpent," "in allusion to his temptation of Eve;" and although the Lord cursed this serpent to go upon his belly all the days of his life, yet the Dr. presents this same devil to us as a roaring lion, going about seeking whom he may devour. Now he presents him to us as the "God of this world." Well, our desire is to examine and see how much these D. D.'s are to be relied on in their interpretation of the word of God. Therefore our first duty will be to inquire what the apostle is talking about in this chapter, for it is the only instance in which the expression occurs in the whole Bible. The words are, "1 Cor. iv., 4. "In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of those who believe not." First, of what world was the apostle speaking? Second, what was the blindness? and third, what was it they did not believe? We think in answering the above questions we shall understand the whole subject. In order to understand our first question we will go back to chapter iii., 6, "who hath also made us able minsters of the new covenant; not of the letter (or old covenant) but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit (or new covenant) giveth life. But if the ministration of death (the old covenant), written on tables of stone, be glorious, so that the sons of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses on account of the glory of his countenance, which was passing away. . . . For if the ministration of condemnation had glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. . . . Having then such hope we use much boldness of speech, and do not, as Moses, put a veil over our face (as he did) that the sons of Israel might not behold the END of THAT which was passing away," the end of which was Christ." What were these minds blinded to? Paul answers, verse 14, "But their minds are blinded; for until this day in the reading of the Old covenant remaineth the same veil unremoved, because it is done away by Christ." What world, then, was Paul talking about? We answer, Of the two Ages, or dispensations, under the Old covenant, or Age of Moses, and the Age, or New covenant, of Jesus Christ. Now, I should like to know what authority a D. D. has for saying the devil is the god of either the Old or New dispensation? Neither had the devil anything to do with this veil. In Exodus we read xxxiv., 33, "And when Moses was done speaking to them, he put a veil on his face." Why were the children of Israel, with Aaron, afraid of Moses? because his face shone? Was it because the glory of God was reflected in Moses, and the image of God shone in him from being in company with Jehovah for so long a time? and was it for fear they might behold Jesus Christ through him, therefore he veiled his face?

Isaiah speaks of a veil or covering that is spread over all people, xxv., 7. Isaiah also speaks more fully in chapter vi. of the darkness of the minds of those under the first covenant, but he does not charge it upon the devil. The Lord asks the question, saying, "Whom shall I send?" and the answer came, "Here am I, send me." What for? "Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes, lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert and be healed. Then said I, How long, Lord? And he (the LORD) answered, Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant." Isaiah vi., 8, 9.

Here are only three parties brought to view—the Lord, the prophet, and the children of Israel. The devil is left out altogether, and yet the minds of the people were blinded. Paul explains this subject thus: "What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh after; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded. According as it is written, God hath given them the spirit of slumber, eyes that they see not," etc. Here Paul says God did it. And the D. D. says the devil did it. Paul says God did it for a purpose, and that was, that through their slumbering, on account of their blindness, salvation might come to the Gentiles. Well might the apostle cry out, "O, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out." In the Emphatic Diaglott is given the following rendering: "To those unbelievers whose minds the god of this Age blinded, in order that they might not see clearly the glad tidings of the glory of the anointed one, who is the likeness of God." If this be the true rendering, and the whole subject demands it, then Paul's language bears the following construction: If Moses had not put the veil over his face the children of Israel would have seen in the shining face of Moses the image of Jesus Christ, who was at the end of the law. But the God of that dispensation (and not the devil) darkened their minds by causing the face of Moses to be veiled, lest they should behold the glory of Jesus Christ, and the promise of God to the Gentiles be made of none effect. So Paul affirms, "But we all, with unveiled faces, beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord." And all the remnant according to the election of grace beheld in the face of Moses, as in a mirror, the glory of Jesus Christ. Thus, according to our understanding, another one of the Dr.'s "Twenty-one characters" has failed him; for we cannot believe that there is more than one God who rules even this world, and he is not going to leave his power to a beast of the field whom he cursed to go upon his belly all the days of his life.

HOME FROM THE WEST.

THROUGH the kind providence of God, I returned to my home and loved ones on the morning of the 8th inst. I had been away eleven weeks and two days, and journeyed 3,461 miles. My most distant point was Lake City, 1,232 miles from Salem. During the whole trip I was blessed with uninterrupted good health. The kindness of Christian friends in the places where I labored is remembered with gratitude to them and to the Giver of all mercies. I preached eight times in Lake City, twice in Oconomowoc, Wis., once in Milwaukee, four times in New Rutland, Ill., ten times in Jeffersonville, Ind., twice in Newport Ky., once in Covington, Ky. once in Cincinnati, four times in Richmond, Ind.: thirty-three times in all. Besides, I spoke at the funeral of Brother George W. Sprague, in Detroit, on the last day of the year 1867.

Bro. Franke has given an account of our meetings in Richmond, Ind. Leaving that city early on Monday, Dec. 30th, I came to Dayton, Ohio, where I had to wait for a train nearly twelve hours. December 31st I breakfasted in Toledo, and in a few hours more I was in Detroit. I came from there January 3d, and reached Fort Plain, N. Y., early the next morning. Spent Sunday, the 5th, with my parents and other relatives: did not preach that day though invited to occupy Dr. Hawley's pulpit in the evening. January 6th I came to Amsterdam and Albany, and on the evening of the 7th took the cars for Boston, reaching Salem in season to breakfast with my family on Wednesday morning.

Had I deemed it practicable to remain over the 5th in Detroit, my brother would have done all he could to get me a hearing in one or more of the churches. I then thought that it would not be possible for me to so remain and yet do up my visiting in New York in time to reach my Springfield appointment on the 12th. But the event proved me mistaken in this, for I finally managed so as to spend several days with my family before filling that appointment. Still I do not regret having had a Sabbath with my parents, nor the good fortune of having been able to get home a few days earlier than my programme time.

There are some personal references, relating to Cincinnati and Detroit, which I would like to make, but I have not time for them now. This is certain—the doctrine of endless misery is every day falling more and more into disrepute. And for this let us be devoutly thankful.

THE EASTERN FIELD.

DEAR EDITOR: I spent last Sunday, and Monday night with the church in Springfield, preaching three times to large and deeply attentive congregations. Before I commenced my discourse on Monday evening, Mr. Chattaway, a Methodist gentleman, came to the chapel, as per previous engagement with some of the brethren, for the purpose of conferring with me in regard to a public discussion of our differences on the subject of man's nature and destiny. Before we had conversed long, the congregation had assembled to hear preaching; I therefore proposed to Mr. Chattaway that what we might have further to say we should say in the hearing of the audience. He concurred in the suggestion, and so all our arrangements were made publicly. Mr. C. does not believe in the literal resurrection of the dead, and that was one of the subjects to be investigated. But he was also desirous of having the immortality of the soul included. After a not unreasonable amount of talk, pro and con., the following questions were agreed upon:

1. Does reason teach that man is naturally immortal?

The discussion of this question (at my request, for I prefer that the debate shall reach the Bible merits of the subject as speedily as possible) is to be limited to a single evening. Chattaway affirms—Wendell denies.

2. Does the Bible teach that man is naturally immortal?

C. affirms—W. denies.

3. Does the Bible teach the literal resurrection of the dead?

Wendell affirms—Chattaway denies.

The speeches are to be twenty minutes in length, three on a side each evening. At my suggestion, it was stipulated that the debate, in its Bible aspects, should not be terminated by either of the disputants without the consent of the other, unless compelled to do so by a changed conviction as to the merits of the question; but the debate may at any time be brought to a close by the church committee or by a majority vote of the audience.

When I came away from S. on Monday night it had not been decided when the debate should begin, but a letter since received from Br. Ladd, sets it down for Wednesday evening, January 29th. What comes of it the readers of the HERALD will probably be told in good time.

While in S. it was stated to me that the discourses of Sunday had led a number of immortal soul believers to give up their doctrine, and embrace heartily the view that man is mortal and that the dead are unconscious.

I am to preach here to-morrow. My pastoral relation to the church here has been so modified as to leave me henceforth entirely free to occupy the larger field which is inviting labor in every direction. On the 26th inst. I expect to introduce our theme to the people of Cambridgeport. Brethren Warner, Cooper, and Burlen will co-operate in the matter; so also will sister Emeline T. Hobbs, who (as you know) has written me on the subject.

SALEM, Jan. 18, 1868. R. W.

IMMORTAL SOUL.

FOURTEEN OBJECTIONS TO THAT NOTION.

First.—It introduces into the Christian world the mischievous practice of mystifying and spiritualizing God's plain words.

Second.—It involves its subjects in almost impenetrable darkness or fog.

Third.—It brings into existence from this system of spiritualism and mysticism a multiplicity of conflicting creeds.

Fifth.—It substantially sustains and disseminates the serpent's first lie.

Sixth.—It runs its adherents into the inhuman, irrational, inconsistent, and monstrous dogma of eternal torture.

Seventh.—It is the very bone, sinew, and foundation of the doctrine of universalism, and all going home to heaven above at death.

Eighth.—It sustains Swedenborgianism—the theory of the great clairvoyant, A. J. Davis—and the spirit-rappings, or manifestations.

Ninth.—It is a very prolific source of infidelity, bigotry and superstition.

Tenth.—It robs the blessed Christ of the honor due him of giving the dear saints the rich reward of the kingdom, immortality, life eternal, the unfading crown, the eternal weight of glory, and every other blessing connected with the coming of Christ.

Eleventh.—It subverts the gospel plan of salvation given to us by the Son of God, who is its author.

Twelfth.—It supersedes the necessity of the coming of Christ to raise the dead, to sit on David's throne, to judge the world in righteousness, and restore all things spoken of by the holy prophets.

Thirteenth.—It makes God and his Son Jesus Christ the most cruel, hard-hearted, vindictive, tyrannical beings in the universe.

Fourteenth.—It obliges its advocates to wrest the Scriptures and array themselves against the patriarchs, prophets, apostles, and Jesus Christ, who are the foundation of the whole Christian superstructure.

ALL THINGS FOR GOOD.

"And we know that all things work together for good, to them that love God."—Rom. viii: 28.

Here Paul speaks very confidently of a fact, yet does not give us his reasons for this confidence. In 2 Cor. iv. he explains the matter somewhat; and the 17th and 18th verses show a condition attached to the promise. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal: but the things which are unseen are eternal." Now, to get a clear understanding of this subject we must become acquainted with man's real condition, or nature; of God's future purpose toward him; and of the means by which this purpose is to be accomplished.

What saith the Scriptures? "Dust thou art." "Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble." "Shall mortal man be just with God?" His condition as to obeying God. "The carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then, they that are in the flesh cannot please God." Rom. viii., 7–8. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. ii., 14. We only give a few samples of the general statement of the Word on this subject, by which we see that man is truly in a dying state, physically and morally, utterly helpless and undone, in himself considered. But as with the iron, the silver and the gold, in their native beds, unfit for present good, yet intended for some future excellent purpose; so man is intended for an equality with the angels; for an immortal nature. "The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven. As we have borne the image of the earthy, we [believers] shall also bear the image of the heavenly. . . . for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. xv., 47, and on.

A consideration of the means of grace. Man is "without strength;" salvation therefore, and all things connected with it are of God's favor and goodness. Although man cannot do unaided, he can accept of the proffered aid, which is God's spirit shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Lord. This, when accepted, helpeth our infirmities: this leaveneth the whole lump; this subdueth and melteth our will, as heat melteth ice, until all is dissolved, and sweetly swallowed up in love divine.

Will gives us character. "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, in righteousness and true holiness." By yielding to the Spirit, our minds or wills are made new by a suspension of their independent action: and another action produced by the Spirit, harmonizing with the mind and word of God. Will being the natural production of our organism, which is only earthly, the Christian, in the formation of a higher character, and for a higher life, must, of necessity, have self-will to overcome, while in this earthly condition. And as the aid promised to man is for the purpose of forming a spiritual nature, it is not perceptible to our physical senses; hence apprehended by faith, laid hold upon by the higher faculties of our mind; hence, as saith the apostle, "Now we walk by faith;" and, "The just shall live by faith."

As man is dependent on influences foreign from himself for improvement; (which is the case with all things); the more he is reminded of the fact, and brought to throw himself on these outside resources, the greater proficiency he makes, and the stronger he becomes. Hence the truthfulness of our text. By all things working together for good, we do not understand their nature or effects, directly, as such, are changed: earth's joys and sorrows come alike on saint and sinner; but their position, as to character, gives to one a blessing and to the other a curse.

Man having been created for a glorious purpose, as we have seen, all of the divine arrangement, connected with his sojourn here, must have been ordered in harmony, or designed to promote this great end. But in order to have this design accomplished upon us, we must accept it for this purpose; not to do so, subjects one to constant disappointment and trouble. For instance: I enter the cars which run through to New York, and for the purpose of going there, but for rest or social enjoyment. True, I might not be entirely disappointed; yet in the change and bustle incident to travel I should be constantly annoyed, and at last find myself far from home and among strangers.

We are "through passengers;" and God has in all things, through all the way, provided for us in reference to our destination. A constant faith in the perfection and adaptation of the divine arrangement, as the very best the circumstances of our case required, is necessary to the enjoyment of an abiding peace and a growing conformity to our heavenly Father's will. God's purpose toward us, in all things, is, to subjugate us more fully to himself; everything which we receive (by faith) for this purpose promotes this end; but if faith be wanting the carnal mind is acting; and as God's arrangement is to keep this down, and eventually destroy it; here follows a collision, pain and anguish may be the result. O how many grumbling Christians (?) there are, who, to cover their own sin, attribute a great deal to a personal spirit-devil; the changes in the weather, disappointments and trials of various kinds, all originate with the devil. They fail to see God's hand and design in all these, and consequently "many are weak and sickly" among us; murmurers and complainers: instead of "glorying in tribulation," with the apostle. O that men could see that the glory and honor, to which they are called, has never been lost sight of in all the infinitude of the divine government; even the wrath of man shall praise him." Psa. lxxvi., 2. Nought shall be allowed but what shall in some way be productive of blessing to the redeemed host.

The assurances of our text are broad as earth; high as heaven; encourage the strongest faith, even amid the deepest gloom. If it was necessary for our Head to be made perfect through suffering; made perfect by a perfect resignation (for, as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth)," surely it behooveth us to walk in his steps; take joyfully the spoiling of our goods, the defaming of our name; yea, in everything to give thanks; yes, and for everything, too! The faith of the gospel, like the philosopher's stone, has the wonderful power of turning everything into gold. We think this high Christian privilege was what the apostle alluded to when he said, "As having nothing, yet possessing all things: and again "All things are yours." May the Lord give us understanding that we may ever do, and also suffer gladly, for his name sake. Amen.

AN OLD MAN.

WE received a letter some weeks since from JOSIAH CURTIS, Marlboro, Mass., who says he is "three score and sixteen years in life." The following is an extract from his letter:

A few weeks since I was dilating upon the subject of immortality, and a gentleman presented me a book, "Life only in Christ"—"Six Sermons" of yours on the subject. I read it under a promise to return it to him. I did so. Some twelve years since I was told you had published such a book, but never saw it before. I assure you it was a glad messenger to me. The truth it contains cannot be controverted successfully from Bible testimony. On this truth I have stood for twelve years past. Immortality is the reward of obedience: that secures Life in Christ. Jesus said to believing Jews, "Continue in my word, and the truth shall make you free, and ye shall be free indeed." Here is the grand secret. Men do not continue in his word, but trust in human theology. Spiritualism leads men to add to and take from God's word. Jesus saith, "The words I have spoken shall judge you at the last day." This throws overboard all human theology. Take down all separating walls and follow Christ, and you are safe. God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. The glory of Christianity is the pure and lofty action which it communicates to the human mind.

FROM N. M. CATLIN, ESQ.

KINGSBURY, N. Y., Jan. 17, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Enclosed find subscription for the HERALD another year. Consider me in for the new year, 1868.

If valuable ideas and clear thoughts might be estimated by dollars and cents, I should say, being the judge, that in your response to Wm. Glenn, of California, in reference to John v., 28, 29, there may be found, in a short paragraph, the worth of a year's subscription to the HERALD OF LIFE.

I wonder if others see the force of your idea, as I do, that "No one isolated text is to rule in establishing a doctrine; but that the general tenor of the Scriptures and the known perfections of God must determine the true sense of any and every text, and rule us in their solution?"

This thought must have weight with every unbiased and truth-seeking mind; and it establishes beyond controversy a great principle, which must be recognized in reading and harmonizing the Bible.

To illustrate: Suppose a judge or jury were to hear the testimony of twelve witnesses in a given case, and eleven should give positive and uniform testimony upon a certain point, but the remaining witness should be equally positive in opposition to the others. Was there ever a judge or jury that would allow the one witness to overrule the testimony of eleven?

I still confess some difficulty in reference to the meaning of John v., 28, 29; but this must not prevent me from believing that "He that believeth not the Son, shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him," and a host of other scriptures to the same effect. So you may put me down as a believer in Life from the dead only to the righteous.

Truly your brother.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—It is truly cheering to hear from Br. Catlin again, and to learn he is not among the stand-still believers. We would be glad to hear from him often. There is yet a host of rubbish to be cleared away from Bible truth, in order that it may shine in primitive splendor. The hardest part of the battle may still be before us; but He who hath led us thus far will not forsake us, if we follow only as He shall lead. We want Br Catlin's help, and that of every sober-minded, intelligent man, whose judgment, and not his fancy, rules.

FROM RANDOLPH E. LADD.

DEAR HERALD: It has pleased our Lord and LIFE-GIVER to pour his divine blessing upon the labors and sacrifices of his church in Springfield, and we have the greatest reason to say, "See what hath God wrought."

From a little handful of fifteen or twenty, of a few years ago, that united with the settled purpose of granting free speech and to love one another with pure hearts fervently, and to make Christian character and life, and not doctrine the test of fellowship, meeting in a little out of the way hall up two or three stories, often dark, gloomy and inconvenient. It pleased him to put it into the hearts of the little band to make effort to erect a house to his name. The way seemed to open so clearly, and the duty becoming so manifest that it was his will, that with fear and trembling, and yet with confidence that God would bless us, we decided to "arise and build," and the result is that we have purchased a lot and erected a plain, neat, substantial chapel, 36 by 66 feet, and dedicated it to the service of him by "whom we are called," and hope to occupy it till "he comes in his glory."

The wisdom and importance of this effort may be seen in the greatly increased and still increasing interest manifested in the precious truths which distinguish us as a people.

Our Bethel, which will seat between three and four hundred, in the body, is well filled each Lord's day with candid, earnest men and women, many of whom are receiving and obeying the truth. The prospect for doing good by preaching the word of the Lord has not been so encouraging in twenty years in Springfield as it is now.

Another proof of its being "from the Lord" is, the unity and fellowship that prevail among brethren. With few exceptions, the entire Second Advent body of this city and vicinity meet in the Bethel church, and all have felt from the beginning that it was a place of the largest Christian freedom. Our different sentiments do not hinder our unity of spirit. There are few churches where there is greater diversity of doctrinal views than in Springfield, and there are none where more unity and freedom exist. Let us "thank God and take courage" that at last we have found a way to "preserve the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace."

We who hold the doctrine of all the truths of Scripture the most precious, viz., "No inherent or natural immortality, and no future life except through Jesus Christ," may have been injudicious and imprudent in our well-meant zeal to have all our beloved brethren see it just as clearly and as soon as we did. I confess that I have been, and I sincerely regret that I ever caused grief in the heart of any of the "household of faith."

It is a gracious gift to be able to "speak the truth in love." I believe it our privilege to have it, and when it is in our hearts we can utter the plainest truths without wounding our brethren.

We have had Br. Storrs to speak to us on the theme of redemption; Br. Grant and others on the nature of man, and the coming kingdom of Jesus Christ, and the church has grown strong and healthy and vigorous in the truth, and now we have arranged to have a discussion of the vital question of the non-immortality of man. Not among ourselves, thank God; but with a champion on the other side. Our house is to be occupied for several evenings, or as long as it shall be thought profitable, in a discussion of the following questions, beginning Wednesday evening, January 29th:

1. Does reason teach the natural immortality of man?

2. Does the Bible teach that man is naturally immortal?

Jas. Chattaway, of this city, affirms, Br. R. Wendell, of Salem, denies.

3. Does the Bible teach the literal resurrection of the dead?

Br. Wendell affirms, Br. Chattaway denies. Mr. C. is a leading and worthy member of the Methodist Episcopal church, well educated, and confident of successfully maintaining his side of the question.

He shall have every facility for doing so that lays within our power to grant, and he will have a large majority of the people professing Christ to sympathize with and wish him success.

But we are sure that the truth will stand the test. It will not be a strife for mastery, but for Truth. May God give grace to both his servants who engage in discussion.

I am sure that great good will grow out of a calmly, well-conducted discussion of these questions.

Let prayer ascend to God from the hearts of all the saints that men may see "the Truth." For the great and glorious central truth of "Life only through Jesus Christ" for lost and ruined man, is the teaching of inspiration, and the "only Hope."

FROM LUCRETIA B. LAMB.

ST. PAUL, MINN., Dec. 30, 1867.

BR. STORRS: I have long anticipated meeting here some one who believes in life from the dead through Jesus Christ. Not that I had reason to expect arrangements could be made for a public lecture, yet hoped to enjoy an interview with those who understand the gospel in its simplicity, purity and power. When I found Br. Wendell had finished his mission in Lake City, and had returned to Milwaukee, instead of coming up the river, as announced in the programme for his journey, I could hardly be reconciled, and found it more difficult to say, Thy will be done, than I have for many years. I have found none beside my own children, with whom I could have fellowship concerning the crowning doctrines of the gospel. Private discussion I have had with invidulals, which has aroused some of the clergy insomuch that a series of lectures has been delivered to guard against the approach of heresy. The first was on the judgment: the second the hell of the Bible: the third a denunciation of the doctrine of annihilation. I did not hear them; believing from previous knowledge that I should obtain no light, felt it would be a wrste of precious time. Some of my children listened to them; considered them very personal, and supported mainly by assumption instead of truth and reason. I feel to plead earnestly for the professed disciples of Jesus in this growing city, that my Father in heaven would direct to and bless such instrumentality as he pleases to bring the truth before this people; and that the efforts of his professed ministering servants, whereby they darken counsel by words without knowledge, may result in leading them into light. Our Father works in a mysterious way, causing the wrath of man to praise him.

Jan. 1, 1868. A new year opens before us, big with interest. What unfolding of prophetic events will fill the pages of its history, is known only to him who sits upon the circuit of the heavens. What will be its record as concerns us? How speaks the past? Have we, as trees planted in the Lord's vineyard, yielded much fruit? or, when seeking fruit, has he found nought but leaves? Are not these important inquiries? What Christian heart, however sensible of its own deficiencies, does not desire that the new year, on which we have entered, be one of consecration and progress, such as we have never witnessed? While the great work for which Jesus gave his life spreads out before us in majestic proportions, and we hear the sweet voice of the Master saying, "As my Father hath loved me, so have I loved you; continue ye in my love;" can we continue in it and not be faithful workers while we are so especially commanded to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling, with the cheering assurance that God will work in us to will and to do of his good pleasure? What a race to run! And we may engage in it with no uncertainty as to its final result: we do not beat the air.

Fearful and trembling we may be, as we run: still the voice of Jesus brings assurance and peace. Said he, "fear not, little flock; it is my Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." The more faithfully we run, the stronger grows the assurance of success, until we reach the heights of regeneration, overlooking the vale below, and can shout the victor's triumph ere the race is run. The prize for which we run! Here description fails! No language can reach its grandeur as presented to the eye of faith; all attempts at description seem tame and insipid; for eye has never seen it, nor heart conceived its glory. To run in the race for such a prize, we have entered upon the year 1868. What, dear readers of the HERALD OF LIFE, will the unfolded book of life reveal concerning us for this year? Will our names be inscribed there, in company with many placed there through our efforts? O let us gird on the Christian armor more tightly, and according to our means and talents use the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; with forbearing meekness and love; ignoring self, seeking to exalt our divine Head, chiefly concerned that, when he sits as a refiner, he may behold in us his own image reflected. Should our blessed Lord come this year (for which my longing heart cries out, O come) may we be found maintaining a close walk with God. Then shall we be sheltered in the pavalion of the Almighty, while his judgments devour his adversaries. Yours, in hope and love.

S. S. CALL, Newport Centre, Vt., writes that while engaged in settling up his worldly affairs, with a view of leaving for the West, all manner of falsehoods have been put in circulation in regard to him, even by professing Christians; and when compelled to abandon them, only laugh, and say, "It was a good joke." But he writes:

Thank God, it is nearly over, and through the grace of God given me, I have been enabled to triumph, by strict adherance to the principle, that, it is better to suffer wrong than to do wrong. It has made an impression on the minds of people that no amount of preaching, without practice, would ever have done. Now, as I look on the past, what seemed to me a great trial has been so transformed by the hand of the Lord that I can say, Thank God for tribulation also. O, that Christians would bear in mind that practical piety, faithfully carried out, is what the world looks at and judges us by. Profession is worse than nothing and useless without practice. No affliction for the present is joyous, but grievous: but afterward it yieldeth the peaceful fruit of righteousness to them who are exercised thereby. Thank God for light. All things work together for good to them that love God. Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Brethren and sisters, scattered abroad, pray for me, that I may become a faithful laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. Providence permitting, I shall leave here for Eliota, Fillmore Co., Minnesota, in a few days. That will be my address for the present. It has been a great trial for me to give up all for Christ and his cause; and I hope and trust I may be prospered in his work. Pray for me. I am a firm believer in the prayer of faith. How far I shall be able to extend my travels, I know not, but design to go where Jesus leads. Yours in the gospel hope of the resurrection through Jesus Christ, the LIFE-GIVER.

Poetry.

Dare to be True, and do Right.

Dare to do right, dare to be true,
You have a work no other can do;
Do it so kindly, so bravely, so well,
Angels will haste the story to tell.

Dare to do right, dare to be true,
Other men's failures will never save you;
Stand by your conscience, your honor, your faith,
Stand like a hero, and battle till death.

Dare to do right, dare to be true,
Jesus your Saviour will carry you through;
City and mansion and throne all in sight,
Can you not dare to be true and do right?

Children's Department.

A Curiosity.

My Dear Young Friends: I wish to describe to you what was to me a curiosity. The children, at work in the garden last Summer, brought me some half-dozen or so of cells, formed of green rose leaves, the work of a species of wasp, I believe. Cemented as they were, with wonderful precision and care, they showed how the Creator endows his creatures with that measure of intelligence which fits them for their situation.

HOW FORMED.

Six or seven pieces of green leaves, long as your tiny thimble, narrow and oval in shape, and the same number of pieces, perfectly round, about as large as the top of said thimble, the oval pieces so cemented together with one round piece for the bottom, as to form a cell as large as the end of your lead pencil.

THE OBJECT OF THIS WORK.

This was evidently to prepare a place for sustaining the young of this insect, until it should be sufficiently mature to take care of itself.

The cells were half-filled with a substance resembling bee-bread, in each one of which was deposited one egg, and then the remaining number of round pieces, laid in like a tiny pile of plates, at the top.

THE LESSON TAUGHT.

Perhaps I do not need to call your attention to this, as I am well aware that children do their own thinking, and often see further into a subject than we give them credit for; but you will allow me to ask, why it is that our attempts at work are so rude and imperfect until we acquire skill by long practice, while the work of these insignificant and tiny creatures is perfect at the first trial? Is God more mindful of the insect than of the noblest work of his hands?

I might leave the subject with you at this point, and request each of you to solve the problem for yourselves, but will add a few words to direct your thoughts into the right channel.

THE SOLUTION.

All creatures inferior to man have but one transient life, and therewith the measure of skill which their enjoyment and necessities require, whereas man is endowed with capacity for improvement, and choice between good and evil, which fit him to become a candidate for a future life, even immortality, which is the gift of God, and which is brought to light through his Son Jesus Christ.

What, then, shall we say of those who fail to improve the wonderful opportunity afforded them; lead thoughtless lives, and so go down to the dust like "beasts that perish"?

Be wise, dear children, and secure all the benefits offered you; and since, unlike the insect, you are gifted with the power of indefinite improvement, and hopes beyond this transient life, let "Christ, our life" and bright "ensample" be ever before you, your perfect pattern, and the "author and finisher" of your faith. Truly yours,

Riceville, Iowa. Mrs. E. Bennett.

Grandmother's Specs.

"Well, I think that is polite! Grandma expects me to sit still while she takes a nap, instead of telling me stories. How selfish some people are."

As she spoke little Patty looked angrily from the old lady nodding in her chair to the book in her lap, and felt very much injured because she couldn't have her own way. The rain pattered on the window-pane, the wind blew dismally, and the Winter afternoon was fast deepening into twilight. It wasn't a cheerful scene either inside or out, and Patty could not decide whether to cry and wake grandma, or to go and do some mischief. As she sat thinking about her wrongs, her eye wandered to the book again.

"Stupid old pictures, I have seen 'em a dozen times, and am tired of 'em. But there is no other book here, and I mustn't leave the room. I wonder how they'd look through grandma's specs."

Putting the glasses on her little nose, Patty turned a leaf and looked. Dear me, how very odd it was to be sure! A minute ago she saw a cat and kittens on the page, and now there was a picture she had never seen. A sweet, pale-faced lady lay in a bed and was putting a little baby into the arms of an old lady who seemed promising something with a tender yet sorrowful look.

"Why that's the way my dear mamma did when she gave me to grandma, the day she died! Papa told me about it," cried Patty, very much surprised. Wondering what had come to her book, she eagerly turned over another leaf and there was a new picture.

This was a still more curious one, for the figures seemed to move. The same old lady was teaching the same baby to walk, so kindly, so patiently; and the baby seemed to love her dearly, for it ran to her with eager, tottering little feet, and laughed with delight when it was safe in her motherly arms. Several other pictures showed the good old lady caring for the same pretty baby in many ways; watching over it when ill; tending, teaching and amusing it; taking many steps for it, thinking, working and praying for it, and devoting herself to it as faithfully as any mother.

Next came pictures showing the baby a little girl and the old lady still older, but as kind as ever. Judging from the pictures, the child was rather a careless, selfish little girl, for she seemed not to obey, and to leave many things undone. One of these pages showed this child running away and getting lost, because she was bid to do something she did not like; and the old lady was seen going after her and bringing her back and forgiving the naughty little girl. Another was where the child appeared to be nearly run over, and the old lady saved her, but was much hurt herself.

When Patty saw that, she looked very sober, and the pettish expression left her face, as she said softly,

"Yes, that's what grandma did for me; and that's how she got so lame. Poor grandma, I wish I'd got her cane for her when she asked me."

The last picture showed the old lady lying dead and the child, a tall girl now, standing by her with a very sorrowful face that said as plainly as words, "Oh, why wasn't I kinder to her when she did so much for me!"

As Patty looked, her eyes grew so dim with tears that the page was all a blur, and, putting up her hand to wipe the drops away, the spectacles fell off and the strange pictures vanished.

Patty sat quite still for several minutes, thinking of all the unkind words she had said, the duties she had neglected, the loving acts she had left undone, and all she owed dear, kind, patient, grandma. She covered up her face and cried till her little handkerchief was quite wet, so full of repentant sorrow was she. Suddenly she thought, "It isn't too late, she isn't gone, and there's time to be good to her now. What shall I do to show her how sorry I am?"

Wiping up her tears she looked about the room and saw plenty to do. The fire was nearly out, because Patty had forgotten to tell the maid to bring wood, and had lost grandma's cane, without which she couldn't walk a step. Patty's playthings lay all about in the untidy way that troubled grandma. The yarn she had been asked to wind, hung in a tangle on the chair where she had left it. Grandma's knitting had dropped down and the stitches were half out, for Patty did not bring the spectacles, and without them she could not pick them up. Grandma's shawl was spread over Patty's doll, and the poor old lady had quietly gone to sleep and never asked for it though she looked chilly even in her nap.

"How naughty I am to be lazy and selfish and disobedient. Dear grandma is too kind to punish me, but I ought to be punished hard," said Patty, shaking herself and wondering how any one could be patient with her.

Full of good resolutions she fell to work and turned over a new leaf at once, not waiting a minute or saying "I'll be good by and by." She cleaned up her playthings, found the cane and leaned it against grandma's chair all ready for her. She put back the spectacles, picked up the stitches and laid the knitting on the old lady's lap; she folded the shawl softly round her, and grandma gave a little sigh as if the comfortable warmth pleased her. Then Patty built up a grand fire, swept the hearth, and sat down to wind the yarn.

Darker and darker it grew outside as night came on; harder blew the wind and faster fell the rain, but within it was bright and warm, for the firelight danced on the pleasant room, the placid old lady sleeping in her chair, and the busy little girl patiently winding the tangle, till the great smooth ball was done. Very thoughtful was Patty's rosy face as she sat so still; but that half hour did her much good, for she thought what she was and what she hoped to be, and prayed a very sincere little prayer that she might keep her resolution and be a faithful, loving child to grandma.

When the old lady woke, she rubbed her eyes and looked about her, feeling as if the good fairies had been at work while she slept. And so they had, for the best and loveliest of household fairies are Love and Cheerfulness. Patty had drawn up the round table and quietly set out the little tea tray, with the tiny cups and plates, the old-fashioned spoons and funny plump teapot that grandma liked; had toasted the bread herself, just brown and nice, and got everything ready in the most cosy, tempting order one can imagine.

"Well, deary, what does it all mean?" cried grandma, smiling with surprise and pleasure, as she looked about her.

"It means that I am trying to be a good child and do my duty as I haven't done it for a long, long while;" and Patty put her arms round grandma's neck with a little quiver in her voice that went straight to the old lady's heart. Standing so she told all that had happened, and grandma laughed and said it was only a dream. But Patty was sure it was true, only the spectacles wouldn't show any more of the strange pictures when she tried again.

"Never mind, my darling, they show me the dearest, most dutiful of little daughters, and I'm quite satisfied," said grandma, kissing the childish face, which from that day made summer sunshine for her through the winter of old age.—Merry's Museum.

Letters and Extracts.

From J. O. Orr, M. D.

Bond Head, C. W., Jan., 1868.

Br. Storrs: There is nothing in the whole arguments (as used by the orthodoxy party), so perfectly preposterous as that saying of theirs—"The immortal souls of the wicked will be weeping and wailing and gnashing their teeth in an unquenchable fire throughout eternity." Now, you are very well aware that mortal men can accomodate their systems by slow degrees to an incredible quantity of arsenic, opium, alcohol, tobacco, stramonium, strychnine, and many more of the deadly poisons of the vegetable, as well as the mineral kingdoms, with apparent impunity. Well now, when poor mortal man in a period of seventy years can thus smile, by cautiously partaking of those causes of death to so many unfortunate victims, is it possible that any rational being—upon mature reflection—could credit for one moment the orthodox notion that an immortal being, I care not what its shape is, could make any, nay, the slighest preference, between a Jupiter of phosphorus and brimstone on fire, or a Saturn all ice, the temperature of our Northern pole? And himself alternately in the centre of each for one thousand millions of ages? He would enjoy the one as well as the other; they would each form a beautiful desert, because immortality cannot suffer, it is unknown to it, as regards feeling it; and beside this, in such an intense fire, as I have heard preached from the Methodist pulpit of this village, I would like to be informed where does the atmospheric air come from to enable their demonized victims to wail? for, there can be no sound emitted from the vocal organs of man when deprived of air. Nor could there be in the lacrymal glands of the orbit moisture sufficient to form a single tear; for, let them remember that the heavens are to pass away; and a new one be created. Our whole solar system, if one vast body of air, would not keep the theological hell going, and feed its flames, for the one millionth of their period of eternal punishment.

Every atom of immortality is imperishable, and not at all ruled by ordinary causes, or submissive to any law but the Creator's. The three Hebrew children in the furnace are a beautiful illustration; only the awful declaration has gone forth, that the people shall be covered with "gross darkness." It is a mystery to me how they can be led into the faith in which they stand, and such a candle before them as the Herald of Life, aided by that inimitable work "The Theology of the Bible, by the Hon. O. S. Halsted." And above all "The two witnesses:" those three are all that are wanting to lead the inquiring and reflective mind aright, whose living soul is not half soled by creeds and decretals.

There is another thought, which I do not recollect you to have adverted to, with reference to the final judgment of God upon the wicked; and that is, the use of brimstone in the purification by fire of this cursed globe. My firm belief is, that the God of love, in whom we believe, particularly manifested that love in the use of brimstone at the final conflagration, so that he might cause the weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth, to be of extremely short duration; for those benighted creatures may satisfy themselves by putting half an ounce of pure brimstone in a small iron pot, placing the pot in an empty barrel, igniting it and throwing over the mouth of the barrel any piece of cloth; let any of them introduce their head under cover of the cloth into the barrel, and but once inhale its vapor, they might never live to repeat the experiment. Blinded, deluded creatures; my living soul, that now addresses you, groans within its mortal combinations for you; ignorant of this plain unvarnished tale.

We must never forget the fact on record, that, "the soul that sinneth it shall die." And yet this poor soul is shrouded with moulded clay or organic matter, in some part of the human tabernacle, so "fearfully and wonderfully made." The theological notion is an object of derision, an object of contempt; there is not one winning feature about it, for it holds the truth in unrighteousness; every word it quotes from the Bible condemns itself. Take for example the church of England's prayer book, and we find the very first quotation ordered to be used at morning prayer throughout the year to be this, "When the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness, that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive." Ezek. xviii., 27. His immortal soul will be saved alive, God's word declares; but the mutilated expounders of that holy book declare that the immortal soul can never die, following Eve's deceiver in the garden, "Ye shall not surely die." Gen. iii., 4.

Many a subject I have assisted to dissect in the dissecting rooms of London, England, and Toronto, Canada, since 1828, but never yet could I get my forceps upon the leg, or arm, of a soul; nor could I discern the smallest trace of one of those "celestial spectres of the mist," amid the unnumbered capillaries, as fine as hairs, which formed their tortuous gyrations before me.

Would that some D. D., or LL. D., would be kind enough to inform us what shape this Platonic phantom assumes; for it has not a vacancy in the whole human system to sojourn in as large as a grain of mustard seed: and a foreign body ever so small, at that, would be very unpleasant in the crystalline lens of Professor Mattison's eye, or any other professor. Their cry would be, intuitively, "Please sir, I have a mote in my eye. Will you be pleased to procure some powerful lens to extract it, as I have been minutely examining myself, but cannot discern it?" The mote is in millions of eyes, and one way in which it can be removed, is by sending to Brethren Storrs and Halsted, who keep no other surgical instrument but the Bible and its aides-de-camp, the Herald of Life, "Six Sermons," and "Theology of the Bible." I am perfectly enlightened by what is taught in those works; and laugh with pity at the opponents to "Life only in Christ Jesus." Adieu forever to all creeds, as unsound in principle and action. From such, good Lord deliver me. Your brother in Christ, as the only Life-giver.

From Eld. E. B. Taft.

Stockton, California, Dec. 17, 1867.

Br Storrs: I have not sufficiently recovered from the effects of my sickness to be engaged in hard mental labor; but I do what I can when opportunity offers. I am much pleased with the course the brethren took to sustain our paper. It is doing a great work wherever it has been introduced; and this is ample reward for all sacrifices that have been made. It is just what our scattered brethren need to encourage them to go on in the good fight of faith. Other places have similar trials to what we encounter here.

The great revivalist "Knapp" came to this place about ten days ago, and brought all his power to bear against our young brethren in the faith of the gospel. But he learned that they were not to be frightened, being planted upon the firm "Rock of Ages." One would be surprised to see the unfair dealings of those who claim to be servants of the most high God, who doeth all things uprightly, if it were not of so common occurrence. I have often seen them driven to the wall, where they were unable to bring a "Thus saith the Lord" to controvert the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," and getting mad, they used nothing but abuse against their opponents.

Dear brethren, pray for us, that we may meekly follow our Saviour, being faithful to our God, faithful to ourselves, and faithful to all with whom we may mingle. May God bless, keep, and guide you, in your great work, is my earnest prayer. Yours in the Gospel hope.

From Edward Kelley.

Hinesburgh, Vt., Jan. 6, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I wish you, with all the readers and lovers of the Herald of Life, with all my heart, a happy new year. I am glad, and my heart rejoiceth in the truth as it is brought to my mind from week to week in the Herald of Life. Yes, I feel to praise God every day for his goodness in giving his people a light to cheer them in this age of religious darkness; and it appears to me that it is a state of wilful blindness on the part of the professed teachers of religion. Words fail me to express my delight in the beauty and harmony there is in God's word when resurrected, as it were, from the heaps of filth and error which designing or ignorant men have heaped upon it for ages in the past. I pray that it may be the object of the Herald to continue to excavate and bring to light the truth of God's word, that men may hear it and be blessed by it until the Life-giver comes. May the good Lord bless, sustain, and comfort the Editor in his labor of care. I hope it may be my happy lot to meet him in the new earth ere long.

I would say a word or two to express my thanks to Hon. O. S. Halsted for the book he has written, giving to the Bible student so strong a fortification. I think it is the best book that has appeared during the last fifty years. That is, as a help to the understanding of the Scriptures. I believe it is the right book in the right time. I would not sell my copy for a hundred dollars, if I could not replace it with another.

From Bryon Ambrose.

Deerfield, N. H., Jan. 11, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I take this late opportunity to accept your liberal offer to furnish a copy of Judge Halsted's work, and the last thirty-six numbers of the present volume of the Herald of Life for three dollars.

The paper is to be sent to Epsom, N. H. He is a new subscriber, who was probably unacquainted with our doctine until I showed him a copy of our paper, and explained, as well as I could, some of the simple and consistent principles of "Life only through Christ."

It is gratifying to learn that there are intelligent persons who are honest to admit the absurdity of some of the so-called orthodox doctrines as preached by popular preachers of the present time, and to confess that what we consider Bible truth looks more reasonable; this too in spite of the prejudices of the times, and the influences of early training and preconceived ideas.

Let us who profess to have learned the better way meekly stive in love to show others the truth as it is in Jesus; that they too may see how "He might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus."

The law, or justice, claimed the animal life of the race of sinners; but God, through Christ, offered a spiritual, a resurrection life, to those who comply with the conditions of the gospel. How plain, when considered in this light, is the mission of Christ. How inconsistent to teach that the law demands the eternal torment of the sinner, his second death (a resurrection to die again) or even his eternal death.

Death, simply death, i. e., the loss of the only life that the impenitent sinner possesses, or ever can possess, the law does claim, and I think the law must have it, and that, too, without any "substitution." This penalty can never, in justice, be remitted, not even in the case of the penitent sinner. He can live again only by a spiritual life imparted by Christ.

From Abraham Pennell.

Honeoye, N. Y., Jan. 10, 1868.

Br. Storrs: Three numbers of the Herald of Life came to hand in due time. Please accept my thanks for the favor. I have not seen a number since the first one that was published. I then thought I would not subscribe for it, as I so deprecated divisions among the already shattered ranks of advent believers.

Why is it that the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus cannot learn almost the first lesson of Christianity, viz., love to one another, and the liberty to think and speak what they honestly think the Bible teaches?

One important feature of history, since the days of Jesus Christ, is this want of charity, and narrow bigotry and intolerance. Some very wise ones, or self-esteemed so, would get some portion of truth, then set their stakes, blind their eyes, close their ears, contract their benevolence, so that if any should get another ray of light or truth he will be likely to be branded with the name of infidel, sceptic, heretic, and all the other hard names imaginable. This is the spirit that has shed so much of the blood of the saints; and though it does not appear quite as cruel as formerly, it is the same spirit of evil.

So, on the whole, I suppose you may be justified in the course you have taken, being shut out from all public discussion of the doctrine you hold of "No life out of Christ." In regard to the truth of this, I am not so clear, in all respects, as of some other doctrines, and if it is not true, I shall love and respect you still.

I have been long in full belief that many of the human family would never see life: and so far as I can see the only wicked that will be raised from the dead are those who live and die under the light of the gospel; and the uncertainty of this is increased by the fact that I cannot see by what rule, or law, or principle this is done, if done at all. There seems to be some Scripture to favor it, but all the weight of argument (aside from two or three texts of Scripture), from reason, revelation, and our knowledge of God and his moral administration, are decidedly against it. I confess, I have never investigated this matter as much as I have some others. I think I occupy a position to receive light, and shall be glad to do so.

I was interested in that part of the discussion which your papers, sent me, contained upon the personal life of the devil. I have tried to get ministers to help relieve my mind or remove the difficulties in regard to the theological devil of these last days. I believe it is a kindred doctrine to that of the eternal hell, his locality, and at the same time he is all over the earth.

But I cannot go into a discussion of this subject now. I have written more than I intended. Please send me the paper, and find enclosed two dollars to pay for it. Yours, in the love of truth.

Note by the Editor.—We know not who was so kind as to send Br. Pennell the "three numbers" of the Herald: we did not, but we thank the friend who did. Br. P. is one of our old friends; but it has been a long time since we have heard from him before, and we did not know that he was still alive, but are glad to find him so; and rejoice to find he is still after light on the great thing of God's blessed word.

John Lightfoot, Phœnix, R. I., writes: I like the Herald of Life very much. I never took any interest in religious matters before I saw your paper, some nine month since; neither could I take any interest in the Bible; but now I can. I hope the paper may be supported, and the doctrine it teaches spread on every side, as I think it is the most truthful and scriptural there is. I will try to get more subscribers. Yours, in hope of future life.

Eld. J. Lewis writes from Mode, Ill., that he has had a successful meeting at the Patton school house—preached ten times: met with much opposition from certain preachers, who tried to keep their flocks from coming to hear, but did not succeed to their minds. Some of these preachers were stirred up terribly by the "short hell and the long one," and declare if they did not believe in a lake of fire and brimstone, where the wicked go at death, they would never preach again. Br. Lewis says there is a great searching of the Scriptures to see if anything can be found against the Life views. But the more they search, the more the truth prevails. He feels determined to battle on: wants help very much: wishes Br. Walter, or Br. Osborn would come to his aid: says, the people have hard times to live, but he does not mean to forsake them; and he asks, if brethren cannot come to help him, that he may have a plenty of tracts to scatter in the many new places where he is called to go. His post office is, Mode, Ill.; and he desires the friends of the tract cause to feel the importance of that work.

Mrs. D. O. Hopkins, North Foster, R. I., writes: I prize your paper highly. I have circulated it and your tracts some, and have seen the good effects. A number are inquiring into the subject, and the more light they get, the more they love and praise the Lord. The more I am opposed, the stronger I grow. Every sermon I hear against it strengthens me, and shows the weakness of their position. I praise the Lord for the light. Yours, in hope of Eternal Life.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

THE FIRST AND SECOND COVENANTS.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

"IN that he saith a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away."—Heb. viii. 13.

While the Scriptures speak of several covenants that God has at sundry times entered into with men, there are two, in particular, that we design to dwell upon in our remarks. These, for the sake of distinction, we call the covenant of works, or universal obedience to positive law, and the covenant of grace, or of the free favor of God to sinners, or transgressors of law. These are the two grand divisions of God's proceedings with men. Each of these covenants has had a gradual development, with various modifications.

THE COVENANT OF WORKS.

This, in its first development, was with Adam. It granted to him dominion over all the earth, and the various animals, etc., which were made; also, the free use of all the fruits of the earth, with one exception. It was a covenant in which life and death were involved.

This covenant was renewed through Moses with Israel, when they came out of Egypt, with amendments adapted to Israel, as transgressors. From Adam to Moses there was no covenant of works, strictly speaking—that is, none of like character with that made with Adam. Paul tells us, Rom. v., 13, 14, "For until the law [by Moses] sin was in the world; but sin is not imputed [unto death] when there is no law;" [of works, as was the case from Adam to Moses;] "nevertheless, death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression;" thus showing that men after the offence of Adam till Moses, had not been by God's appointment, under a covenant of works was "added because of transgression, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made," or in whom the covenant of grace was to be ratified. See Gal. iii., 19. In this law covenant, or covenant of works by Moses, every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; Heb. ii., 2, and there was no escape, except by resort to the continual offerings appointed in this covenant, without which the nation would have become extinct, by the penalty of death.

This covenant was especially contained in the "ten commandments:" see Ex. xxxiv., 27–29. "And the Lord said unto Moses, Write thou these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel. And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread nor drink water. And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments. And it came to pass, when Moses came down from Mount Sinai with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with him." See, also, Deut. ix. 9–11.

The covenant when made with Adam, was without promise of forgiveness, on any conditions; or there was no remission of sin: one offence was death; hence, to the covenant with him there was no sign or seal of blood. When this covenant was made with Israel, in the day they came "up out of Egypt," as forgiveness would be extended in certain cases, the blood of animals was used as a sign, and it must be used as often as any sinned—that is, the covenant, which was broken by every transgression, must be renewed, or the transgressor must suffer the penalty, death, "without mercy." Heb. x., 28. This covenant was truly the "first covenant," for the reason assigned, viz., It commenced with Adam at his creation, but is especially called the first to the Israelites, as made with them when they came out of bondage in Egypt, and as having reference to another to be more fully developed in the future.

THE COVENANT OF GRACE; OR, THE "NEW COVENANT."

This was first intimated to Adam, Gen. iii., 15, after he had broken the covenant of obedience, or works. It was done in these words, "It" [the seed of the woman] "shall bruise thy" [the serpent's] "head." A work not to be done by Adam, but by one whom God in his favor or grace, would send into the world. A work, therefore, not depending upon man, but upon the mercy and faithfulness of God.

The new covenant was explicitly opened and confirmed with Abraham in this language: Gen. xii., 2–3. "And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing. And I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." And again, chap. xvii., 3–5. "And Abram fell on his face: and God talked with him saying, As for me, behold my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations. Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram; but thy name shall be Abraham: for a father of many nations have I made thee." Also, chap xxii., 18. "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

The covenant of grace had a further and more complete development and ratification by our Lord Jesus Christ, at his first advent; and from these new developments and this new mode of ratification, it is, by way of distinction, denominated "a new covenant;" not because now for the first time made known, but for the reason we have just assigned. These new developments were the subjects of prophecy, by types and explicit declarations.

This new development was ratified by the blood, or death of Christ. Jesus saith, Matt. xxvi., 28, "This is my blood of the new testament," [covenant] "which was shed for many for the remission of sins." That is, as we understand our Lord, the wine, used in the Supper, represents his blood which was shed for many in confirmation or ratification of the new covenant—for that is the meaning of the word testament—a principal promise of which is, "the remission of sins." This blood ratifies all the promises contained in the new covenant, and makes them certain to faith: because "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all,"—to demonstrate his love and give us a sensible proof of it, and of his purpose fully to carry out all the promises he had made in the new covenant, or covenant of grace,—"how shall he not with him freely give us all things?" Especially all things promised in that covenant: See Rom. viii., 32.

These promises are summed up from the prophets, Heb. viii., 10–12, thus, "I will put my laws into their minds,"—or I will adapt my laws to their understanding—"and will write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people: I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." Blessed promises: such as we could hardly have credited, had not the author of them demonstrated his sincerity by giving "his own Son" to seal this new covenant by his blood or death.

This covenant is one of recovery from sin and its consequences; or, a covenant of redemption. Christ's blood is not only the sign, seal or token of it, but he is the mediator of it: Heb. viii., 6. "But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises." Better promises than the first or law covenant, which was originally without a mediator and without any promise of forgiveness; and even in its secondary form, i. e. by Moses, there was nothing in it, of itself, that could ever "take away sins," see Heb. x., 11. "for by the works of the law" covenant "shall no flesh be justified:" see Gal. ii. 16.

Under Moses, the law covenant, which was the secondary development of the covenant of works, the ratification was by the blood of animals. When any one sinned he broke the covenant; and hence must invariably renew it by a new victim; thus these offerings were continually being offered; and yet were unavailing, only so far as they pointed the mind of the offerer to the new or "better covenant;" and they must repeat their offerings as oft as they sinned, because the first victim being dead, its blood was no longer regarded when once the offerer had sinned again, and thereby broken the covenant. But the blood of Christ is a living sign or token of the new covenant; and coming to God by repentance, that blood ever stands as the sign of God's promise to forgive sins; as the rainbow is a sign to the world that however wicked men might be, God would not so impute their sins as to destroy them by a flood. So the blood of Christ is a living token or sign that God has covenanted to forgive sins, and to remember them no more. Christ ever lives to plead that covenant and its seal in our behalf, when we come to God by him, to seek the forgiveness promised in the covenant; but "it was not possible that the blood of bulls and goats [that is, it was not possible for the law covenant, or covenant of works] to take away sins:" Heb. x., 4; yet now we have "boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way;" viz. the new covenant, or covenant of favor, sealed by the blood of Christ, which blood ever stands as the token God has given that he will accept us when we come in faith of the covenant promises. Believers, therefore, are "to hold fast the professions of" their "faith [in the covenant of grace] without wavering," because, "he is faithful that promised:" See Heb. x., 15–23.

"We have redemption through [the new covenant, the sign of which is] his blood; the forgiveness of sins" being the covenant promise; the truth and certainty of which is given us in the sure sign or token; which token is one of encouragement and assurance to all that come to God in faith of that covenant. This covenant, when made with Abraham, God ratified by an oath—"For when God made promise to Abraham, because he could swear by no greater, he sware by himself, saying, Surely blessing I will bless thee, and multiplying I will multiply thee. And so, after he had patiently endured he obtained the promise. For men verily swear by the greater; and an oath for confirmation is to them an end of all strife. Wherein God, willing more abundantly to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us." Heb. vi., 13–18. Strong as was this evidence of the purpose of God fully to carry out his promises, yet to make it more evident to our minds, he, in the fulness of time, "sent his own Son into the world," to add the highest possible testimony, the blood, or death, of that Son, so that men should be without excuse if they did not believe in God's covenant promises. The testimony or evidence is complete and perfect; so that God may well say—"What could have been done more, that I have not done?" Isa. v., 4. We may see, then, that faith, or belief in these covenant promises is essential to our actual participation in them, or our success in claiming them; "For he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. xi., 6. "Without" this "faith it is impossible to please him." And why should he be pleased with any man who will not exercise this faith? seeing God has promised; then confirmed those promises by an oath; and, lastly, gave his own Son to die, or shed his blood, to ratify all his covenant promises. Surely, there is a propriety in our Saviour's saying, wherever his gospel should be preached—"He that believeth not shall be damned;" or condemned. What greater evidence can be given to elicit faith—or a confiding state of mind—than what God has given? Most emphatically can it now be said—If men hear not, and believe, with all that God has done to produce faith, they would not believe if a million Lazaruses "rose from the dead." They disbelieve because they love sin, and are resolved at all hazards, to practice it; they reject the covenant of grace and fall under the "sorer punishment" than the curses of the covenant of works, and perish because they will not come to Christ that they might have life. Let all, then, beware that they do not despise the new covenant, or neglect its requirements: "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses: Of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace?" Heb. x., 28, 29.

This covenant is between two parties—God and men. To be binding on either party, it must be agreed to and ratified by both. In the covenant of grace, or new covenant, God, being both our Creator and the offended party, has a right to propose the terms of reconciliation. This he has done, and himself sealed, or ratified it, on his part, by the blood or death of his Son. To complete this covenant, with us, it is important that we should assent to it and ratify the same by the seal or token that God has appointed which we understand to be "faith unfeigned." As we have seen, without faith—which is a relying upon and confiding in all God has promised—it is impossible to please him; and "he that believeth not shall be condemned"—he shall have no part in the covenant of life by Jesus Christ. Till, then, we ratify this new covenant by a hearty faith, or reliance on its provisions and promises, we cannot claim its benefits. By ratifying it we are pledged to the performance of the requirements of the covenant on our part. Thus the new covenant becomes mutual. This covenant is one of grace or favor to sinners; not of license to sin, as some professed Christians seem to think, but a covenant to deliver us from sin, both as to its power, dominion and consequences.

The grand question with each of us is, Have we by an act of sincere faith become a party to this new covenant, and do we accept Christ as the one Mediator of it? As to rites and ceremonies, or outward forms, they all avail nothing. "Faith that worketh by love" is the only thing that can bring us into the new covenant and make us partakers of its benefits.

"VICARIOUSLY."

THAT is—by substitution; or, in the room and stead of another; or, in the place of another. Christ did not "die in our room and stead" in the sense usually intimated, and as most professed Christians understand it, if, indeed, they understand what they so often affirm, which may well be doubted. He did die as the manifestation of God's love to the world: or, to seal with his own blood, by his death, the new covenant; and thus demonstrate—sensibly, visibly—the truth and certainty of all the promises contained in it. In this view his death, his blood, was the most astonishing display of God's love, truth, condescension, faithfulness and unalterable design not to disappoint the hopes or expectations of any who enter into the covenant; for, if "God spared not his own Son, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things," which in covenant he has promised? If he withheld not the greater, yea, the greatest of gifts, will he withhold anything else he has promised? Faith answers—No.

In a qualified sense it may be admitted that "Christ died in our room and stead;" though that phrase is an unscriptural one. The Apostle, 1 Cor. v., 7, calls "Christ our passover," and says, he "is sacrificed for us." Here is a reference which opens the whole subject. The pascal lamb did not die "in the room and stead" of the first born of Israel. See Ex. xii. It is true, if the pascal lamb had not been killed the first born of Israel would have been smitten with death, when the Lord slew all the first born of Egypt; not, however, because the lamb did not die in their room and stead, in the popular sense of that phrase; but, because Israel, would, in that case, have disregarded the covenant of God to preserve their first-born. Hence Paul says, Heb. xi., 28, "Through faith he kept the passover, and the sprinkling of blood, lest he that destroyed the first born should touch them. That covenant stipulated, as its ratification on the part of Israel, that the blood of a lamb of the first year, without blemish, should be struck upon the lintel and two side posts of their houses, on that night when the destroying angel should pass through Egypt. God covenanted with Israel that wherever the blood appeared he would pass over that house and not slay any of its inmates. He said, "The blood shall be to you a token (or sign) upon the house where you are; and where I see the blood, I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you," etc.

Here we see in what sense the lamb died in the room and stead of Israel; it died that its blood might seal the covenant not to destroy them; and that blood was, to Israel, the token of the covenant and of God's faithfulness; and it was to God the token of Israel's faith in God's promise. In like manner is "Christ our passover," and "is sacrificed for us," and when God shall pass through the earth, in judgment, to execute the curse on wicked men; all those who have accepted the covenant in Christ's blood, or covenant of God's favor, containing the forgiveness of sins, so that they are to be remembered no more, then all such will be spared, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him."

To talk of Christ's dying "in our room and stead," in the sense of a substitute, or as theologians say "vicariously"—to pay the debt—we conceive, is unscriptural and highly dangerous, as it naturally leads to Universalism, or Antinomianism; that is, a faith without obedience, or a licentious faith; and it leads, also, directly to infidelity. The Scriptures are positive in their testimony that Christ "died for all"—that he tasted "death for EVERY MAN," etc. Hence, if the popular theory be true, universal salvation is inevitable; antinomianism may safely stalk abroad in all its pollution without fear; and infidelity is safe whatever course it takes; its votaries may abhor the injustice of substituting an innocent being for a guilty one, and declaim with all their power against such an act, as alike contrary to reason, justice and civilization; yea, they may denounce it as worse than savage cruelties and abominations; and yet if it is true that Christ did die in "the room and stead" of sinners, these infidels are just as safe as any other class of men. It is vain for the common theorist to talk of his death being conditional; or his paying our debts conditionally. The Scriptures present his death in no other light than absolute, unconditional, and without reserve, for the purpose for which he died; if that was as a substitute or vicarious victim for sinners, all must and will be saved.

But if he died, as we maintain, to ratify or seal the covenant of grace, on God's part, then it is manifest his death secures no man's salvation, where the gospel is preached, who who does not enter into that covenant. The pascal lamb died for the whole family but the household were not thereby exempt from death, unless they sprinkled the blood on their doors and kept within the house during the night. If it had died in their room and stead, according to the popular theory of substitution, the destroying angel could have had no claim on them in any event; that debt was paid, whatever their crime, and well may "indulgences" be sold to sinners.

The blood, or death of Christ is the living sign, or token of God's love in offering us his covenant of grace, and is the seal of it: when we acknowledge that seal by active, obedient faith, that works by love, the covenant is mutually ratified, and the parties can claim of each other all that is stipulated in it. We are pledged to love, honor, and obey him; to walk as Christ walked; and God is pledged to be our God, to give us his Spirit, write his laws upon our hearts, adapt them to our understanding, be merciful to our unrighteousness, our sins and iniquities remember no more, and to crown the whole with immortality, eternal life. The man who will not enter into this covenant, dies. He who does ratify it, and then wilfully breaks it, also dies. See Heb. x., 26–29

THE DEVIL.

DR. SPEAR'S FOURTH CHARACTER OF THE DEVIL.

ANOTHER form of satanic strategy is that of transformation, or false appearance. Paul says, this is a common device of the devil; for satan himself is transformed into an angel of light.

This, we presume, is one of the strongest expressions in the Bible. But when we look at the facts brought forth in the Bible in relation to all these expressions, it is impossible to harmonize them in relation to a personal spirit devil. The Doctor started from this chapter with his first character, that was the oldserpent. He finds in 2 Cor. xi., 3, Paul alludes to the serpent in the garden. "But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve, through his subtilty." He then finds the words, "old serpent" in Rev., and jumps to the conclusion it is the same serpent; and, therefore, when Paul speaks of satan transforming himself into an angel of light, it must be the self same individual.

Now in order to arrive at a proper understanding of what the asostle means, it is necessary to have a proper understanding of the times and surroundings in which the apostle lived and wrote. It was a fact, that there were false apostles in those days, vieing with Paul, for his position in the church. It was a fact that Cephas and James were teaching and mixing up the law of the old synagogue with the doctrines of Christ, which Christ and his apostles calls the synagogue of satan. It was a fact that Paul did have to bring forth his revelations in proof of his apostleship. It was a fact that through false teachers many corruptions crept into the church of Corinth, even saying, the resurrection is past already, and thereby overthrowing the faith of some.

Now, taking all these things into consideration, it is no wonder the apostle should break out and denounce these characters in the manner he did. Even the church at Galatia was infested with these Judiasing teachers. Although a Gentile church, off in Asia Minor, yet these teachers were intent on compelling these disciples to be circumcised, according to the law of Moses. Hear what Paul says: "For I testify again to every man that is circumcised that he is a debtor to keep the whole law. Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law: ye are fallen from grace." Gal. v., 3, 4. Here was another gospel, teaching justification by the works of the law. Of these persons, Paul says, Christ profited them nothing; they had fallen from grace.

We find this same subject under consideration in the Corinthian church. 1 Cor. vii., 18, 19. And this same Jewish law is under consideration in 2 Cor. iii. and iv. chapters. In the chapter under consideration, 2 Cor., vii., Paul says, "But I fear lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve, through (the devil? no: but through) his subtilty (his wisdom, cunning), so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." "For if he that cometh (among you) preach another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel which ye have not accepted, ... nevertheless ye might well bear with me" (margin.) Here is the character, the coming one among them, who the apostle was afraid would subvert their minds from the simplicity of the truth, and with his subtilty deceive or beguile them. Whoever this was, Paul calls him adversary or satan; and he came as a minister of the gospel of light. In the 13th, he calls them "false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into apostles of Christ; and no marvel, for satan himself is transformed into an angel of light: therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works."

Here, according to the apostle's language, he is evidently speaking of some of the adversaries of the gospel in his day with whom he was contending, led on by one leading person of influence, whom he denominates as satan, or adversary; and if he can put on the garb of Christ to advocate his other gospel, no marvel that the lesser lights should follow in his footsteps.

The whole history of the labors of the apostle Paul, show that his great controversy was with the Jews and Judaizing teachers. In the Acts we find him making his defence touching his faith upon the resurrection of dead ones. In Romans v., and onward, we find the same controversy. In both Epistles to the Corinthians, and in Colossians ii., 8, he says, "Beware lest any one delude you (lead you captive) through philosophy and vain deceit, which belongeth to the instructions of MEN (not satan) to the rudiments of the world, and not to Christ." In v., 2, he brings in again this law of circumcision. 16, "Let no one judge you in food, or in drink, or in respect to feasts, or new moon, or Sabbaths, which are a shadow of things to come, but the body is of Christ." . . . . "If, then, ye are dead to the world, with Christ, why as though living in the world, do you submit to the directions." So great was the opposition of the apostle to these Judaizing Christians, that he cautioned even these Colossians against them.

We have now met all the points of individuality brought forth by the Doctor, although he says, he found twenty-one names by which this devil is made known in the Bible. He failed to produce them in his sermon. In our next article we will endeavor to answer our own questions, Who is the devil? What is the devil? and where he came from?

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. JACOB GRIM.

THE JUDGMENT SEAT OF CHRIST.

"WE must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ." 2 Cor. v., 10.

Some, in quoting this text, seem to think that the word all has reference to all that have ever lived from Adam [illegible] child that shall be born. They say, "Does not the text read all?" Yes it does. "Very well, that is enough." This seems to be the extent of their reasoning. But the question is, Who are the we? Does not the Apostle use the term we and us in almost every verse in this chapter? Read verse 7. "For we walk by faith, not by sight." Does all the world walk by faith? Verse 8. "We are confident," etc. Have all mankind the confidence in what the Apostle had? Verse 9: "Therefore we labor that whether present or absent we may be accepted of him." Do all the world labor to be accepted of him? Verse 10. "For we must all appear," etc. Now, does not the pronoun we in verse 10 refer to the same persons as in the preceding verses? And when he says, "we all," does he not mean the church of God, whom he was blessing, and none others?

But one may say, read the remainder of the verse. Very well, "That every one may receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." Now again: Does the expression "every one," refer to all, to everybody? We think not. It may seem so from the expression "good or bad." We will take this position, That a thing may be bad, but not necessarily wicked; a thing may be wrong but not necessarily sinful; a person may believe in the natural immortality of the soul. We think it is wrong; we think it is bad; it has a bad influence; it paves the way and lays the foundation to purgatory, to spiritualism, and eternal torments; and is not this bad enough? But are there none to be saved who believe in the immortality of the soul, and who have never seen the glorious light of life only through Jesus Christ? But we will make this plainer as we proceed.

The question is asked, and the statement is made, "What is the necessity for the Christian to brought into judgment? their sins are pardoned; they stand now justified before God; they will not be brought into judgment." Now, on the other hand, "the sinner who believeth not is condemned already." John iii., 18. What necessity is there of bringing him to a future trial, judgment, when he now stands already condemned? This statement is as broad as the other is long. To whom then does the text refer? We answer, The Christian.

Let the Apostle himself explain in his first letter to the Corinthians; commencing chapter iii., 11. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon. Now if any man build upon this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble: every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." To whom does the "every man" in this text refer? Does it refer to the whole world? Nay, verily. If so, universal salvation is true; and there is no avoiding the conclusion. Read verse 14. "If any man's work abide, which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss; but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." All then will be saved. All who? "Every man" who builds on this foundation. But some will suffer loss; and some receive a reward: some will have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom. Then let us give all diligence to add to our faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge;" etc., that the privilege may be ours.

This judgment seat of Christ, then, is a special judgment on the church, and none others. It is the judgment which David in Psalm i., 5, says: "The ungodly shall not stand in the judgment (a definite judgment), nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous." But is there, then, no judgment for the wicked? Yes, there is. Christ saith: "Now is the judgment of this world." John xii., 31. Now we are on trial; to-day we are on probation. The judgment that awaits the wicked is an executing judgment. God executed judgment on the old world, on Egypt, Pharaoh and his host, Sodom and Gomorrah, condemning them with an overthrow, setting them forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire; Jesus saith, "the Father hath given him authority to execute judgment also." The Apostle saith: "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction." What time is there between his being revealed in flaming fire, before they are punished with everlasting destruction? About as much, I apprehend, as there was when Lot and his family were urged by the angel from Sodom in haste, least they should be consumed; which destruction, Jude tells us, was an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire; not that they are now suffering, but that the effect of the fire is eternal. Is there, then, time to raise all the dead and bring them to this judgment seat for trial in the manner most people believe? I can conceive of none: for "he is revealed in flaming fire taking vengeance," etc. But some may say, "this resurrection and judgment is not till after a thousand years." But the everlasting punishment takes place when he comes to be glorified in his saints. The Apostle in another place says, "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first." Is there a separation here at this time? If so, one kind of judgment is past; one class is judged worthy of life; and the other judged unworthy of life; and this takes place at his appearing "who shall judge the quick and the dead, at his appearing, and his kingdom." 2 Tim. iv., 1. What need is there then of his raising them (the wicked) up and judging them over again, at the end of the thousand years, if the wages of sin is death? When he has already punished them with an everlasting destruction?

Is God again to raise up the antediluvians and Sodomites, and all who sleep in their dusty beds, whom he hath already judged unworthy of life by his not raising them when he raised his saints, to see if he has made a right disposal of them and kill them again? If it was left to poor revengful man, who delights in the torment of his enemies, it might be. But if the Lord be God, let him be God; and not attribute to him such folly and revenge; for I am sure it must be that, for it could not benefit the individuals themselves, neither could it the saints. If the wicked are raised to be tormented and killed again, it must be for God's own benefit and his own pleasure; yet he has said, "I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him; for he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust." And, while we were yet sinners, he sent his only begotten Son to die for us, that we through him might live.

C. A. HASTINGS.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.

HOW IS HE JUST?

THE word of God declares that "Justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne." The margin reads "establishment." If these are the establishment of the throne of God, then God must never deviate from the strict execution of it in his administration. But if he can himself provide for the ruined race, and justify the already condemed, it is very well. This he has done. This requires compliance with the terms of the gospel. If there is no compliance, then he must execute what he has threatened. If that is executed, anything more would be unjust. He has a right to make his own law, and a penalty should be proclaimed which, in his wisdom, corresponds with the nature of the position of the subject with regard to the government which is implied by the law. This being done, he is bound in justice to observe—to do so much and no more. His judgment is sustained by the justice of all he does. Hence, when he punishes it is the infliction of that condition upon the transgressor which in the promulgation of the law was threatened for its violation. That would be just. To go farther would be injustice. To repeat the application, worse than injustice. To apply another not known to the individual, because not contemplated in the law, still worse. God's law forbids the infliction of punishment the second time for the same offence.

ILLUSTRATION.

Achan was threatened with death for violation of a given precept in the law, under the administration of Joshua. Well, he might have complained of the stringency of the law, or the severity of the penalty, but he could not speak against the justness of the sentence.

Suppose the same man made alive and dying again for his same sin by being burned, what might he say?

W. S. CAMPBELL.

A WISE ANSWER.

IT is said of Dr. Dwight that a young minister once called upon him and asked his opinion as to the best method of treating a very difficult and abstruse point in mental philosophy, upon which he was preparing a sermon: "I cannot give you any information upon the subject," the doctor replied; "I am not familiar with such topics."

Alas! most pulpit efforts in these days of strife for popularity are too much like that which the young preacher racked his poor brain to prepare for. Tradition, superstition, and wild fancies are clad in the fine dress of oratory, and paraded before hungry seekers for the bread after life, to the exclusion of those gospel truths through ignorance of which men are perishing. The day cometh, and is nigh at hand, that "shall try every man's work of what sort it is."

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 29, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

ARTICLES "TO BE CONTINUED," ETC.

IT has long been a rule with us that such articles cannot be inserted till the whole series is received, unless by special agreement with the writer; or, if we insert the first, the words "To be continued," or "No. 1" are omitted, leaving it optional with us whether to insert others or not. This course we have found essential to our office as an Editor, else we may be obliged to insert matter which our judgment tells us is unsuitable to the design of the paper.

A person sends us a long article marked "No. 1," on a topic which has been exhausted, half a century since; that is, on a stale and wornout theme, with not a new idea in it, and he thinks it may prove as interesting to many of our readers as the question of the devil's personality. That may be his opinion, but it is not ours. The discussion on the last-named topic has come up with at least the character of freshness, and it is directly involved in the questions for which the HERALD OF LIFE was established: while the question he designs to introduce has no such claim, and leads to a long and protracted repetition of arguments, pro and con., that may be found in print by some of the most able polemics of the last and present centuries, such as Toplady, Rowland Hill, and others, on the one side, and John Wesley, John Fletcher, of Madely, Adam Clarke, and others, in England, on the other side.

If our readers wish to go into such a subject they can find all that need be said on it in the writings of those men, without our filling our columns with virtual extracts from them by men of this generation.

The subject, as our friend wishes to present it, is only an attempt to revive what was long ago denominated "HOPKINSIANISM:" that is, "Natural ability, but no grace." "The natural ability makes him responsible, but the highest degree of it is not sufficient to enable him to attain to heaven, but leaves him without excuse. The lowest degree of grace is sufficient to save a man, but is never imparted to any but the eternally elected." Such is substantially the theory sought to be revived after having been dead for nearly fifty years, worn out by its own corruptions.

In the name of reason and truth, how is a man "without excuse" for not doing a thing that he is denied the requisite means to accomplish? If grace is essential to do it, and that "sovereignty" denies him, even the "least degree" of it; and the being who gave him his natural ability knew that by it no man could ever attain eternal life, and at the same time determined never to give him a particle of grace, where does the responsibility rest but on the "sovereign" himself? The failure is clearly a designed failure, on his part. Put the subject syllogistically:

Natural ability can never enable a man to attain to salvation, but it leaves him without excuse for not attaining to it.

The least degree of grace will enable any man to attain to salvation, but this is sovereignly denied the largest portion of men.

Hence, the fault of their not attaining to salvation is not their own, but their sovereign's.

Such is the blasphemous result of the theory. We have travelled through it, and understand the whole subject quite as well as a new beginner. If any one is disposed to spend his time and talents in an attempt to galvanize such a dead carcass, let him do it; but let him do it at his own expense. We have no time nor space to waste in helping to revive such a dilapidated theory. About fifty years ago we heard one of these admirers of the theory we are speaking of, say, "Calvinism is good new milk, but Hopkinsianism is clear cream." So our friend seems to think, who wishes to put it in our "churn;" but as a half century has passed since it was "skimmed" we do not think it wisdom in us to try the experiment of getting "butter" out of it; we are persuaded it belongs to the age that is past; and we choose to forget the things that are behind and reach forth to the things which are before; we think the "doctrines of devils" are about "played out," and Christian men had better employ their time, pens, and tongues, in presenting the character of God in such light as shall attract (not repel) thinking men to his service; for God calls upon all men, saying, "Look unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved, for I am God, and there is none else." It is quite too late in the day to say, in the face of such a call, that for the largest portion of men there is no salvation; "they are not, and never were, in a salvable state;" thus virtually "making God a liar," and as practicing duplicity toward his creatures.

There are those who delight to talk about the "sovereignty of God," and "sovereign grace." Did they ever think such expressions are never found in the Bible? that they are, like the phrase "immortal soul," purely of human invention? Yet such is the fact. They are all phrases invented to serve human creeds; and, as employed, are both worthless and pernicious, because they lead to presumption on the one hand, and a total inactivity on the other. Many of those who fancy themselves the objects of this "sovereign grace" think they are safe, at all events; while others feel equally safe in waiting till "sovereign grace" shall give them the fancied irresistible movement to heaven, or salvation. Such is the very "natural" tendency of such notions of the sovereignty of God. We believe in God's sovereignty; but we believe, also, that it is directed by wisdom, truth and love toward all the creatures he has made, and not as a self-willed monarch, who is a mere tyrant.

Hopkinsianism may be illustrated by a figure. It represents a mighty windlass, placed up in heaven (called "soverignty.") To this is attached a strong rope (called "grace.") At the end of this rope is a hook (called "unconditional election to salvation.") The rope is let down, and the hook attached to the elect person before he is born. After he is born he may lie, cheat, steal, swear, get drunk, or commit any and all manner of sins: no fear, the hook is in him; he must come by and by, as soon as the windlass begins to turn. He may struggle ever so hard to prevent its raising him, but go he must: he may do the worst of deeds after he is started off; that makes no difference: on he goes. That is Hopkinsian "sovereign grace."

Now let us see how it treats the "non-elect." They have "natural ability" to go where the "elect" are taken; but instead of the windlass a ladder is let down, such as Jacob saw in vision, only care is taken that it shall not touch "the earth," nor come quite within the reach of "the non-elect"—it is designed to "leave them without excuse," because they have "natural ability" to climb the ladder; i. e., they have hands and feet which they might use to go up, "if they would." But lest, possibly, some one of them should make the experiment, the ladder is kept at a safe distance out of his reach, and he is taunted with his obstinate wickedness for not using his "natural ability" to get up. If the ladder was let down to the earth, like the one Jacob saw, that would be "grace," not a bit of which must the reprobated class have. Yet they are to be "damned" for not using their "natural ability to get to heaven."

The true Bible theory is "a ladder with the foot on the earth and the top in heaven." That is the true doctrine of sovereign grace. Without this provision no man could reach eternal life. The ladder being in this position free-grace calls upon all men—to "the ends of the earth"—"every creature"—to accept the glorious medium of communication into eternal life. That life is a free gift, but is given, actually to none except such as improve the ability and grace which God has given to every man: "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men," etc.: and "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him" (the ladder, i. e., takes hold of it), "should not perish, but have everlasting life." Of course, every one who believeth in Jesus will take hold of him as their only hope: they will cling to the ladder, and when they reach eternal life, they will give the praise to the ladder and to him who provided it, and think only of the medium through, or by means of which, they were enabled to reach the glory.

Such is the doctrine of free-grace and free-will. Free-grace has done and is doing its part; and if free-will refuses to unite with it, it will find no windlass to force the will, or drag them into life; and Jesus will say, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life."

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

WE have more than once referred to Dr. McCulloh's "Recast" of his work on "The Credibility of the Scriptures;" a work of much study and labor, and of great general usefulness. He is, we believe, a member of the Methodist E. Church, or at least of their congregation.

We confess not a little surprise that he rejects, altogether, the authenticity of the account of the rich man and Lazarus; and says it is "no parable but a revelation, if it was made by our Lord." He asks, "But did he make it?" He answers as follows:

"I do not believe he did; for in the first place, it is not even said in Luke's Gospel that he made it, but is abruptly introduced without having any connection with what either precedes or follows. In the next place, it is contradictory to what our Lord said in John v., 28, 29, that the dead would be in their graves until summoned by him to come forth at the day of judgment. . . . In the third place, the whole scope and figurative language of this so-called parable, applies only to a dispute between the Pharisees and Sadducees; and has no application whatever to the Gospel scheme. Taking all these objections into consideration, we cannot receive this relation concerning the rich man and Lazarus as having been made by our Lord; and regard it as a legend framed by some Pharisee against the Sadducees, which by some accident had got introduced into the rolls or leaves of a manuscript of Luke's gospel that had belonged to some eminent Christian, and under which circumstance it was laid hold of as being an original part of that gospel, by some of the speculative theologians of the second century, to justify an assupmtion of the separate existence of the human soul after death, for which they could not obtain elsewhere any express passage or text in the New Testament."

It must be confessed that this is an ingenious way of disposing of the case, and getting over the difficulty; but we fear the Doctor would establish a precedent in the disposition of texts which would be laid hold of by all sects and parties, till almost every text in the Bible would be looked upon as doubtful or spurious; and especially can the precedent be urged against the Doctor's position on John v., 28, 29, which is, that that text proves that all the dead, good and bad, are to live again: for surely with all his labor to find a text to match it, in his construction of it, he has utterly failed; and his construction is at variance with our Lord's general teaching on the resurrection, which he everywhere else speaks of as the peculiar privilege of those who believe on him, to whom he pledges his own word and declares it is his "Father's will" that he should "raise them up at the last day."

Such being the fact, and the general tenor of the Scriptures sustaining this position, and Christ never speaking of the resurrection of the wicked on any other occasion, we might say of John v., 28, 29, we "do not believe Jesus ever said what is there recorded. We certainly have the same right to say this, of that text, that Dr. McCulloh has of Luke xvi., 19–31. That this latter text is a "fable," we have no doubt; but whether spoken by our Lord, or the "legend of some Pharisee" which he might have employed against themselves, we will not now pretend to determine: most likely it was the latter, condemning their pride, self-righteousness and unbelief, by one of their own legends, with terrible effect.

QUESTIONS.

1. Have the Gentiles' times ended?
2. Has Daniel stood in his lot?
3. Will Christ come to this earth without observation?

1. The Gentiles' times have not ended; at least, there is no evidence of it.

2. It is useless to speculate about Daniel's standing in his lot till we know what his lot is. We suppose it is his inheritance. If so, he has not stood in it unless all the saints have done so too, which is manifestly not true.

3. Christ will descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God: all the saints will see him, and be caught up to meet him. We do not know that any others will see him; we think they will not; "for the world shall see me no more," said the blessed Jesus.

The answers are brief, but we cannot now give them a more detailed notice.

A QUERY.

DOES Heb. x., 19, 20 quite agree with your view that it is almost sinful for modern Christians to expect admission into heaven at death? Of course this expectation is unscriptural, but I am not quite sure that the analogy of the waiting of the congregation of the Hebrews without the door of the tabernacle and the sleep of the dead hold good.

C.

While the high priest was in the tabernacle, the people were waiting outside, not to enter in personally, but for the high priest to "come out." If overpowered by weariness they fell asleep, while waiting, it did not alter their relation to the high priest, nor the offering he was completing for them: when that was finished they were ready for the blessing to follow; for they slept in a waiting position, and their lamps did not go out for want of oil. Under that dispensation they entered into the holy of holies, not personally, but by their high priest.

So, under the new covenant, we do not enter personally into "the holiest;" but by our representative High Priest, who has entered there for us, "by his own blood." The text Heb. x., 19, 20, reads, "Having . . . boldness (margin, liberty) to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way, which he hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having a high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart," etc.

The expression, "draw near," does not indicate that we are personally to enter into the holiest: our high priest has done that for us, or on our behalf; but while he is there we are to place ourselves "near, in full assurance of faith," that our high priest will, by his own blood, complete the atonement, and return "from heaven," or, from "the holiest," to bless all those who "love his appearing" and "look for him," whether at that time they are asleep or awake.

PUNISHMENT.

THE duty of man is to become God-like. But among many professors of religion, and even ministers of the Gospel, a much greater effort is made to make God like man than to make man like God. This is in harmony with the orthodox faith which is: "We have an Advocate with the Father, who is all the time reconciling God to man," but makes no effort to reconcile man to God. It is also a peculiar trait in the Pagan worshippers to make all their gods like men, possessing human frailties, human passions, and human depravity. Such a god might, with a little coaxing, be reconciled to man. But the account our God gives of himself is, "I am God, and there is none like me." Isa. xlvi., 9. He will indeed punish the wicked; but in his own way; not in our way.

But it appears to me there is no need of erring on this subject, if we keep in mind the adorable attributes of God. If we take only his infinite goodness, and sum up all his requirements of man, and all his dealings with them; we shall find they all mean the good of man. Why then, should we expect an exception in the punishment he lays upon the guilty? There is no exception unless there is an exception in his infinite goodness; and then he is like man; sometimes good and sometimes not good. The last penalty of the wicked is death; not deaths, in the dual number, but death in the singular. And this is good for the sinner; for sin, by its own nature is the parent of misery, and hence, to live eternally in sin is to live eternally in misery; and this is not good. So death is not so much the penalty of the sinner as is generally understood. It is inflicted more as the antidote for the effect of sin. And so the goodness of God is as conspicuous in the death of the wicked as in the salvation of the righteous.

When we read, "Sin, when finished, bringeth forth death," the humanly trained mind, imperceptibly drops on to death as the penalty of sin, irrespective of its consequences. Now sin would not be sin, were it not that it brings evil on the doers of it, and on those around them. We may now understand that the practice of sin brings forth evil, and the end of evil is death; for iniquity will come to an utter end, and not rise up the second time.

And so the penalty is laid on sin for the sole purpose of putting an end to its evil consequences; and, therefore, the greater sinner has no need of a greater punishment than the least.

But God often inflicts punishment on the guilty prior to death. This is good, also, to the creature; for it is inflicted to reclaim him, to the end that he might not perish, but have everlasting life.

But men punish an offender in proportion to the amount of their own spirit of revenge; forgetting that revenge dwells only in the mind of wicked beings, and is strictly forbidden in the Bible. Those who maintain that the most incorrigible sinner is not punished enough by one death, but would have him raised up, and sufficiently punished, and then die once more than divine justice demands; ignore the divine attributes of God, and "have need that one teach them again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk and not of strong meat. For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness, for he is a babe," and is forever making crooked rows in divine theology. But it is difficult for many who have renounced the horrid doctrine of eternal torment to part with the muddy dregs of the cup they have once pushed aside.

To graduate punishment according to the amount of crime committed is man-like; but far from being God-like. He has no scales in which to weigh some men's sins by the ounce, and others by the ton, and then punish them weight for weight.

I care not how much the sinner is punished; or when or where he is punished; only let it be God-like; that is, "very good." But where is the infinite goodness of God in punishing a sinner when it can do him no good to be punished, and do God no good to punish him, and when no good can result from it?

If our friends of the crooked-row theology will have the wicked raised up again, and put again on probation, and whipped into obedience to God, and finally cured, they would evince a more noble trait of frail humanity than they do to wish them whipped without the privilege of repentance.

But we are told that "Divine justice demands it." But divine justice demands the exhibition of divine goodness. When these two divine attributes come in collision with each other, the house is divided against itself, and cannot stand.

But the question may arise in the minds of some, how death is a good to the righteous? When "they have fought a good fight, finished their course, and kept the faith," it would not be good to keep them here for hundreds of years exposed to the evils of a wicked world. Better for them to sleep in peace and quiet, until God shall give them their crowns, laid up for them. And yet their death could not be a good were it not that sin abounds in the world; and where sin is there is misery.

I have for years past been of the opinion that little or nothing is known of the purpose of God in the punishment of sinners. Sin is the cause of all the evil which man is doomed to suffer here. And the purpose of God is to illiminate evil from the earth. And this must be done by striking the ax at the root of the tree. Cut down the cause and the effect must cease. Now those who practice sin are the cause of the evil, and no amount of pain or anguish that they can be made to suffer will avail any thing in removing the cause of evil, they must be cut down; that is, "surely die." And when all sinners are surely dead, the cause is destroyed, and the evil is ended. And thus it is written, "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy." Psa. cxlv., 20. Let us all search the Scriptures, and see if these things are so; but continue to pray, "Thy kingdom come."

THE RESURRECTION OF THE WICKED.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND I NEVER SAW, BY B.

DEAR SIR: The excellent character given you by another friend, whom I never saw, induces me to address you as a friend. "God is love." And the character given you, as above, is evidence to me that you are one of God's children; one of his loving, happy family. I can therefore appeal to you as a gentleman of deep Christian feelings and sympathies.

You deduce from a certain view, that the wicked will not be raised from the dead to suffer punishment, making this an objection to that view. Would it be consistent with that character of Love, when evil had been put away from his universe, by the death of the evil doer, to raise them to life for no purpose but that of punishment—to render them miserable?—I say, for no other purpose: and you say raised from the dead to suffer punishment; giving no other object or end. And it would seem to be the only conceivable object, unless we accept the dogma of their final restoration to happiness through punishment. But finding no peg on which to hang this theory, neither of us entertain it. We therefore can accord no other motive to the Almighty in resurrecting the wicked except punishment—punishment from which no good can accrue either to the sufferer or to any other being in the universe. Its only merit, therefore, is, its cruelty. For it cannot do God any good unless the sufferings of his creatures would enhance his happiness. It would not redound to his praise unless vindictiveness and cruelty be his glory. And would he then be Love?

And can it do any other being in the universe any good? seeing the resurrection of the wicked is claimed to be at the end of the world, when probation shall have ceased forever; so that we cannot file in for it even the plea of reformatory example. Then, as it cannot benefit any being in the universe, either human, angelic, or divine, but must do its wretched victims incalculable injury, can we, who believe that "God is Love," ascribe to him acts which would be productive only of misery? Would we not rather doubt the infallibility of our rule of interpreting a few passages of Scripture than to switch off from the track of God's benignity to founder upon consequences so horrid?

My Dear Sir, how congenial such views may be to the savage bosom that delights in, gloats over, and feasts on, cruelty I know not. But let us commune with our own hearts, and ask ourselves whether it would accord with our Christian disposition and spirit to do any act or acts that would result only in the unnecessary misery of others? And let us ask again, if in another state of existence our natures should only correspond in sympathy with what they are now, and we should know that many of our friends and neighbors, and perhaps some of our own families, with a vast majority of the human race, were writhing in half the agonies that the fevered and frenzied fancy of orthodoxy has created for them, would not the soul-sickening, heart-withering thought, quite unparadise the realms of light?

And finally, had orthodoxy been graciously pleased to attribute to the "Ever Ancient One" dispositions and acts somewhat in accordance with that character of Love revealed of him, both in his word and in his works, how would they have honored their own judgment, exalted the character of him they profess to love and adore, in lovely and adorable qualities, and how would they have promoted virtue and religion in the world.

And had they graced their devil with many of the dispositions and acts with which they have disgraced Deity, we still would give their fancy credit for having created a devil all-sufficiently devilish.

"Let us think, devise, and sharpen every thought." Your UNKNOWN FRIEND.

HARFORD MILLS, N. Y.

FROM THOMAS W. VAUGHN.

MIDDLE BASS, OHIO, Jan. 16, 1868.

DEAR FRIEND: I received a few days ago the "THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE," and after perusing it I am convinced it is a nail driven in a sure place; and no truth lover should be without it, if it could be obtained. I have advertised it in our local paper.

I also send you a slip cut from the same journal, the Sandusky Register, in which you will perceive the writer sees "men as trees walking." I wrote a review that will probably open up a discussion through the press. Be of good heart, my brethren, the morning breaketh, and the animals that cannot bear the light of day must soon retire to their caves, or be overwhelmed with the brilliant light of truth revealed. Judge Halsted (doubtless without intending it) has struck a fatal blow to orthodoxy, and we have only to follow it up by weaving those truths into our daily intercourse with men, and patiently scatter the seed, confident our heavenly Father will cause it to grow.

The following is the "slip" friend Vaughn refers to above.

IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

We find the following communications in the Marietta Register: Ohio.

In your last issue there is an offer of a prize of twenty dollars, through the Guernsey Jeffersonian, from John Swan, of Cambridge, to any man, woman, or child, who will produce a passage from the Bible, which asserts the immortality of the soul. We know not the motive which leads to this offer, though it seems to insinuate that this doctrine is not taught in the Scriptures. At least many might be led to draw this inference from the offered prize.

It may be that there is no passage in the Bible that directly asserts the immortality of the soul. But why? Simply because the Scriptures teach a higher and more glorious doctrine, that of the immortality of man. Man is a being composed of soul and body, a spiritual nature dwelling in a material organization, and one just as essential as the other. A mere soul is not a human being any more than a mere body is. When God made man, he formed a body and then breathed into it, "and man became a living soul," a compound being composed of spirit and matter. That is the essential idea of humanity. The doctrine of the Bible now is, not that the soul or spirit is to live forever, but that man is, and that these mouldering corpses shall be called forth from their graves, and clothed upon with incorruption. Christ himself being the first fruits of that glorious harvest.

They, therefore, who insist that the Bible shall teach only the immortality of the soul, while the body is no proper part of our humanity, or worse still, a mere incumbrance and reproach, shall be surrendored to the eternal silence of the sepulchre, need to rise to a higher plane of thought and get beyond the mere teachings of heathen philosophy, which still linger around, and from which the wisdom of this nineteenth century has not yet become emancipated; for it is a relic of heathenism that the soul of man is the only part of him that is worth preserving, and that escape from this body is a blessed deliverance, to be eternally rejoiced over.

Now if Mr. John Swan wants authority from the Bible that man is to live forever, or even that the body is to share the glorious destiny of incorruption, we can supply him with abundant proof. But let it be understood that the Scriptures are immeasurably ahead of teaching the doctrine of the immortality of a mere soul; and those who have not got beyond that conception need to wake up and search a little deeper into the philosophy of the Bible, as well as the philosophy of our humanity, to learn what kind of a being God created when he made man. W.

LETTER TO AN "ORTHODOX" FRIEND.

THE following letter was not designed for publication; but the author, who is a physician, has kindly given permission to have it published.

You have often censured me for certain "very odious views of mine," as you term them. You tell me that you have never looked into the work which I lent you in June, viz., Hudson's "Debt and Grace; or, the Doctrine of a Future Life." I am sorry that you have not done so. Though not committed to the doctrine there taught, as far as my denominational opinion goes, I must, nevertheless, in all fairness and candor say, that Professor Hudson has in that settled beyond all possibility of refutation the great question of future retribution. I wish some of our "learned and able divines," whom you are continually quoting to me, would undertake a thorough examination of that book. They dare not do it.

I have to confess that the secret drifting of my mind has been for years in the direction of materialism. I cannot find the doctrine of the immortality of the soul either in reason or revelation. And therefore I am constrained to believe that man is what he is by virtue of his physical organization. Every animal is distinguished by a certain peculiarity of organization. Man is distinguished from the brute creation by the excellence of his organism, and especially the superior development of his brain. The vital forces use this organism as their instruments, and the various functions of the mind are equally functions of the brain. Force cannot exist independent of matter, for they are as inseparable as shadow is inseparable from substance, and the former is but an attribute or property of the latter. I know that the heathen, the Pharisees, the modern Christian world, have believed in the separate existence of the vital principle. The more rational theory is that the vital principle is not a separate, indivisible, uncompounded identity, but an aggregation of forces dependent on and kept together by the bodily frame-work.

Death destroys all that constitutes a man what he is. A dead man is a dead man till God gives him life by a resurrection power.

Does the whole man die, or does only the baser, the unessential, part die? If it be the latter, if only the unessential part dies, and the real person, the I and you, does not die, then did Satan tell the truth when he said to our first parents—"Ye shall not surely die." But he told a lie, and with that lie he has deceived people in all ages.

Because the heathen believed; because the Pharisees received from the heathen the doctrine that the principal part of man does not die, but soars away an airy phantom to heaven or hell, and because all literature has been more or less tinctured with the notion, must we believe it? Did not the pagans give form and shape and organs, eyes and ears and hands to this ghostly being? What gross inconsistency! the real eyes and ears and hands and organs were at rest in the grave, or had mouldered to dust. How can we think of dead friends even, unless we associate with them those physical organs which we know are now laid away in the grave? O, my lamented M—! what wouldst thou be now to me without thy sparkling eyes, whose glance was intelligence; without that melodious voice; without even those features and those lineaments, those smiles which I have always associated with thy memory, and which have thee so much grace?

But our departed friends shall rise again. O, glorious, sublime, and animating thought! By virtue of Christ's resurrection they shall obtain a resurrection to incorruption and immortality. Then, and not till then, will they become animated beings. The elements of their being are somewhere in existence, and Christ will take care of them till the day when he shall come. Then the glorified body shall come forth—perhaps not the same body in every sense of the word, but one in strict organic continuity and perfect identity with the former body.

This seems to me to be the Scripture doctrine. I cannot have any faith in an intermediate state—in the existence of inane, inert, indefinable, incomprehensible, disembodied spirit—a being wholly separated from the world of matter, having no bonds of connection with the material universe around it, no organs with which to compare, to judge, to feel, to see, to hear, or to enjoy. No wonder a resurrection is needed for such a being. If nothing but a "shadow" (umbra) as the ancients called it, surely when the substance perishes the shadow must perish also.

Yours affectionately, DAMON.

LONG PRAYERS.

IT is a delicate subject upon which to address one personally. You may talk in general terms of the advantage of brevity in public prayers, and every one will assent. The pastor may rise in the Wednesday evening prayer-meeting and kindly lay the subject before his people, and every heart will echo to his remarks, and thank him; but who will profit by them? An amusing instance is told by a writer in the Congregationalist:

"A New England pastor, not long since, made a serious and earnest address on this subject, among others, to his church at their annual meeting. He stated that, at a social meeting, one brother, then present, had prayed twenty-five minutes by the clock. After the sermon, that brother waited to speak with his minister. The heart of the pastor sank within him; he feared that he had greatly offended the good man. 'I am glad you spoke so plainly about long prayers,' said the brother. 'It seems that he is not offended,' thought the minister, 'but I am afraid he is greatly grieved.' 'The fact is,' continued the brother, 'some of the brethren have tried me dreadfully in this matter, and I think it was high time you spoke to them as you did.'"

CHRISTIAN COURAGE.

CHRYSOSTOM, before the Roman Emperor, furnishes us with a most impressive and beautiful example of true Christian courage.

The emperor threatened him with banishment if he would still remain a Christian.

Chrysostom replied, "Thou canst not, for the world is my Father's mansion: thou canst not banish me."

"But I will slay thee," said the emperor.

"Nay, but thou canst not," said the noble champion of faith again; for my life is hid with Christ in God."

"I will take away thy treasures."

"Nay, that thou canst not," was the retort, "for in the first place, I have none that thou knowest of: my treasure is in heaven, and my heart is there."

"But I will drive thee away from man, and thou shalt have no friend left."

"Nay, and thou canst not," once more said the faithful witness, "for I have a friend in heaven, from whom thou canst not separate me. I defy thee. There is nothing thou canst do that can hurt me."

THE RAVEN AND THE RING.

IN a village near Warsaw, in Poland, there lived a pious peasant of German parentage.

Without any fault on his part he had come short in the payment of his rent, and the landlord had threatened to turn him out of house and home, even although it was in the middle of Winter. The peasant went several times to the cruel-hearted landlord, to entreat him for forbearance, but in vain; on the next day he with his wife and children were to leave their home. During the evening he was conducting family worship, and while reading a portion of holy Scripture, there was a knock at the window. It proceeded from an old friend, a raven, which Dorby's father had taken from the nest and trained. Dorby opened the window: the raven popped in having in its beak a ring set with costly stones. At first Dorby thought of disposing of the ring, but on reflection he took it to the minister. The latter at once recognized it as the ring belonging to the King Stanislaus, to whom he went immediately and told the story.

The king sent for Dorby and rewarded him, so that at once he was relieved from want, and the next year he made him a present of a new house and garden. Above the house door a tablet was erected, with the Bible text inscribed thereon: "Thou calledst in trouble and I delivered thee." Ps. lxxxi., 7.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM LESTER F. SIKES.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Jan. 20, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Herein please find three dollars for the HERALD OF LIFE and Judge Halsted's work. If you have the papers to spare of January 1st and 8th, and feel willing to send them to me I will loan them and try if I can get more to take your paper.

What a change in public sentiment since you first issued your "Six Sermons." Truly the truth is searched for, and received. "Knowledge is increased." When I look back and see the teachings delivered by Wm. Miller, up to the present, I can say, "What has God wrought?" Why, a different people altogether in theology, and I believe the most lively in the faith that is pleasing in his sight. May our Lord preserve you, until his glorious appearing, in health and strength, and our eyes see yet more of his workings upon the minds of the children of men by his truth being presented by those who stand before the people to declare his word and purposes. Yours, in hope of eternal life.

FROM CLAMOR FRANKE.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, Jan. 20, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Yesterday morning I went to Asbury Chapel (the same in which Br. Wendell preached one evening) to hear Mr. Wambough preach. After the service was over, I posted myself at the door outside of the church and distributed to the people, as they came out, our tracts, principally the Gospel Hope, Questions on Immortality, and the Short Hell and Long One. While engaged in this work, one of the members of the church stepped up to me looking much excited and quite angry, said: "See here, what business have you got to come here to deal out these tracts to this people? Don't you know that your doctrines are contrary to those of this (Methodist) church? and taking me by the arm, pushed me outside of the enclosure that surrounds the building on to the pavement. I apologized to him, and told him that I meant no offence. But that did not satisfy him, and he left, thinking, no doubt, he had done a good work to eject me. Poor bigot that he is, I pity him for his short-sightedness and prejudice. I may have done wrong, because I distributed the tracts upon their premises, but then no one was compelled to take the tracts, unless they wished to. But I can afford to bear the reproach of men and mistaken Christians for my Master; and if I only have the consciousness that I please him, I shall not care much what men may think of me. Pray for me that I may be faithful, and not get weary in well-doing. Truly yours in Christ.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We are afraid that church did not get sanctified by Br. Wendell's preaching in it. If he goes to Cincinati again, try and give him a chance to preach somewhere outside of "their premises." In their church he was under their supervision, so that they could counteract his influence when he was gone. We know that an independent meeting by him would have damaged their theology more than he could possibly do by speaking in their church, where "courtesy" would prevent his preaching as freely as on independent ground. We may not have as many hearers in this way, but we will be more sure to benefit those who do hear.

In our missionary work, we are decidedly opposed to going into the denominational places of worship, to be under the supervision of the minister and people of such sects. As a general rule, it can do no good: it only arouses the minister, after we are gone, to inveigh against us and our views, if we have had the "discourtesy" to preach contrary to their faith, when we were so kindly permitted the use of their pulpits!

We are glad Br. Franke now sees the spirit that rules in such sectarian places, notwithstanding they let Br. W. preach there. When a missionary, of our faith, visits Cincinnati again, remember that out on the "pavement" is a better pulpit than inside a sectarian church, if you wish the truth to prosper.

FROM A. D. KREWSON.

HARRISON, OHIO, Jan. 21, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I have been reading your valuable paper now about one year, and I find it a welcome visitor, and don't know how I could do without it, as I have been invesitigating the Scriptures for a number of years, and I found a great many places that I could not understand, with the ideas of God that I had formed in my mind concerning the immortality of the soul and an endless hell, or lake of fire and brimstone, that I am now satisfied was gotten up to scare persons into the church, instead of the love of God constraining them. If the sinner is to live in hell forever, that he may be punished, then God didn't mean what he said when he declared that "the soul that sinneth it shall die;" he meant that it shouldn't die, but be alive forever that he might punish it. That being the fact, the serpent told the truth when he told mother Eve that she should not surely die. That lie has been sounded aloud from the pulpit ever since the pulpit has been in existence, and I presume it will for all time to come, let that time be long or short, but I find a great many are getting their eyes open to the truth as it is in Jesus. I hope to be able to send you some more subscribers for your valuable paper before long, and also your Six Sermons. I would send now, but money is too scarce at present. If you have any tracts for gratuitous distribution send some to this office. I think it will do a good work in this place in getting some of our friends out of the fog. Your brother, in the hope of life in Christ.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—This brother sends us four new subscribers for a year, and pay for two old ones; in all $12. That is encouraging. Let all our friends sow seed now, and they will see their labor is not in vain. Surely we have abundant reason to put forth exertions. God has blessed our labors to spread his truth on life only in Christ. No other doctrine can make any headway against the delusion of "spiritism," the curse of the present time.

FROM ELDER E. B. TEFT.

STOCKTON, CAL., Jan. 2, 1868.

BR. STORRS: If it may not be considered too late, I would greet you with a happy new year. I will also add a few items of news.

Pope, alias Knapp, of the Baptist fraternity, is still wielding the weapons used by the adversary to deter God's faithful children from receiving, or advocating the truth, which he has so lovingly given us in the Bible. The lie ("Thou shalt not surely die") is reiterated time and again by Eld. Knapp; and (as a good sister said to me lately) if he was God, having the power, he would have a motley crowd hastening on in the downward way to the torments of the modern theological hell; there, as I have heard him say, "to curse God to his face throughout all eternity." I may not be a proper judge of such matters, but I cannot consider such a course as his has been here, anything short of blasphemy. His subject, as announced in yesterday's papers, was "a prayer meeting in hell," for last evening. One of our young brethren in the faith of life only in Christ, has been once unceremoniously turned out of the church; and, although he has at different times told them that all he would ask of them was to show him his error, if he was in error, from the Bible, and he was ready to give it up, all the satisfaction he could get was the cry of "heresy, heresy," and "it is the works of the devil." This is to one who meekly trusts in the Lord Jesus Christ, and takes the Bible as his guide in all matters of faith: one whom no charge has or can be brought against his moral character. "Consistency, thou art a jewel." May not the time come again when the act will be repeated of putting men in prison "for preaching the Gospel."

There are a number in and about Stockton, who are almost persuaded that the Life views are the correct ones of the teaching of the Scriptures.

Enclosed please find check for $7 to be appropriated as follows: bound BIBLE VS. TRADITION, LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST, and HERALD OF LIFE for six months, to the address of —— Stockton. Also the same works to ——, Stockton.

Can Murdock's Syriac version of the New Testament be had now? Also, Future Punishment, by Rev. H. H. Dobney, Baptist minister, England, "Part second?"

Here would be a good place for the distribution of tracts. What few I have are active. Let this place be remembered at the throne of grace by God's faithful children. We only need the blessings of our heavenly Father upon the truth for a good work here.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We have sent all the works you have ordered; although the bound works, that you sent for some time since, were not sent till last week, as we were disappointed in getting them printed.

Murdock's Syriac New Testament is out of print, and we know of none to be had. We have sent you three copies of the work of Dobney, "Second Part," and have more, if you want them. We have also sent you a variety of small tracts.

As to Eld. Knapp's operations, you need feel no uneasiness; the wrath of such men will hurt themselves more than us. He is well known in this part of the world; and his influence dies when he leaves a place; that is just the time for the friends of truth to sow the seed abundantly. If there is to be a "Prayer-meeting in hell," we have not the slightest doubt he will be the Conductor of the services. He is doubtless familiarizing himself to such kind of business, judging from his mode of conducting business here.

FROM WM. MUNGER.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Jan. 18, 1868.

BR. STORRS: In reading the HERALD I have noticed a number of articles on John v., and finding no two that understand it alike, I feel it a privilege to present a few thoughts as they have been presented to my mind while studying those Scriptures. That it is a parable seems evident from the fact that Jesus was speaking to that people to whom he never spake but by parables. Another evidence of this is found in the 29th verse, of which we shall speak when we come to it. I know of no one who claims that he is speaking of the literal dead in the 25th verse; and yet he says, the dead shall hear; and they that hear shall live. That is the result of hearing the Son of God. Hear what he says, "For as the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." Now, as the Son of God, he has the life-giving power, or power to impart life to those that hear him. To hear him so as to receive that life, then, is to believe on and receive him as the LIFE-GIVER. This, then, is his office as the Son of God, to give life to those that hear him. Now we find that the Father has given him another office, as brought to view in the 27th verse: "And hath given him authority to execute judgment also." That is, as well as to give life: and why? "Because he is the Son of man." As the Son of God he is the LIFE-GIVER. As the Son of man, a ruler, judge, governor. In Matt. ii., 6, this is made clear. "Out of Bethlehem in the land of Judea, shall come a governor, ruler, that shall rule my people Israel." The very same people to whom he said, "They that hear shall live;" and to whom he also said, "Marvel not at this." At what? Why, at what he had told them in the 27th verse, that he had given to him, of the Father, authority to execute judgment. In the 20th verse, he says, "The Father will show him (the Son) greater works than these;" which he is now doing, "that you may marvel." To see him whom they as a people had rejected, having authority to rule, govern, execute judgment, indeed will be marvellous to that people. Please turn to Zach. viii., 6, and read the connection, and you will get the same idea. Now do not marvel at what I have told you; for the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves." Not their graves, as many quote it. The word from which graves is translated here, is not hades, but another and quite different word, signifying the places of memory. Now please turn to Jer. xxiii., 5-8., and see the harmony. Oh, how marvellous is God's national, as well as his individual plan. In John v., both plans are clearly brought to view, as it seems to me. Now I wish to show what to my mind, is very absurd; which is, the commonly received opinion, drawn from the 28th and 29th verses, that it embraces all the human family that will have lived and died up to the time of Christ's coming. We are told by those who advocate the doctrine of the resurrection of all men, that "all means all;" and so it does, or would if it was a literal resurrection; but in that case the classification would be of no use, whatever. But you see they are classed off; they that have done good and they that have done evil. This, to my mind, forbids a literal interpretation; for a very great portion of the literal dead, being children, have done neither good or evil; therefore to make the text embrace them is to destroy its meaning, or sense, altogether. At least, so it seems to me.

ELD. S. L. WALTER writes from Lebanon, Ill., Jan. 18, stating that the glorious doctrine of life only through Christ still has lovers there who do all they can toward sustaining and spreading the truth abroad; and he thinks the truth is on the gain. He says he preached six times in Centralia, and had conversation with the Methodist and Baptist ministers, one of whom admitted he was tied by their creed, and if he preached otherwise he would be expelled. "So they wrap it up." Br. Walter found a brother at Centralia who was from Rhode Island, but has lived where he is now nine or ten years, and believes in life for the righteous, but that "all the wicked will God destroy." He has held fast to his faith, though he has had no access to any of the advent papers except the Advent Herald, an immortal soul and endless misery sheet. Still, he and his wife have stood firm in the doctrine of no immortality out of Christ, and no resurrection for the wicked dead. He has now subscribed for the HERALD OF LIFE, and is furnished with Judge Halsted's work, "The Theology of the Bible." Br. Walter concludes by saying—"Cheer up, Br. Storrs, the harvest gathered will tell how the good seed has taken root and sprung up unto eternal life."

JAMES M. COREY, Winsted, Minn., writes: The HERALD OF LIFE is a welcome messenger. I was taught, when a child, endles misery by fire and brimstone. In 1843 I believed in the annihilation of the wicked after the resurrection of the dead, until I saw the HERALD OF LIFE about six months since. I then saw the true light. May the good Lord spare your life and health so that you may see the life and truth spring up to the ends of the earth. We have no life preaching except the HERALD. I thank the Lord that it comes under my roof. It is like cold water in a thirsty land. May it live till the Saviour comes in the clouds of heaven. This is the prayer of your brother, looking for eternal life when the LIFE-GIVER comes to give life to the sleeping saints.

LAFAYETTE NORRIS, Campton, Iowa, writes, that Br. A. O. Hillstream, of Manchester, Iowa, wants to know the name and residence of that Norwegian of whom Br. Wendell made mention in his late tour West; he is desirous to communicate with him. Br. Hillstream has long felt desirous to proclaim the truth to the Scandinavians. Will Br. Wendell, or some one else who knows, give the desired information? Br. Hillstream and his wife have both been quite sick, but are improving, and strong in the faith. Br. Norris is doing what he can for the cause in his vicinity, but has many things to contend with. He is encouraged, however, to labor and suffer on, and feels that the Lord is with him; and he hopes to send us more subscribers before long.

A DUMB SERMON.

THE REV. WILLIAM TENNANT once took much pains to prepare a sermon to convince a celebrated infidel of the truth of Christianity. But, in attempting to deliver this labored discourse, he was so confused as to be compelled to stop, and close the service by prayer. This unexpected failure in one who had so often astonished the unbeliever with the force of his eloquence, led the infidel to reflect that Mr. T. had been, at other times, aided by divine power. This reflection proved the means of his conversion. Thus God accomplished by silence what his servant wished to effect by persuasive preaching. Mr. Tennant used afterward to say, his dumb sermon was one of the most profitable sermons that he ever delivered.—Selected by L. C. R.

OUR aged "mother in Israel," Mrs. CATHARINE COLVER has fallen asleep in Jesus after a pilgrimage of ninety years. Her daughter writes:

WEST STOCKBRIDGE, MASS., Jan. 20, 1868.

I write you to let you known of my dear mother's death (Mrs. Catharine Colver). She fell asleep on the 7th inst, after waiting (for she had long been ready) so long. For some weeks she had much suffering at times. She fell asleep at the age of ninety years, in the full assurance that in the morning of the resurrection that "crown of righteousness" promised to those who have "kept the faith" and who shall "love his appearing," should be hers. NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Sister Colver has long been a patron of our labors. For many years she took the Bible Examiner, and has been a supporter of the HERALD OF LIFE from its commencement. So one after another of our faithful friends are falling

THE LECTURES IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.

THE EDITOR of this paper has given three of the above course of lectures on the Scripture doctrine of a future life and the time and manner of entering into it. He began at the foundation of the Life controversy, and will continue every Sabbath evening till the course is completed, or circumstances shall indicate a suspension. The place is at the corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay Street, entrance on Jay, at the sign of "SAWYER'S PIANO-FORTE ROOMS."

These lectures are a tax on the Editor's time and strength, which he hardly feels able to give; but a desire that those in Brooklyn who wish to hear shall have a chance to do so, impels him to this effort. We trust it will not be in vain.

W. H. HANFORD, the Lord willing, will preach in Keyport, N. J., next Lord's day, Feb. 2d.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton avenue and Jay street, at 7½ o'clock. Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "SAWYER'S PIANOFORTE ROOMS." Poetry.

To the Herald of Life.

BY T. P. LEWIS.

Herald of Life! declare
To man his mortal state;
Show all that God for them doth care,
And warn them ere too late.

Help break the galling chains
That long have bound our race,
Thy mission be where priestcraft reigns—
Speak truth in every place.

Go to the distant West,
Where error seeks a shrine:
Go, carry truth, 'tis God's behest
That thou shouldst let it shine.

Go, likewise, to the East:
From hills of granite speak;
Tell man he'll perish like the beast
If life he does not seek.

Go to the far off South,
Where ignorance holds its sway,
Speak words of love, till every mouth
To God shall sing and pray.

Go, likewise, to the North,
Where ice the rivers bind,
Where men have put huge efforts forth
With creeds to bind the mind.

Herald of Life! to me
An angel from above!
My feeble sight is lost to see
My Father, "God is Love."

Will Money Buy Everything.

When I was young I well remember hearing people say that money would buy anything in the world. Well, of course I believed the story. What everybody said must be true, you know. Yet it puzzled me a good deal that, while some were telling me how much wealth would buy, what a powerful thing it was, and how old and young seemed to be seeking for it, others were explaining how many persons had been ruined in consequence of its possession.

But I soon got over all that. I early discovered by observation that, while money would buy farms and houses, and horses and carriages, food and clothes for the body, and ten thousand other comfortable things which men and women covet, there were things in this world which all its wealth cannot buy.

Can you tell me what they are? Look around you and see. Think of something too precious to purchase with money. I'll tell you one trifle to begin with, not to be had for all the gold that mortal man ever toiled to obtain; the affection of a dumb beast! You can never purchase that, insignificant as it seems, with riches. Your dog or cat may possibly love you, but that affection was never bought with money, nor can you retain it by the use of money. It came, if at all, in consequence of kind treatment, pleasant words, a companionship as pleasant on the part of the creature itself as on your own, and you may be perfectly sure that as long as your kindness continues, its faithful friendship will be firm. You cannot say that of any human being that ever lived, and yet I well know there are faithful hearts here below if we could only find them.

Some years ago two boys, while playing upon a cliff near the sea, found a young sea-bird which a dog was worrying. It would have been killed but for them. They drove away the dog and carried the bird, nearly as large as a goose, safely home. There it was shut up in a coop, like the hens and chickens, fed and kindly cared for. It soon became quite tame, and manifested constant affection for its little masters, who felt proud of the result of their care.

And thus weeks and months rolled on. In the Fall of the year the bird became very tame, the coop was occasionally opened and the prisoner permitted to go to the coast, near which the boys lived. But it came regularly home at night, receiving its supper along with the rest of the biddies, and crept to its nest to repose.

So the cold Winter passed away, and Spring came. One night the bird which had been cared for so well was missed. It did not come home. The next day and the next went by, and still the coop was empty. The fact was, the boy's bird had been coaxed away—I cannot really say into bad company. But it had joined a flock on its way north, and flown with the rest.

Presently the boys began to comprehend the difficulty, and as a matter of course they had to have a good cry about it. They had really learned to love their bird, and, to part with it, for them, was a severe trial. That is all very natural, for kindness, no matter upon what creature bestowed, ever begets kindness, and to part with an object that we love is ever painful.

Some of my readers will, no doubt, anticipate the end of my story, for many similar events are recorded. One cold Autumn day, as the boys were at play in their yard, they saw a flock of sea-birds coming towards them. Nearer and nearer they came, until at last, to their infinite surprise, the whole flock settled upon the ground close at hand and the largest waddled along towards them, quacking most curiously as she came. It was the bird which had flown away in the Spring, now returned with her young ones to claim hospitality for the Winter! You may imagine, if you can, the delight of the boys, and indeed that of their parents, at this instance of affection. Words cannot describe it. You may make up your mind that the flock were not turned adrift, though for a long time the young ones were pretty wild and did not take as kindly to the boys as the mother did. Ah, well; they did not know them as well.

Near by where I formerly lived there dwelt a well-to-do farmer, who had a son about my own age. He was a frolicking, good-natured lad, a little rough perhaps, but never unkind. We used to be constant companions whenever we had a few leisure hours to spare. We lived near a city, and from time to time, rough customers would come out into the neighborhood, and commit their depredations by night, such as robbing barns, hen-roosts, etc., and so the farmer purchased two very large savage dogs which he kept chained in his barn.

It became my companion's duty to feed these animals and take care of them. He did his duty so well that in a short time, no one else could be tolerated for a moment by these huge creatures, large enough to have eaten him up alive almost. I remember perfectly how he would take them out occasionally and play with them upon the grass. He would roll over and tumble about with the great growling dogs as if they had been puppies. But harm never came to him.

Nor was there any secret about the matter. The dogs knew their master, and the good-natured boy took excellent care of the dogs. What money could never have purchased was freely and naturally given in exchange for kind treatment and affection. We call such creatures brutes, but how often does their affection toward those who are kind to them shame us for using such a term. It is their nature to be brutes in some respects, that is true. But the dog, if he is a brute, rarely witholds affection where affection is due.

Friendship—true friendship I mean—is the one thing most earnestly sought for among men, and I must say, the most rarely found. Some say that it is never found, yet I should be sorry to think that. Let us rather believe that kindness, even among the selfish, will usually meet with kindness, or what is akin to it, in return.

Among young people, as a general thing, there is much more sincerity than is found after the trials of life have made the heart cold and selfish. And so I would have every one whose eyes glance over this page beware of the approach of selfishness. Be frank and honest with such as you accept as your companions. Let them depend upon you and let them feel that you are as true as the needle to the poles in your expressions of friendship. Above all things, never desert a friend when he is in trouble. It is just the time when he most needs you, and all your professions of good feeling past are not worth a rush if you desert him at such an hour.

It is these fair-weather friends that, more than anything else, make the world a wilderness. For how withering to a gentle nature it is to have the backs of professed friends turned upon one when most needed. Despise the very thought of such a meanness, dear reader. Profit by the affection and constancy of the dumb beasts, as they are called. And if any companion of yours is in distress and needs your assistance, fly to his relief with heart, hand and purse; be earnest in your sympathy, and my word for it, you will experience a joy in your heart that money cannot buy.—Youths' Casket and Playmate.

Waiting for Christ.

What are we "waiting for?" Some are waiting for one thing, and some for another. One man is waiting to gain something on which he has set his heart, and which he thinks will make him happy. Perhaps he has some plan which he is very anxious to see carried out. Perhaps he has some desire which he would give a great deal to gratify. Perhaps he has some taste which he is devoting all his thoughts and pains to please. Perhaps there is some possession—a field or a house, or it matters not what—which he covets, and is waiting to obtain. Another man is waiting for money. Are there not more who wait for this than for anything else? I am afraid it is so. Many and many a man is waiting only to be rich. Money is the end he sets before him as the one good—the one object worth toiling and planning, and hoping, and waiting for. Another man is waiting for really nothing at all. He has no distinct hope or object to look forward to. He takes what comes day by day, getting what pleasure or satisfaction he can out of it, but thinking and caring nothing about the future. "The future!" ah, how much is wrapped up in that little word! Ye know not what shall be on "the morrow." No, but we know this, that in the future, of which some think so little, are hidden awful things, mighty realities. Well, then, who of us is "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ?" The apostles and early Christians waited for it. They waited for it with such keen hope and eager longing that St. James has to teach a lesson of patience in their waiting: "Be patient, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Alas, which of us needs thus to be restrained in the eager impatience of our waiting for Christ? It is strange to notice in reading the New Testament how much is said of this waiting for Christ. It was, so to speak, the very posture of the early church. She stood in the attitude of one daily expecting the return of the Lord whom she loved and longed to see again. The waiting was no mere expectation of a far distant event—no mere resting till that event should come, without giving it much thought the meanwhile—no mere figure of speech to imply a state of general preparation. It was a most real and genuine waiting: a waiting that made the event waited for the uppermost thought at all times—a most practical motive, a most present influence—in the early church. The early Christians waited for Christ as we should wait if we saw plain, visible signs of his approach; if we saw, in literal fulfilment of our Lord's mysterious words, the sun darkened, the moon not giving her light, the stars falling from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shaken. Certainly very few of us wait for Christ in this way. And yet the waiting of apostles and apostolic churches was surely meant to have its lesson for us. At first indeed some may be troubled to find inspired men expecting as near at hand that which has not come to pass for nearly two thousand years. And yet St. Paul is careful to warn the Thessalonians not to mistake his words and to think that he is foretelling the immediate return of the Saviour. But, when we recollect that with the Lord "one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day," when we try to realize how wholly without length, time which seems so long to us now, will seem beside eternity, and when we also believe that it is God's will that Christians should always be expecting and waiting for Christ's second coming, and that this is one great reason why the time of that coming is hidden from us—then we are no more troubled at the early looking for Christ's quick return, but see in it a picture of that spirit which should in all ages be a living power in the church of Christ.

Think for a few minutes: 1st, what is it we must wait for; and secondly, what that waiting should be.

We wait, then—shall I say we wait? It is better to say the faithful Christian waits—"for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Now this does not mean death. It means Christ's second coming, when we shall be "caught up" in the clouds to meet the "Lord in the air." If we are to take Scripture for our guide, I am sure we do not think enough of this. Of the state before Christ's second coming we know almost nothing. The Holy Spirit would throw our hopes forward to that glorious day when they "that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, and the Lord shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." It is this glorious scene that the Christian is to picture to himself and learn to wait for. It is this which is meant to be the fulfilling of his brightest hopes, the crowning of his deepest longings. What he should wait for, with strong desire for its coming, is that day when "the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed," when "this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality," and "death shall be swallowed up in victory." He will learn to say, with David's faith, "As for me, I will behold thy presence in righteousness; and when I awake up after thy likeness, I shall be satisfied with it."

And, if so, what must the waiting be?

Think how you would wait for one on earth whom you loved better than all else, and longed before all things to please. What should you be busied about? How should you be passing your time? You know very well you would be trying to do everything you could think of which would give that loved one pleasure on his return. If he had expressed any wishes before he went away, you would do your best to have those wishes carried out. If he had laid any charge on you, you would diligently labor to fulfil it. And this is not as a hard, cold, unwelcome task. No; in the midst of all your preparations you would ever be thinking of, and realizing, his return. Your heart would bound with joy when you thought of it. You would be longing for it and looking forward to it. The expectation of it would give life and joy and love to all your work.

In this way, then, if we had not so weak a faith and so cold a love, should we be "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Oh, blessed day for those who have waited, when their waiting is over and their hope accomplished! "It shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord, we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation."—Selected

Seeking and Trusting.

I rang the bell at my pastor's door. Looking upon the golden sunset, I strove to calm my throbbing heart; but the peace and beauty without were mocked by inward agony—the agony of a divinely awakened accusing conscience.

I was tempted. "Make some excuse," was whispered, as I took a step in the hall; borrow a book and go home; do not commit yourself as an anxious inquirer, for to-morrow you may go back to the world."

But something more powerful constrained me, and I asked calmly, as my paster himself opened the door, "Can I see you alone, sir?"

Then he led me to his study; then I said quickly, lest temptation should prevail, "I am a great sinner. What must I do to be saved?"

He told me of Christ, of his full and free salvation, and bade me believe and be saved. I listened. As one struggling, with blinded eyes and failing strength, amid the fearful rapids which hurry him on to the fatal cateract, listens to the voice which tells him of a last and only way of escape—so, as for my life, I listened. Still all to me was rayless darkness. Then my pastor said he would pray with me, and begged me, as he did so, to strive to cast myself upon an all-sufficient Saviour. Kneeling, I followed word by word, the fervent, trustful prayer, in which he strove to commit me to Christ. But my spirit shrank affrighted back. I would not trust. I could not be saved.

As I rose to go still bearing the burden of my guilt, I sought relief from my agony, in making and uttering a "good resolution." "One thing I am determined," said I; "I will never cease to seek Christ, even if I never find him." Seeing the delay and danger, perhaps fatal, which lurked in that resolve, so seemingly fair, my pastor said to me, with an earnestness and assurance I shall never forget, "seeking Christ will never save you, you must trust him."

Astonished beyond measure, and grieved, at this reply, I "went away sorrowful indeed, but thoroughly convinced that I must trust or perish. Still words cannot tell (such blinding power has sin), the thick darkness, the impenetrable mystery, which hung round the act of faith, till God, in mercy, opened my eyes to see the enormous sin and folly of unbelief, and the simplicity of that saving faith which, taking Jesus at his word, yields to him an unquestioning confidence.

It is a fearful thought that the breath of mortal lips may turn a soul to life or death eternal. May God, by his omnipresent spirit, mercifully teach those who are called to guide inquiring minds. Let the truth sink into every heart, that it is not seeking but trusting, which saves the perishing.

"Many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved."—Selected.

A Faithful Mother.—A mother, whose children all bore the fruits of early piety, on being asked what the secret of her influence was, answered thus: "While my children were infants on my lap, as I washed them I raised my heart to God that he would wash them in that blood which cleanseth from all sin. As I dressed them in the morning I asked my heavenly Father to clothe them with the robe of Christ's righteousness. As I provided them with food, I prayed that God would feed their souls with the bread of heaven, and give them to drink of the water of life. When I have prepared them for the house of God, I have pleaded that their bodies might be fit temples for the Holy Ghost to live in. When they left me for the week-day school, I followed their infant footsteps with prayer, that their path through life might be like that of the just, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. And as I put them to bed, the silent breathing of my soul has been that their heavenly Father would take them to his embrace, and fold them in his paternal arms."

Of no Service.—A distinguished man had an extraordinary mark of distinction and honor sent him by his prince as he lay on his death-bed. "Alas," said he, looking coldly upon it, "this is a mighty fine thing here, but I am going where it will be of no service to me."

Letters and Extracts.

From Mrs. Catharine C. Williams.

Butler, Bates Co., Mo., Jan. 12, 1868.

Br. Storrs: Could I always command and control opposing circumstances by arresting and transfixing important thoughts as they arise, on the various important and interesting subjects brought to view in various ways, and especially by scanning the columns of the Herald, I might perhaps not only write something to help fill its columns, and thus relieve somewhat the taxed Editor—as I saw suggested some time since—but help fill it with something worthy of the space the words would occupy. This is not the case, however; but I have a few things laid up to write, and space can be given or not as may seem fitting after the same shall have been read. First, I will say, that if I cannot join with those privileged ones who have lately seen and heard our common Br. R. Wendell, in outbursts of joy and gratitude for having heard "the glad tidings" from living lips, I can at least, as I do, rejoice in their joy, and in that way make it mine; and when I read of one after another from different parts expressing a wish that some such sower of the "good seed" would come their several ways, freighted therewith, to scatter "the light of life," it helps create a desire to call attention to this remote, though naturally highly-favored land.

A short description of the situation and surroundings will help explain my meaning. This, and adjoining surrounding counties, are called, and I think truly, the fairest portion of Missouri. It was depoulated and made a desolation during the war. Butler, our County seat, was destroyed, and only here and there a chimney or charred fencing, or old building remanied to show it had ever been inhabited. Within two years past it has been rebuilt and re-peopled; not by the former residents, as a general thing (they having, as it is said, "left their country for their country's good") but by loyal Northerners, from most all the States, at least the majority are of that class, so that the Butler of eighteen months since, with scarce a house or tenant, is now a town of one thousand inhabitants. The different denominations are all represented, and, as is usual in any and all places, however small, each must endeavor to found a church of its own, thus so dividing and weakening what all who love God and good should unite to advance, viz.—the glory of God and the good of their fellow beings.

Now I write this and thus in hopes it may come to the notice of some one or more who in this uneasy age may have the spirit of emigrating, or, better still, the missionary spirit, and cause them to turn their attention to this county. I long to see the time arrive when not only in Butler, but throughout the land, there will be founded the church, simply, with the principle embodied in Peter's wonderful discovery on becoming thoroughly "reconstructed" for a basis, viz., "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." By the way, this is worthy of being inscribed on every church door in the land; and could our politicians and all see and feel its force, "reconstruction" would be comparatively an easy task.

Then another thing worthy of being impressed on all Christians, and kept before them, is Br. Wendell's account of Dr. Field's basis of Christian fellowship—"Christian character;" wherein he seems to agree with Peter. Would that such an element could be introduced into our town and county, and help mould and assimilate the discordant elements and bring Christians together. 'Tis true, all can do something if they will, though I sometimes feel most powerless; yet as an illustration of the saying "There are more ways than one," I will quote two extracts from two different persons' letters—received not long since—as an encouragement to others who may feel likewise not to grow weary of doing, if it is but a little. The first is from the wife of a Baptist preacher in Iowa, in answer to one she wished me to write to them. She says,

"Seldom a day passes but what I think of you, and especially for a few weeks past, during which time I have been reading the Herald of Life sent by some kind friend, I doubt not by yourself, and will say it has been the means of leading me out of a great deal of darkness in regard to the teaching of the Bible. I wonder where we have received such strange and false ideas? Surely not from the page of divine truth. I know I love its pages as never before. I have thought of writing to the Editor, but have not yet. You know husband is not in favor of this way (we have had several talks in times past), but I hope he will yet see the truth, and then he can preach a consistent Gospel—"Life only in Christ." What beauty and harmony is here! How I wonder I never saw it before. I have felt unsettled for years; was much like the blind man who saw men as trees walking, but now I can see clearly," etc.

So preach on, brother, and let each one do as he can about enlarging your congregation. I know such testimony will help strengthen you to labor on.

The other extract is from the wife of Dr. McComb, Lebanon, Laclede County, Missouri. They are so called "Campbellites," or were last Fall, when I was at their home. Here it is:

"I am happy to acknowledge the reception of your pleasant letter, and also the publications, one with it and others afterward, all of which we have read with interest, and I trust some benefit. There are some passages of Scripture, however, that they did not entirely make clear to our minds, viz., John v., 29, and Rev. xx. If you have anything which you think would give more light upon them, we would be glad to see it," etc.

So it is a spark here and there to silently eat away the net-work of error that binds so many noble men and women. If it could consume only error and leave all good, it would be so satisfying; but there seems to be danger of running into one extreme or another, and forgetting wherein lies safety. Unless the principle is seen and felt there seems nothing to anchor to. If it is, it is the sun, which irradiates any depth one may desire to fathom.

I am so glad Br. Wendell preached in Chicago. I have a brother, a Baptist preacher there, and a bitter opposer of the doctrine of man's mortality, and consequently of eternal life through Christ alone. His name is Nathaniel Colver. I hope he may yet be led to see what he opposes, and like Paul, preach the faith he would fain destroy; and may Br. W.'s visit there be the means of bringing "the heresy" to his notice and others of like faith.

But I must draw to a close. I do not wish to make any dissatisfied with their present lot or field of labor by what I have written, but should this meet the eye of any "Life lovers and livers" who intend to change situations, I can say, truly, here is an inviting country where one may reasonably expect satisfactory returns for well-bestowed labor. The past week has been wintry: a slight covering of snow, perhaps an inch, gives freshness to the air, making one realize that "cold comes out of the North," and that we are not any too far removed from the always dreaded white covering. I expect all up there are shrouded in, but may we all have the robe of righteousness by and by.

G. B. Martin, Goldfield, Iowa, writes: I am glad the subject of evil has been discussed. Brother Mason, of Pennsylvania first took up the subject, and handled it ably, and opened the battery on the subject, so that it has been noticed by a number of writers for the Herald of Life; among others, our friend Judge Halsted; in his reply to D. has put the thing, I think, beyond successful contradiction, that there is no such thing as a personal spirit devil. I have not believed there was any such thing for fifteen or twenty years, and I came to that conclusion from two pointed affirmations of the apostle Paul. Heb. ii. 14, and Rom. v., 12. In Hebrews he says, "I will destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil." Now Paul's language here implies that whatever had the power to produce death is the devil. Let us turn to his epistle to the Romans, and see what did produce death, and then we will see what Paul calls the devil. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Now, here Paul says sin produced death. Well, then, sin is what Paul means by the term devil.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

IN 1853, or fifteen years ago, a "Convention" was held at Hartford, Conn., by Deists, called evidently to put down the Bible and put up "Spiritism." JOSEPH BARKER, once a Christian minister in a Methodist connection in England, was the President of the aforesaid Convention at Hartford. They had challenged all the ministers far and near to meet them and defend the Bible if they could. All seemed disposed to stand aloof, as did the armies of Israel when Goliah defied them. We had no thought of attending that Convention till a few days before it met, when Miles Grant, then living in Winsted, Conn., came to our house in Brooklyn, N. Y., and urged us to be there. We finally consented to go, and, with no forethought as to what was to be our course, we went into the Convention.

We have recently been asked for our "Defence of the Bible" on that occasion. We have never published it in any other way than in the Bible Examiner for 1854. What we did publish at that time was taken from the report of the speeches by a "Reporter" employed expressly for that purpose. As our Defence has been called for, we have concluded to commence a republication of it just as it appeared in the Examiner; perhaps with some Notes. Whether we shall give it all, will depend upon the reception the commencement meets with from our readers. The discussion opened as follows: HENRY C. WRIGHT, formerly a Congregational minister, after that a Non-Resistant and Peace man, brought forward the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Bible, in some parts of the Old and New Testaments, sanctions injustice, concubinage, prostitution, oppression, war, plunder, and wholesale murder; and, therefore, the doctrines of the Bible, as a whole, are false, and injurious to the social and spiritual growth and perfection of man."

To the presentation of this resolution we spoke as follows, as reported:

MR. GEORGE STORRS then arose and said:

Mr. Chairman, when court is in session, or opens its session, and a person is brought before that court charged with crime, it is important to understand at the outset by what law that person is to be convicted of crime. The Bible is arraigned, charged with crimes, but we have not yet been told by what law the Bible is to be tried. This is a point I want our friends to define. It certainly seems reasonable that if any individual is to be tried on a charge, he should not only have the charges specified, but it should be specified against what law he has transgressed. What is the use of standing up and testifying against a man ten thousand things until you have told us by what law the charges are to be tried? Where is the law that proves that theft, and slavery, and lying, and murder are crimes? Just let us have it. If that can be established by our friends, to the understanding of the audience, we are prepared to come and see whether the Bible is guilty of the crimes charged or not; and until that has been done, I maintain that every word that has been uttered here against the Bible is without any force or weight, because it has not been shown that the Bible has transgressed any law. I do not stand here to advocate and defend everything we find in our translation. I shall not stand here to defend the Bible against interpolations. You have charged the Bible with crimes. Point us to a clear law by which the Bible is to be tried, and we are ready to defend it. (Applause.)

After these remarks, Mr. Wright said he would give us "the law," but, to our mind, it amounted to inward consciousness—nothing more; and we wished him to say that it was natural religion, or the god of nature, if he was disposed to do so. Br. Turner followed Mr. Wright with a good speech, and then we again took the stand, and are reported to have spoken as follows:

MR. GEORGE STORRS—The resolution brought forward at the opening of this Convention arraigned the Bible before some court, and charged it with certain crimes. I would again ask, if a person be brought before a court, charged with crimes, if it is not right that the law should be defined by which he is to be tried—a law by which it can be judged whether he is a criminal or not? In reply to this question, my friend Mr. Wright very prettily indeed appeals to our feelings. "The law is planted in here (touching his breast)—in the constitution of our nature." Is that the law by which the Bible is to be tried, and its morality or irreligion to be tested? Is that the law by which this book is to be proved a wicked thing, or to be justified? Is the Bible to be tried by this law in our nature which says that murder, theft, slavery, etc., are wrong? I understand that the position which my friend (Mr. Wright) has taken is, after all, that the Bible is to be tried by natural religon.

MR. WRIGHT—Yes, by natural religion.

MR. STORRS—I ask you, then, to prove that God is possessed of a solitary moral perfection by natural religion. Tell me how, by natural religion, you are going to demonstrate but that there are more than a million gods in the universe? I am glad that he has said that it was natural religion. We come now to the point—we have something tangible. It is natural religion by which we are to try the Bible. All that you can prove by natural religion, with reference to supreme powers, is, that there may be one God or many, and that the God or gods possess intelligence and power; and, for aught that you can know by natural religion, this God or these gods may have just the character which it has been contended by our opponents the God of the Bible possesses. Does natural religion teach you that God is good when he suffers so much misery, and woe, and war, and slavery, and blood, and sickness, and death, filling graveyards with human beings? Now where is your good God? Do not touch the Bible—stand off from that—let revelation alone. Just take your natural religion, and you cannot prove that God is good; and for aught you know, therefore, he is just such a character as sanctions war, slavery, polygamy, etc. I see no possibility of avoiding this conclusion. By natural religion how can you know but that it is right that God should destroy one class of men by another? How do you know that it is wrong for one nation to rise up against another nation, and to commit depredations and destroy one another by war? How do you know that it is wrong to practice polygamy? How do you know it wrong for God himself to interfere with my rights as a man, having created me? What does natural religion teach you about the animal creation?

See your neighbor take the calf and cut its throat before the eyes of its dam. She moans—she feels bad, don't she? Ah, it is a sin to take the calf and cut its throat—is it not? But natural religion says it is right—you want it to eat; but perhaps my friend Wright will say it is wrong. [Laughter]. Again a man finds a swarm of bees in a tree, and, cutting down the tree, he takes the bees and puts them in his bee-house and tells them to work for him. They work all Summer long; but finally the man comes along who says that he is the "slaveholder," and that he wants the honey. He lights his match of brimstone under them, destroys their life, and takes the honey. He is a robber. Does natural religion say so? Oh, no; but they are inferior to me. Indeed, sir, how inferior you are to God! How do you know but that the God that made you has a right to command you to be slaughtered? Does natural religion tell you that he has not? No. The fact is, that natural religion can prove nothing but that there is a God—whether one or many cannot be determined—and that God possesses power and intelligence, but cannot lead us one step farther in determining his character. Hence, I say, that the rule by which it is claimed that this Bible should be tried is a defective one, and that the Bible cannot be tested by it.

But perhaps I shall hear some one saying, You are not going to compare us to the lower and inferior animals? But, sir, what are you but an animal? I was glad to hear my friend Wright say that if he did not have any brains he would have no life; but take away his brains and he would be dead, just as dead as any other animal. Now, I ask, if natural religion allows us to enslave the lower animals—and a great portion of the community take their life out of mere sport—and if the law of natural religion were the same and unchangeable, if it would not condemn every man that takes the life of the meanest insect that crawls upon the earth? Our friends have been building upon a foundation that has been laid for them by some theologians, that man has an immortal soul—that he is a part of God. Whatever else may be charged upon the Bible, this cannot be. Man is only an animal till there is a development of moral powers by the application of a moral law. What, a part of God! Why, sir, if man is a part of God, there is no such thing as sin, for sin being a departure from God—a violation of some law, there can be no such thing as sin, unless a man should deny himself. Man, a part of God! No, sir, that is an assumption of the human heart in its pride. They would be as gods. I maintain that man by his creation is only an animal of the highest order, and capable of higher development than any other animal; but as to his having an immortal soul, there is no such thing taught in the Bible, therefore the Bible is clear of that charge. Whatever else they shall claim is taught by the Bible, it never taught that man is possessed of an immortal soul. [Cries of Hear, hear].

A great many complain because Adam should have been placed in a state of trial; but if he had not been, he never could have risen above the state of an animal, for holiness is not a creation but a development; therefore the conditions for such a development were absolutely necessary for the development of Adam—for enabling him to rise in the scale of being and to become a partaker of the divine nature, if faithful to his God. His very trial was, therefore, on the part of his Creator, an act of mercy and of kindness. That trial was to develop the moral character of Adam, which, if in harmony with God, was to entitle him to an endless existence; but he was informed that if it was not in harmony that he should surely die. When we inquire the meaning of death—what is it to die? we must answer, that it is to return back to that state from which man came. "What, to be annihilated?" Yes, sir, to be annihilated. "But," says one, "there is nothing that can be annihilated." But I ask if he who created cannot annihilate, if he will? The only question is in regard to his will. It is said that nothing can be annihilated; but I ask the objector if he means to say that God himself can annihilate nothing? Do you not preach from day to day that God made all things out of nothing, and yet do you deny that that Being who created all things out of nothing can return them to that state of nothing, that is, to annihilate them?

Why, sir, I can annihilate some things. Bring me a glass globe. Can I not grind it to powder and annihilate it as a globe? You say the particles of matter remain. But does the globe as a globe remain? Manifestly it does not; it is annihilated. So man when annihilated will not exist as man, whatever becomes of the elements of which he was composed.

Adam was told by the Creator that in case he did not obey the law given to him he should return to the dust from which he came. Now, sir, do you tell me that natural religion teaches a contrary doctrine—the doctrine of the immortality of the soul? Can natural religion point into the future world? If so, what means all the speculation among heathen philosophers about the immortality of the human soul? I ask, what does it mean, if natural religion can carry you to another world? No, sir, natural religion can do no such thing. It remains for revelation to bring forward and develop a future world; and if it remains for revelation to do it, it remains for that revelation to state the terms upon which the Creator will give us a part in the future world.

The Bible has been complained of on account of its teachings concerning women. They read to you, on the one side, passages telling the duties of the wife, but they read nothing prescribing the duties of the husband. Paul commanded that husbands should love their wives as they loved themselves. It is a dreadful thing for a woman to be loved by her husband as he loves himself! [Laughter.] I venture to say that there is not a woman of good sense in this house that will not risk the consequences, if she can get a husband that loves her as he loves himself.

The old theological notion of their being infants in hell not a span long has been adverted to. Suppose we threw the Bible away and do not let a ray of its light shine upon us, and I ask you where infants go when they die? They go down into the grave, don't they? Then all the infants that die, go into hell—your natural religion hell [applause and laughter]; and you cannot demonstrate by your natural religion but that every infant goes into hell! The infant comes into the world a suffering being, travels on in pain and suffering, and drops into the grave. Now, where is your natural religion to comfort you? "Oh, I guess it has a soul that goes off in progression." "I guess!" I guess it is all guess work It is the Bible that brings to our view another state, and that by a resurrection through Jesus from the dead.

The question in regard to the Bible is not, in fact, whether that Bible is a revelation, but it is whether it is a faithful history of revelations and certain transactions connected with those revelations; and therefore the whole questions turns on the credibility of the Bible witnesses, and whatever charges you may bring against hireling priests, these witnesses are to be judged in their testimony, according to the motives under which they may be reasonably supposed to have acted; and if it appears that their whole course was one of self-sacrifice and pain—that they jeoparded their very lives in giving their testimony, and nothing can be shown to the contrary—then you must accept them as credible witnesses. Further, when it is shown that this suffering and trial was fortold them by their beloved Master, there is no reason that can be given for supposing that they were designing men—men that would palm off on the world a falsehood. So if we go back to the Jewish priesthood—who may be considered as Bible witnesses—do we find them men of selfishness? Did they frame those laws? [turning to Mr. Wright.]

MR. WRIGHT—Yes.

MR. STORRS—Let us see whether they were knaves or not. Is it anywhere evinced in these laws? Did they [the laws] reserve any portion of the land for the priests?

MR. WRIGHT, interrupting Mr. Storrs, said—They reserve to the priest one-tenth of all the other property.

MR. STORRS—Does it look like knavery, I say, to cut themselves off from all possessions in Israel? Yet the people were to give them only one-tenth of their crops, etc., and where was the law compelling the people to give it if they did not do it voluntarily?

Now, say that the priests did not make the laws, and I call upon my friend Wright to prove that they did; and if they did, they made just such laws as "knavish priests" would not have made—they made a law to prevent their holding possessions in Israel. They made a law by which it was made a voluntary affair with the people to pay them one-tenth of their crops, etc., or not; and there was no law compelling them to pay this tithe.

[A VOICE interrupting—The people were not to have any wine the next year in case they did not pay this tithe.]

MR. STORRS—I ask if the priests themselves caused that there should be no wine the next year, after the failure of the people to pay tithe, or did He who caused the herb of the field to grow, cause that there should be no wine? Were you to give "knavish priests" now the power to make laws to regulate their own salaries, do you think they would exclude themselves from having inheritances among the people, and not make any provision for compelling the people to pay tithes?

A VOICE—"No, they would pay more attention to their bread and butter." [Laughter.]

MR. STORRS—No, indeed; but such was the fact in regard to the Jewish priesthood; they were excluded from having inheritance among the people, and there were no provisions made for enforcing the payment of tithes—there were no pains and penalties to be inflicted on the people in case of their failure to pay. Now, I ask, if such a code of laws gives any evidence of having been gotten up by a corrupt priesthood? No; there is every evidence of the purity and goodness of their motives. So with reference to the witnesses of the New Testament. You say of a corrupt priesthood now-a-days, that they keep a good look-out for their bread and butter: but they sacrificed all—being stoned, whipped and imprisoned, and were assured by their Master that they should come to a violent death. They went out in the face of public opinion—against a corrupt priesthood—against a corrupt world, civil and ecclesiastical, with their lives in their hands, and proclaimed the great truths and facts of the New Testament. And what are these great facts? Why, the great fact—the solar beam of the New Testament, is a resurrection from the dead through our Lord Jesus Christ—that God has given us eternal life, and that this life is in his Son, and not in ourselves. Amid all their trials these witnesses maintained their integrity to the end.

But you say that Peter denied his Lord and cursed and swore. Well, I suppose he was a little afraid of the face of clay as we are sometimes; and who can wonder at it, when we think that we are possessed of human nature which shrinks at suffering? Why do you not tell us that when Jesus turned and looked upon Peter, that he went out and wept bitterly? Would it not answer your purpose? It would not, would it? [Applause.] Does the Bible any where say, that any man on earth is ever so good that he may not sin the hour of temptation? No; if it did this might be brought up as an excellent thing against the truth and inspiration of the Bible; but it goes on the very ground that we are liable to sin, and that God has promised that if we repent, and use those means or institutions which he has appointed, we may be forgiven our sins and restored to his favor. And so Peter did, and on the day of Pentecost the fear of man was taken away from him. He will not deny his Lord now.

"No, to be sure, but he will dissemble."

The flesh, you see, which must be kept "under," is the source of sin; and in the hour of temptation the best man may be led, in view of pain and suffering, to commit a sin, which, on reflection, he would stand up strong against, if he has the principle of holiness in his heart; and this was the case of Peter.

These witnesses went forward testifying to the truth, namely, that Jesus is the Son of God—that Jesus died—that God raised him from the dead—that he ascended into heaven—that he is coming again to judge the world, and to give to his people eternal life. They preached Jesus and a resurrection from the dead, and they went forward in their testimony, faithful to the end; and, mark you, they did not, as hypocrites and dissemblers do, conceal their sins. Dissemblers and hypocrites do not tell their sins. No, no, sir, they cover up their sins. The New Testament witnesses did not cover up theirs, as is evinced by the very fact that we have a knowledge of them; and that is another argument in favor of the credibility of the witnesses. All these witnesses testified to facts and truths which they promulgated to the world at the hazard of their lives. As we go forward in this convention, I have much to say, if I am permitted to say it. [Cries of hear, hear, and applause.]

THE PROSPECTIVE ANTICHRIST.

OR, POOR NAPOLEON III.

WE have repeatedly stated that when this personage first started his mad career of power in France, we thought he possibly might be developed the personal Antichrist, which we were then disposed to believe would be revealed prior to the second advent of our Lord. But every development Louis Napoleon has made, from the time he drew back from his Italian campaign, when he made peace with the Emperor of Austria at Villa Franca, years ago, has lessened our confidence in his wisdom and power, and led us more and more to reject the idea that he was ever to become the Antichrist. To-day his prospects are not at all encouraging in that direction; and we judge he is near that "perdition" into which we think his dynasty is doomed to go. We still believe that dynasty is represented in Rev. xvii., as the "scarlet colored beast" that "carried the harlot woman" when travelling to "the judgment."

We take the following extract from the N. Y. Tribune of last week, as a pretty fair statement of the fancied "Antichrist," Napoleon III.

POOR NAPOLEON.

The last batch of news from Europe contained one curious item that has hardly received the attention it deserves from those whose business it is to comment on passing events. We are told that "the Emperor Napoleon has received the hat and sword which the Pope blessed at the last consistory, and which, according to custom, are presented to the sovereign who has rendered during the year the greatest service to the Holy See and the Catholic Church."

When we read this remarkable item, apparently written in all seriousness, coming to us from a respectable source, and printed in journals that seemed to have no doubt about its truth, we could hardly restrain a pitying tear that welled at our eyes, and would fain have rolled down our cheek, at the mere thought of the abject condition of a man who but yesterday could have stood against the world, and who to-day lies so low that there is none but the poor Pope to do him honor. It would be very strange if we, who have the good of our fellow men at heart, and who look upon tyrants and usurpers as our enemies because they are the oppressors of our fellow men; it would be strange if we could refrain altogether from joy, however much we might from mere decency veil it from the common sight, in the slow but sure lapse from power and popular favor of so low a charlatan as Napoleon the Third.

But there is a limit to the natural human love of justice, and, badly as we think of this person, we respectfully request the monarchs and notables of Europe to consider whether he has not been snubbed enough. We suppose it is hardly to be expected that Herr Bismarck, just now in the full flush of success and power, should altogether rein in his piquant wit, and cease from rebuffs that are no less terrible because they are given with a quiet indifference or a laughing scorn; he plays his part so well, and sends his arrow to its mark with such magnificent directness, that for the life of us we cannot bring ourselves to hope that he will show a Christian temperance. We own remorsefully to an unregenerate mind, and every time he lets fly a shaft at poor Nap. we cry, "Hurrah! hit him again! He hasn't any friends." But, one persistent foe like this is enough, and we do hope the other sort of people will keep quiet. We think Napoleon might be let alone about Mexico. It has been an awful lesson to him, and we protest against the journals rubbing red pepper into his wounds. It isn't kind. Luxumburg is not so bad, but then it is bad enough, taken with all the other little slights and indignities, to count for a first-class snub, and is no small item in the great list of his afflictions; the almost universal enmity, not unmixed with contempt, of the American people, following the exposure of his plots to destroy their government; the Mexican disaster, with the disgraceful defeat of the French troops, the great debt heaped up by that war, the death of Max. the madness of Carlotta, the proved inability of the French nation to protect the rights of its own citizens; the rise of Bismarck, and his uninterrupted success in carrying out his own plans and defeating those of his cunning and unscrupulous adversary; the growth of Russia and the certainty that she will soon strike a fatal blow at French supremacy; the reproach of Italy, the fair woman among nations, who lies maimed and helpless, beaten down by his coward fist, her dead children gathered about her by her dying hands—her children, her best beloved, the pride of her young and noble life, slain by the Emperor's newest toy, the Chassepot rifle, which, his brutal general wrote him, "has done wonders;" the wide-spread discontent at home, with mutterings from all classes that make up the life and strength of the nation, and applause only from those who live by the follies and vices that his low example fosters and his patronage sustains—was there ever a picture so awful, so pitiable as this; was there ever a man seated upon a throne over whose head so black a night impended—a night without a star?

And yet, as if the fates had not made him miserable and ludicrous enough, they add, if this absurd story of the cap and sword is to be believed, what may be called an insult, to their unprecedented injuries. This then, is the reward of all his perfidies, of all his crimes; a hat and sword, out of the medieval, rubbishly clothes-bags of the old Pope!

"MEN'S HEARTS FAILING THEM FOR FEAR."

THE following picture of Europe illustrates the above prophecy. We take it from the Evening Post, of this city, of last week. It says:

A restless and feverish feeling pervades the whole of Europe, lest some movement on the part of the rulers should plunge the continent into as general war as that of 1805–15. Russia seems ready for another crusade against the Sultan; Italy threatens Spain, and is in her turn threatened by France, in the event of her daring to maintain her national unity; France and Prussia, proclaiming peace in words, are making the most extensive preparations for war some time and some where; and Great Britain is strung into a surly irritation by Fenianism—if indeed it be Fenianism and not the spite of her own suffering poor taking that guise. As a consequence, to use the forcible words of the London Spectator, "every civilized man, out of England and America, is compelled to learn his drill;" England and America are not wholly satisfied with their own immediate prospects.

The army of France under the new bill will reach a maximum of one million two hundred and fifty thousand men, equal to the whole adult male population of Switzerland or Belgium. The armies of the other powers are estimated by M. Rouher at four million eight hundred and forty thousand men, which is equal to the adult male population of a state of twenty millions of souls. A majority of these are withdrawn from labor; withdrawn from the active prosecution of productive ends, withdrawn from marriage and the influences of the family, and are supported in their severe do-nothingness by the labors of others. The money expended in their equipment and maintenance would pay off all the public debts of Europe, representing at five per cent. interest, a debt four times the magnitude of our own, or of eight thousand millions of dollars.

Need we be surprised at the various embarrasments that commerce is hampered with and the comfort of the nations destroyed? "Great towns in England," says the Spectator, "are half starving, because the Frenchmen dare not deal till the Spring has come and gone. In France itself, statesmen declare that want of work threatens the throne, and the law of the maximum is at work in Paris. In the northeastern provinces of Prussia, employment is at a standstill, because the King cannot risk offending the Czar by imposing lighter duties. Everywhere except in Hungary every laborer except the soldier finds his weekly quantum of bread reduced one-third by the bad harvest, while his wages are reduced nearly in proportion. There is a cry of distress throughout the West, and amid it all the governments are compelled by inexorable necessity to ask more money, to demand more men, to girth up the hungry states more and more tightly for the coming strain.

Such a state of affairs is not very promising for the stability of "the thrones," which Daniel says, he "beheld till the thrones were cast down." We are inclined to think the worn-out dynasties of Europe have about accomplished their work, and will soon fall. Who shall mourn for them? They have had their day, and must now have their doom. Let it come.

DR. Payson's counsel to a minister was, "paint Jesus Christ upon your canvas, and then hold him up to the people; but so hold him up that not even your little finger can be seen." Nothing is more disgusting to the pious hearer in the sanctuary, than the sight of a preacher in the pulpit showing himself off and concealing the Master.

IN Hungary, a new sect, known as Nazarenes, has appeared. Almost the entire peasant population is attracted by it, and is as popular with them as Methodism was in Wales. They have no priests and no religious rites; they refuse to have their children baptized and will swear no oath. They have closely-connected societies, in which all matters of common interest and the private affairs of individuals are arranged. They are quiet, orderly, sober, and industrious above their neighbors.

Sound Reasoning.

We clipt the following sound reasoning from the ed torial of the Advance, a new paper, published in Chicago, by Congregationalists. The principle involved is right. The seed to be sown is of the first importance. "Moist ground" will prove a calamity if the seed is bad. The goodness of the soil will prove a curse if the seed is to produce noxious weeds, and not useful grain. But read our borrowed extract, as follows:

SEEDS OF THOUGHT.

There are seeds as well as full-grown plants in the natural world. The former are in order to the latter. If the latter be of value, then the former should be prized. The more one exalts the tree as to its beauty, shade, fruit, or timber, the higher estimate should he place upon the seed from which all these may be developed.

The analogy holds true in the world of thought. There are seeds of thought, which are seeds also of life, because thought rules life. There are first truths, radical conceptions, primordial beliefs, from which all other thinking springs, as the trunk, branches, leaves, and fruit, from the vegetable seed. Trace back human practice in its thousand forms to the original germs, and you find a few ideas simple in character and briefly expressed. Seeds are always small compared with the aftergrowth, and because they are small, and dry, and possessed of less beauty than the shrub or tree, are sometimes overlooked or despised. Yet emigrants, settling in a wild country, could hardly take with them anything equal in value to an assortment of field and garden seeds. The containing boxes might make but a small show beside their other goods, but the wealth of the future would really be hid therein.

If seeds are thus valuable, it is a pity that men do not always recognize them at sight, and that they frequently fail to distinguish between seeds of grain and seeds of tares. In religion, true doctr nes are seeds of right thought and holy life, because truth is a power of sanctification; false doctrines are seeds of error and sin, because falsehood misleads and depraves. A system of unscriptural beliefs is the germ of all manner of evil. There will be no theology in our columns, says the editor of a mammoth religious paper, trying to look very wise in the utterance. We do not remember to have heard a farmer say, No seeds allowed on my farm; nor to have read the prospectus of any agricultural paper, which gave complacent notice that it would allow no discussion as to kinds of seed, and their comparative value. It is in religion that men make fools of themselves and others.

Doctrines are very dry subjects, says one. Yes, seeds are very dry affairs. We never could detect much of any moisture in them, especially in those which are the most common and useful, the various grains. Therefore let us cease paying attention to seeds, and give ourselves to a juicier business! Ah, that will not do. Dry things have their uses, as well as the moister. Treat your dry seed properly; separate it from tares and chaff; plant it in good soil; be patient a while; ere long you shall see life emerge, beauty, strength, food: you shall have verdure, flowers, fruit. True theologizing is spiritual agriculture. It separates truth from error, by the test of God's word. It sifts out the chaff of mistaken philosophy and wrong method by the faithful use of the historic sieve, the accumulated experience of the church in dealing with religious truth. It makes choice of the best varieties of even good spiritual seed, that the future harvest may be choice in quality as well as abundant in quantity. Let it not be despised. Agricultural debates may be very bare of interest to men who sell dry goods or groceries, and even farmers would not do well to spend all their time at agricultural conventions; but shall such discussions therefore cease? So it may be quite distasteful to some editors, and to some readers, to inquire earnestly whether the orthodox, or the so-called "liberal," scheme of religion is true, tested by reason and Scripture; whether the Calvinistic or the Arminian system, in one or another modification, is the more correct representation of gospel truth, and the better adapted to convert sinners and sanctify saints. . . . But all history shows that dry seeds are full of life, and contain the vast harvests of the future, so true doctrines make living churches, and false beliefs bring damage, if not death. Beside, uninteresting subjects, that are such because we do not apprehend their value and bearing, often become attractive by an increase of intelligence, or a new experience; as when the outbreak of a bloody war taught our nation to feel interested in the doctrine of human rights, and in the question of the right interpretation of the Federal Constitution. Who knows when similar occasion may arise in the spiritual world?

How to avoid a Quarrel.—A true story is told of a lady who complained to her minister that her husband was quarreling with her every time he came into the house. The good minister, suspecting the true cause, told her to fill her mouth with flour when she saw her husband coming. She did so, and to her great surprise, her husband did not quarrel with her at all.

Blasphemous Thanksgiving.—One of the most horrid circumstances attending the massacres of the Protestants under Charles IX. of France, was that when the news of this event reached Rome, Pope Gregory XIII. instituted the most solemn rejoicing, giving thanks to Almighty God for this glorious victory over the heretics.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 9, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

An Omission.—In our article, last week, on "The First and Second Covenants," there was an omission in the seventeenth line of the third paragraph. After the word "works" there should be a period; and a new sentence begin as follows: [But now, by Moses the covenant of works] was "added," etc. The words in brackets are the words omitted, and are essential to make sense.

(1.) If men can only die once, then what is to be done with the second death mentioned in Rev. xxi. 8, which is to succeed and not precede the judgment? And how will we explain the fact that "Women received their dead raised to life again." Heb. xi. 35.? Did not Lazarus die the second time? Also Jairus' daughter, Dorcas, and others of whom we read in the New Testament, as having been restored to life?

(2.) Because it is said, it is appointed to men to die once, does it follow that they cannot die twice? If it had been said that it is appointed unto men to die only once, the non-resurrectionist would have no difficulty in sustaining his theory from this text. But, unfortunately, his construction of it contradicts historical facts. There is no mode of escape from this difficulty. If the non-resurrectionist takes the position that those who were raised to life were raised to immortal life, and never died again, he must deny the fact that Christ is the first fruits of the resurrection—the first born from the dead to immortality. He must, therefore, admit that there have been instances of men dying twice—and that what has been might be again. And as Christ will judge the living and the dead at his appearing and kingdom, and as in the order of law, judgment must precede punishment, it follows that the wicked dead are not yet punished. Hence, also, the phrase "after death the judgment" proves that natural death is not the penalty of actual transgression; but it is the second death which will follow the judgment.

(3.) Again: If natural death or the first death is the penalty and the only penalty of sin, then the penalty must precede judgment; which is equivalent to punishing a criminal before he is tried and condemned. This would be an extraordinary kind of jurisprudence! In this world criminals are tried before they are punished, but in the divine government this order is reversed if natural death is the only punishment for sin.

(4.) Paul says "God has appointed a day in which he will judge the world" and that day is the appearing and kingdom of Christ; therefore the living and dead will not be judged until he comes, and the wicked will not be punished until after they are judged. This view of the subject is fully sustained by Peter, who says, "the unjust are reserved unto the day of judgment to be punished." See 2 Pet. ii. 9.

There is only one way for the non-resurrectionist to avoid this conclusion, and that is, to take Universalist ground and contend that the day of judgment is past with all who are dead.

(5.) If natural death is punishment, then, saints as well as sinners are punished; the former not, it is true, to the extent of the latter, but nevertheless they are punished. None will escape it but the righteous who shall be living when Christ comes. Abel has been under punishment nearly six thousand years, and Abraham, Isaac and Jacob for about four thousand years. And not only so, the whole animal creation—beasts, birds and fishes, will be punished eternally.

(6.) Mortal beings under all governments, human or divine, will finally die. If any one of them commit a capital offence such as murder he is hung. He dies an extraordinary death as the penalty of his crime. But if the government would let him alone he would finally die any how. But would that procedure answer the demands of justice? Certainly not. The authority of government must be sustained and the crime expiated by the infliction of punishment.

(7.) Under the law of Moses offenders were put to death in various ways for their crimes. If they had been let alone they would have finally died and thereby the divine government would have obviated the imputation of cruelty. But God thought differently, and ordered that men should die by violence and that without mercy for twelve different offences.

(8.) In view of this fact, God says, "of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was sanctified an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace" Heb. x. 29. N. Field.

Jeffersonville, Ind.

Response to Dr. Field.

Our much respected brother Field will pardon us for again prefixing figures at the commencement of his paragraphs to which we respond: it is done only as a matter of reference and to save quoting all that we reply to. He will please also remember it is not a question of what God "can" do, but of what he will do.

"(1)." The phrase "second death," found only in the book of Revelation—a book of allegories—certainly does not prove that it is twice dying, for, "death and hell were cast into the lake of fire; this is the second death." Death and hell were subjects of this death, but they did not die twice, nor die at all, except allegorically; that is, they were utterly abolished, or ceased to exist. Hence the "second death" is a phrase which signifies to cease to exist—to have no revival—and clearly does not mean twice dying. Beside, it was a phrase employed by the Israelites, as shown by several writers, where no such idea as twice dying can possibly be assigned to it; as for example: some of the Jewish writers speak of Adam, and say, "Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years, and died the second death." And of the ten spies sent out by Joshua to spy out the land of Canaan, who brought back an evil report, it is said by a Jewish writer, "They died the second death before the Lord." Such form of expression, therefore, is no proof of twice dying; but they did express by it that such persons "shall not enter into the world to come;" that is, their death was to be made "perpetual:" no recovery from it. Such we believe to be the true import of the phrase: they die through Adam; but that death is made perpetual by their own sin, and hence, by a figure, is called the second death: death is confirmed on them, and they live no more.

As to those persons made alive prior to the executive judgment, such as Lazarus, etc., that does not touch or affect the question of the resurrection of the wicked at the last day; for, as we have said, it is not a question of what can be, or has been done, but what will be done at the day of executive judgment, or, at the last day.

"(2)." We have never said a man "cannot die twice;" but we do say, there is not a text of Scripture which says a wicked man shall die twice, or that says, he shall ever be made alive again when he is "once" dead, nor can an example be found in the Bible that a wicked man ever has been made alive after he was once dead. Lazarus nor any other named were of that class, and "historical facts" sustain that assertion, so that we "escape from the difficulty" with perfect ease.

"Christ will judge the living and dead at his appearing and kingdom," most certainly. But is it as an investigating Judge that he acts at that time? or as an executive one? Most undoubtedly, in our mind, it is the latter. This life is our probationary state, or state of trial. It is now every man is in the judgment of investigation, which is to determine his final destiny; and the wicked are "condemned already," saith Jesus; but to those who are justified by faith, "there is therefore now no condemnation," because they "are in Christ Jesus," etc. But those who persist in unbelief, they die under "condemnation," because they have been tried and "judged unworthy of everlasting life;" and when Christ returns from heaven he will administer the executive judgment on the living and the dead: the dead in Christ will live again by virtue of having fallen asleep with that same Spirit in them which raised up Christ from the dead: while all the wicked dead are judged to "remain in the congregation of the dead," and "not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them." Then the executive judgment is completed, and the death of the wicked is made perpetual and unalterable; it "abideth on them." Then it is known who are excluded from life. Not till then could it be certainly known to any but God who were the condemned ones. Then the judgment is declared by the resurrection of the justified ones, and the sealing up in eternal death all the condemned ones. At the same time the living saints are "changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," from mortality to immortality—no protracted waiting for an imaginery investigating judgment: the executive one is completed instantaneously. At the same time the executive judgment passes on the incorrigibly living wicked, who are "punished with everlasting destruction;" no recovery, no revival from that; consequently none of the fancied "dying twice:" their one death is "the second death" according to the true meaning and intent of that phrase.

"(3)." We think our previous remarks have fully met our brother's objection or argument in this paragraph. We have shown that all sinners "are tried before they are punished, and their trial was a personal, living trial, under circumstances where they might have had the benefit of a free pardon, but refused it, so that nothing remained but "to execute the judgment written."

"(4)." Has the term "judge" no other signification than that of determining cases of guilt and innocence? Surely it has the signification also of to rule. Has not God determined that his Son shall "rule the world in righteousness?" that he "shall reign and prosper, and execute judgment and justice in the earth?" and that his "dominion, also, shall be from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth," or world? and that he "shall sit and rule upon his throne," which Gabriel said "the Lord God shall give unto him," even "the throne of his father David; and he shall reign [or rule] over the house of Israel forever?" etc.

Surely all this looks as if God has "appointed a day in which" his Son "shall judge (or rule) the world in righteousness;" but there is nothing in the text that necessarily has the idea of the supposed formal trial of the world by a great assize, where all that have ever lived will be present; and we feel assured that our intelligent brother will not insist on this text in support of the doctrine of the resurrection of the wicked dead and an investigating judgment of them subsequent to such revival from the dead.

The text from Peter shows that "the Lord knoweth how to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished;" because he did it in the case of the antediluvians and in the case of Sodom; so that wicked men need not suppose they can escape the punishment God has proclaimed, but there is nothing in the language that indicates any dead ones are to be made alive for punishment, any more than that the dead antediluvians and Sodomites were to be made alive to share in the punishment for which Peter brings their case to show that the "mockers in the last times" cannot escape; for God has proved that he "knoweth how to reserve," or hold such sinners to the infliction of the punishment of the day of judgment with which this age is to wind up. "With all who are dead, the day of [the investigating] judgment [or, time of trial] is past;" but the executive, or declarative judgment is yet future, and will take place in the "twinkling of an eye at the last trump."

"(5)." The mistake of our brother here is, that he regards, evidently, the dying as the punishment. The death of the saints is not punishment; their life is secure, "hid with Christ in God;" but the life of the wicked is extinct in death; there is no life principle in them nor for them anywhere: they are gone from life, and that eternally. It is death's dominion, never to be broken, that is the punishment.

"Abel, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob" are not therefore punished at all: they "sleep in Jesus," and "God is their God," and they "all live unto him," because their resurrection is made sure. As to the "animal creation" being "punished," our brother will first prove that they were ever under a dispensation in which they might have secured eternal life. If they have been, and did not improve it, then he may talk of their death being a punishment like that of sinners who die in their sins.

"(6)." Here again our brother stumbles from an assumption that it is dying that is the punishment. We have only to repeat, in answer to all that is here said, that it is death unbroken in its dominion that constitutes its fearfulness. Being dead, in itself, is no worse than being asleep; but the dominion of death eternal is quite another matter. It is this latter consideration that gives death its "sting;" and that sting is sin unpardoned: dying with that sting in us, our death is fatal—irrevocable: sin holds us in death's eternal bondage.

"(7)." When God commanded to put men to death for their transgressions, it was as a warning to the living, as Sodom and Gomorrah were set forth for "an ensample to them that should after live ungodly;" not simply to shorten their lives, or to put them in a state of death. To let them live ti'l they died in a natural way would have been to encourage sin. But to let sinners remain eternally under death's dominion, is an ensample sufficient for all intelligent beings, if there are any that need an example of the just judgment of God on such; especially after this probationary state is past.

"(8)." The text, Heb. x., 29, is all plain by the Syriac reading, which, instead of "sorer punishment" the reading is, "How much more, think ye, will he receive capital punishment who hath," etc. The true idea is, if under Moses' law, those who "despised" it "died without mercy," how much more certainly shall those who despise the Son of God receive capital punishment. It is not the severer punishment that is meant, but the greater certainty that there is no escape from the capital infliction by those who despise Christ.

Thus we have, we believe, candidly met our friend and brother Dr. Field; for whom, though we have differed, we feel nothing but love and the highest esteem, and we have no reason to question but what our feeling toward him is reciprocated. We may not come to an agreement on the subject before us, but we trust no interruption of our mutual respect for each other will be the result of our brotherly controversy.

Various Questions.

1. I wish to inquire what is meant by the expression, or sentence, "No life out of Christ" so often used all through the Herald of Life? Is it another way of expressing a disbelief in the resurrection of the wicked dead? If this is the meaning attached, I can heartily adopt it.

If it is meant that Christ, and not God, is the author of salvation, then, I cannot adopt it.

2. In your opinion, is immortality a gift? or, is it a debt?

3. If you regard it as a gift, unconditional, then why not correct some of your correspondents when the opposite is taught?

Many times occur such sentences as this: "Immortality is the reward of obedience."

If this sentiment is true, no correction is needed; but, if it is untrue, then how necessary: thus it seems to me.

I do not feel like dictating, but truth seems very precious to me.

I am your brother, full in the belief that there will be no resurrection to life of the wicked dead. Timothy Wheeler.

Response to the Foregoing.

"1." To the first inquiry, we answer for ourself, We use the expression to indicate our faith that a future life is entirely dependent on a union with Christ, who is the only Life-giver God the Father has ever appointed for Adam's race. Hence we say, "No life out of Christ;" meaning that any life after the dissolution of this mortal constitution, is only obtained by virtue of a living union with Christ; which is not the result of any outward forms or ceremonies, but by the gift of God's Spirit imparted to the believer: so that "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead, dwell in you; he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." All others "remain in the congregation of the dead"—they "shall not see life."

"2." Immortality is a gift. "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Immortality is deathlessness. He that hath the Son of God hath eternal life, or deathlessness: he "cannot die any more."

"3." A gift may be bestowed unconditionally, or conditionally, according to the pleasure or wisdom of the giver. God gave his Son to the world unconditionally: that is, It was not anything the world had done or could do that moved him to give his Son: the gift was the free out-going of his love for "the world," lost and perishing, as it was. This gift laid the foundation for a requirement of men for an act on their part; which is a condition of further gifts; especially the gift of eternal life, or immortality. That condition is, faith: or an unfeigned acceptance of, and reliance upon, Jesus as God's anointed Life-giver; or, as "the Christ" who is appointed to give life from the dead by another life principle than that by which men now live. The present is an animal life: the future is a spiritual one.

The "obedience of faith" is essental to our obtaining the gift: and "immortality is the reward of" such "obedience:" but the reward is not strictly of "debt:" that is, though God is "faithful and just" to bestow the reward he has promised, yet the obedience required bears no proportion to the gift bestowed; still the obedience is essential to our receiving the promised benefit.

If we were to tell a child we would give him a thousand dollars if he would bring us an apple, and he should bring it; he could justly claim that we should keep our word; but when he had received the money he would never think he received it as a debt. He would tell every one he saw that we made him a gift of it. If he were asked—Did you not have to do something for it? he might respond, "I carried him an apple—but that's nothing." Yet that was the condition, which if he had not complied with he would not have received the gift.

A debt, strictly speaking, arises from having received an equivalent—something of like value. In this sense, no created being can ever claim any thing from God. But if God is pleased to promise his creatures anything valuable, because of their complying with anything, however trifling it may be, that he has specified; then, though it may be a gift, it "is the reward of obedience;" and, in a certain sense, partakes of the nature of a debt; a debt, however, which God was under no obligation to contract, and which does not in the least detract from its character as a free gift; for it was his love that led him to make the offer to poor, helpless, and perishing creatures.

Our friend will now see why we do not make "corrections" in the articles of our correspondents on this subject; and he will also observe, that by a standing announcement, at our editorial head, we will not hold ourself responsible for the sentiments of any of our correspondents; though we claim the liberty, if we judge best, to remark on their views. The writer alone is responsible for his sentiments; but we are to judge of the propriety of inserting any communication sent. We by no means agree with all the sentiments that appear in the Herald; but sometimes think best to let them pass without provoking a controversy.

Samuel T. Spear, D. D., on "The Dead."

Some two months ago, the Independent contained an article on "The Dead," by Dr. Spear, of Brooklyn, N. Y., in which very singular statements are made. Speaking of Chalmers in life, of his "pious eloquence," etc., he follows him down to death, parting with him in the evening, he says:

"Chalmers sinks into sleep, and never awakes. That night was to him 'the last of earth.' His great and good spirit, unobserved by man, silently withdraws from the scenes of time. Chalmers is dead." . . . . . "What has become of the soul life of that illustrious man?" . . . . . "Where is Chalmers now? What is the effect of death upon him? Who can fail to see that this question in respect to Chalmers, and equally so in respect to any other man, is really one of the greatest that can be asked or answered?

"The moment we face the question it confronts us with its mystery. The path of thought seems unfamiliar. Our observation and experience pause with death. Looking beyond it, the eye passes into a dense and solemn shade, overhanging the margins of time and covering the frontier of the great future. That shade we cannot penetrate; and no voice from beyond it salutes us. There is a fascination in this mystery. The problem which it starts and conceals man never perfectly solves. We are of necessity a world of inquisitive gazers, ever looking up to a sky whose lights and shades excite the soul to the utmost alertness and intensity of thought; ever turning the ear toward that far-off land, that perchance some echo of a spirit gone may reach us on these mortal shores. God has ordained that such should be our mental position in respect to the sequel that awaits us after death. It is not our fault; and we do not know enough to pronounce it our misfortune."

Such is the blindness which follows a false theory of the soul. How the "mystery" is solved when men abandon human traditions and cleave to the word of God. "The problem" of an inherent immortal soul, in living existence somewhere, when the man is dead, will puzzle any "D. D." to solve; and truly, "man never perfectly solves" it; so they become star "gazers, ever looking up to a sky" kingdom of fancy, and "turning the ear toward that far-off land, that perchance some echo of a spirit gone may reach us on these mortal shores." Alas, for such, that they cannot invoke through some "witch of Endor," some Chalmers to dispel the dark cloud from their minds. One of these immortal-soul ministers, of an orthodox church, not long since, confessed to a friend of ours, he could not convince him of the soul's immortality from the Bible, and advised him to attend upon a "spirit-rapping" exhibition, and that could convince him of the truth of the doctrine. Our friend answered the minister that king Saul tried that once; but the result was not very favorable to the seeker after familiar spirits.

Let Dr. Spear and others of like faith turn their "ear toward" the word of God, and let fables go, and they will stop listening in the direction he speaks of; for "we have a more sure word of prophecy" which clearly informs us that "the dead know not anything;" and that the saints are "asleep," to be awakened at the descent of "the Lord himself from heaven:" then "the dead in Christ shall rise." Till then, their slumbers are unbroken. "God has" not "ordained that such" a "mental position, in respect to the sequel that awaits us after death," as Dr. Spear represents, should be our lot. "It is our fault" that any man, with the Bible in his hands, should be found in that "mental position;" and God will hold those responsible who promulgate such sentiments. But let us hear Dr. Spear again. He calls upon us to "Reach forth thy faith, and dismiss thy fears! Be calm, be quiet, be hopeful! This seeming destruction is just no destruction at all. The man does not die. That which dies never was the man. The shadows which here darken the sky, seen from the other side, become sunbeams. Life is but a preliminary, and death the introduction to its sequel. The scene shifts that the prologue may pass into the grander epilogue. Death opens the future, and by a spiritual translation establishes the soul in some estate of good or ill, according to the affinities of moral character. It will be human fault if this apparent tragedy be not the sublimest coronation of man's being." "Such is substantially the Christian's solution of the problem, leaning upon the impressive suggestions of nature, and more leaning upon the sure wisdom of heaven."

Such is the theology of immortal-soulists. "Ye shall not surely die"! Could there have been a more perfect following of the copy set by the serpent than this last paragraph from Dr. Spear? "Death opens the future, and by a spiritual translation," etc.; that is "the sublimest coronation of man's being." Farewell to the resurrection! that is all a farce; to raise him [that believeth] up at the last day"! what a useless affair! Why, he had his "coronation" when he died! We wonder, if he is to be judged after his coronation? or, where do these D. D.'s put in their day of judgment? or, is that a farce also? What "Nature" may "suggest" to these teachers we cannot tell; but we are "sure" the "wisdom of heaven" never taught such palpable contradictions about death; for that saith "Man dieth." Dr. Spear says, "That which dies never was the man." Which will we believe? O, but the Dr. means "the soul is the man, and that never dies." But unfortunately for such a presumption, God says, "The soul that sinneth it shall die." "Let God be true," whoever else may be charged with falsehood.

We are forcibly struck with the confessed bewilderment of such theologians. They strive in vain to place their dead friends in some position where they can think of them as now living; and having sought in vain for relief in the Bible, and overlooking entirely the resurrection, which Dr. Spear has not once named in his entire article, they plunge into the dark fields of fancy, a specimen of which, by Dr. S., shall conclude this article. It is as follows:

"And who are some of these dead ones? They are our kindred gone—our children early called, our honored sires now taking their long, last sleep—once beings of great personal interest to us, loving us and loved by us. Can we, then, dismiss them from thought the moment we cease to see them? This would be alike unnatural and unreasonable. Some hypothesis, some theory, some opinion, some faith every one needs, with which to visit the great unknown whither the objects of his tenderest love have gone. The absence of all thought is hardly possible. The broken ties of earth and the bleeding hearts of time force meditation into the soul. The very effort to drive it away will be sure to keep it there. The partialities of human friendship venture upon the prophetic office and write an oracle over the dead. The fond mother sees her smiling infant in the skies."

Such is the mist of darkness into which vain philosophy plunges great minds, who undertake to build up the theory of inherent immortality. "Some hypothesis . . . . every one needs with which to visit the great unknown, whither the objects of his tenderest love have gone," says the Dr. Yes; and let the Scripture hypothesis, that the saints are "asleep," and rest in "the dust of the earth," till the voice of Christ shall awake them "at the last day," suffice our "faith;" and not fly up into "the skies," where our dead ones are not, to feed a diseased fancy.

"HOPKINSIANISM."

OUR article last week, referring to a friend whose name we did not mention, who wished us to publish a series of articles from him, seems to have given great offence. He says, "'Hopkinsianism' does not express my faith," etc. After we had stated the substance of the Hopkinsian theory, we said, "Such is substantially the theory sought to be revived," etc. We reaffirm the truth of the statement then made; we might add, it has all the features of that theory, only, if possible, in a worse form; it positively asserts that no salvation was ever designed for, or ever is offered to, the non-elect. To confirm the truth of this charge, we give the following extracts from his articles. The following is from the first sent us, which was the occasion of our remarks last week. He says:

"Before we enter upon the subject, let us clearly understand what I am to do, what I intend to oppose, and what I am to establish. The matter then is this, to show that that doctrine which tells us that all men are called upon to accept salvation is fallacious. This is the doctrine to be overthrown."

This is the mighty achievement to which he addresses himself, and asks us to insert his articles, as he shall send them, ad infinitum; or, without specifying how many, and a request that no response be made till he is through. He speaks of a "general call to all men" (though it may be doubted if he intends it to be understood as relating to the "elect," at all), and says:

"Now mind again (for this is a very material part of our subject), that this general call is NOT to bring about either regeneration or salvation. No, this general call has much less important ends in view, as we shall presently see. Salvation is accomplished by the work of Christ, regeneration is brought about by the absolute power of the Holy Spirit, and that according to the order of eternal election in Christ; . . . . yet as this general call is by men substituted for the special call, and natural faith and repentance put in the place of that faith and repentance which accompanies salvation—seeing this strong delusion is very popular, it will be well to understand this matter clearly. . . . . . As to the objects of this general call, they are not addressed as objects of eternal love, eternal redemption, or eternal salvation, ... how monstrous must be that doctrine which tells us men will at the last day be condemned for not accepting salvation!"

Here are all the features of Hopkinsianism, only in a worse form, if possible. The main features of the Hopkinsian system were the unconditional election to salvation of a certain definite number of Adam's race before man was created: and the passing by, or reprobation of the remainder to eternal damnation. Then there was what was called common grace and special grace; agreeing with our friend's "general call and special call." This special grace was given to none but the eternally elect few; the lowest degree of this special grace infallibly secured the salvation of the elected persons: not a particle of it was ever granted any of the non-elect; yet without this special grace no one could ever be saved. To the non-elect, common grace (the "general call") was given; but the highest degree of this would never accomplish a man's salvation. When asked, How, then, are the non-elect without excuse for not attaining to salvation? the reply was, "Because they have common grace" (the "general call.") "But how does that leave them without excuse, seeing you say the highest degree of it is not sufficient to accomplish their salvation?" This question staggered them for a moment; but, recovering themselves, they said, "Because they have natural ability to use the common grace and get to heaven." "How do you know, then," they were asked, "but some one of these common-grace sinners will use his natural ability and get to heaven?" Here they were dumb.

Our friend, however, has improved upon this system, by denying that these non-elect ever have any "call to salvation" at all: there never was any design by his "Sovereign" to put salvation in their reach or power: their punishment is to be graduated by the use of their natural ability, and the use they make of the "general call:" they are to die, any way; do what they will; only somehow they are to be condemned (to what, thus far, he has not said) for not submitting to his fancied Sovereign. If they submit, they die; and if they do not submit, they die; for his Sovereign never intended they should be saved, and never offered them salvation. For such a sovereign we have no respect: to such an one we owe no homage. Such doctrine in relation to the Divine government may justly be denominated, "Damnable Heresy." It is a "denying the Lord that bought them."

But here comes in a difficulty. Our friend says, "Christ died only for the elect." Then the Lord never "bought" any of the non-elect; hence it must be some of the elect that "deny the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction." Then they must have "fallen from grace." So ends the new-vamped Hopkinsianism. We have only to add, in conclusion, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

MORE ABOUT THE DEVIL.

BY JACOB GRIM.

DR. SPEAR says, "The Scripture devil is not a being of climate, or country, or age; not simply a character of antiquity now obsolete." We say the devil is not confined to a single person, system, or thing, but is any person, system, or thing that is adverse, or in opposition to God, Jesus Christ, or true holiness. Hence the serpent in the garden was a satan, or devil, because it was in opposition to holiness or righteousness. It beguiled Eve from the path of obedience, through its subtilty. And although there was no sin of disobedience on the part of the serpent, yet we find the Lord cursed it because it used its cunning against him.

Cain was a satan, devil, because he set himself up against God. Cain was angry with the Lord because he blessed Abel, and then set himself against Jehovah to overthrow God's purpose with Abel. Hence he was a liar; for when God asked him where his brother was he lied unto the Lord, and said he did not know. He murdered his brother and then lied about it: he was therefore a satan, an adversary, in English, a devil, or evil, a liar and a murderer from the beginning.

Dr Spear says of the Bible, "It is for the most part the history of the devil in this world that is given in the Bible." Now, so far as the Old Testament Scriptures are concerned, the word devil, according to Cruden, never occurs once in the whole book. The word word devils occurs several times. The Hebrew word satan about seven times. Not half as often as it now occurs in some modern sermons. So much for the history of the devil being the history of the Bible.

WHAT IS THE DEVIL?

To our first question, What is the devil? we answer "sin." In the language of Jesus when in debate with the Jews on this subject, to our minds he has settled this question. In John viii., after speaking of himself in connection with his Father, many of the Jews believed on him. "Jesus therefore said to those Jews who believed on him, If ye continue in my word, ye are truly my disciples . . . . . and the truth shall make you free. They answered him, we are offspring of Abraham and were never in bondage to any one, and how sayest thou, Ye shall become free? Jesus said to them (the Jews who believed on him), Whosoever committeth sin is the slave of sin" (not of the devil, but of sin.) "And the slave remaineth not in the house forever, but the Son remaineth (in the house) forever." "I know that ye are Abraham's offspring, but ye seek to kill me . . . . I speak what I have seen with my Father, and ye do what ye have seen with your father."

Here is a question of parentage between Jesus and the Jews. In the first instance Jesus admitted they were of the parentage of Abraham. Now he evidently attributes it to some other source. And the Jews evidently understand him so, for "They answered him and said, our father is Abraham." Again Jesus answers them, "Ye do the deeds of your father." ("Not Abraham.") They understand him to charge them with being the children out of wedlock. For they answer him, "We are not born of fornication. We have one Father, God." Here they have changed from a natural birth to a spiritual or higher. And Jesus said unto them, If God were your Father ye would love me . . . . Why do ye not understand my speech?" I spake of sin before, and ye did not understand my words when I said whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin. "Why do ye not understand my speech? because ye cannot hear my words." As though he would have said, Must I use your Jewish terms and prejudices? "Ye are of your father the devil, and ye chose to do the desires of your father." In Rom. vi., 16, Paul makes use of the same language as Christ. "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his (personified) servants ye are whom ye obey; whether of sin to death (not devil) or of obedience to righteousness. But God be thanked that though ye were the servants of sin, yet ye obeyed," etc. "And being made free from sin (how easy to have said devil here) ye became the servants of righteousness. (I speak after the manner of men on account of the infirmity of your flesh.) For as ye yielded your members servants to uncleanness . . . . so now yield yourselves to righteousness, to practice holiness. For when ye were servants of sin (not of the devil) ye were free from righteousness." "But now being made free from sin, and become servants of God, ye have your fruit to holiness, and the end everlasting life."

Modern theology would read the closing of this chapter thus: For the wages of the devil are everlasting misery, but the gift of God is eternal happiness through Jesus Christ our Lord. But we prefer the theology of the Bible. "For the wages of SIN is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Sin, then, we understand to be satan in opposition to holiness, or opposed to God.

WHERE DID THE DEVIL COME FROM?

We answer, in the language of our heavenly Teacher, of whom we always wish to be a scholar. Mark vii., 14, "And he called to himself all the multitude. He said to them, Hear me, all of you, and understand. There is nothing from without a man, which going into him can defile him; but the things which come our of him, those are what defile the man. If any one hath ears let him hear. . . . And he said unto them, Are ye also without understanding? Do ye not consider that nothing which from without entereth into the man can defile him. . . . That which cometh from the man, that defileth the man. For from within, from the heart of men proceed their evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, malice, deceit, lasciviousness envy, railing, pride, foolishness. All these evil things come from within and defile the man."

There hardly seems much use for a devil to an individual who understands our Lord's teachings. James was one of the disciples of Jesus who listened to these words of our Lord, and we will see how James understood them. James i., 13. "Let no man say when he is tried by evil, I am tried by God, for God is untried by evil, and he himself trieth no one; but each one is tried when he is drawn away and enticed by his own desire. Then his desire conceiveth, beareth sin; and sin, being perfected, bringeth forth death." How much better to be able to understand where to find the devil, and be able to fight an adversary that we can find, and know where to deal the blows to make them tell for our good, than to fight Dr. Spear's imaginary devil, that when we attempt to deal him a blow is somewhere else.

To go back to our starting point: God made man good, endowed him with desire for knowledge, which was good if properly directed. He also made the serpent, and endowed it with knowledge. What the serpent was, is not my business at present to enquire; sufficient for me to know that Jehovah said it was more cunning than any beast of the field. It was a truth, it knew more than the woman did. And it beguiled her and led her astray, so that she committed sin. This sin, whatever it was, or evil, was the seed of the serpent. And God said, I will put enmity between thee and the woman (personally), and between thy seed and the seed of the woman. We see this commenced in Cain and Abel, the two seeds personified. Abel, the personification of righteousness, and Cain that of evil. And when Cain brought his offering to the Lord, it was done from an evil, or improper motive, and not the thing offered. And Cain was angry because his offering was not accepted, and his anger was kindled against Abel, the seed of holiness, or the woman. And the Lord said to Cain, "If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door; (of thy heart.) And it (sin) shall be subject to thee, and thou shalt rule over it." But Cain did not do well; and sin ruled over him. It seems strange that the devil, if a person, is left out of this first transaction altogether. According to our understanding of the Scriptures, the two seeds are sin and holiness, personified. And the children of holiness are called the children of the Lord; and the children of sin are called the children of the devil, or adversary; and there has been a perpetual warfare going on in the world between sin and holiness ever since the introduction of sin into the world. And we have the promise, that, although evil is bruising the heel of holiness, sin, or evil, shall be crushed under the foot of holiness. From this seed has sprung many devils. They are not hard to find when they are wanted. Jesus needed one: "Jesus answered them, Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?" John vi., 20. They are not hard to find when needed for any purpose against God or his cause.

We have now given our opinion of the only devil or adversary that has troubled us, and we are fully satisfied, if we are only able to overcome the evil from within, we shall have no trouble with any devil from without.

BY HON. O. S. HALSTED.

IN Numb. xxii., 22, the Heb. is . . . . and took a stand mlak (the) messenger, of Jehovah in (the) way for (a) stn [written satan] —adversary—to him; Gr., and stood up the aggelos, [angelos; where two gs come together in the Greek the first is sounded n], messenger, of God diabalein [from diaballo, whence diabolos] to cross over, or, deceive, him; Lat., and stood angelus, (the) messenger of Dominus in (the) way against Balaam; [angelus is the Greek word angelos; and accordingly Ainsworth's Latin and English dictionary does not give angelus]; Douay, and angel of the Lord stood in the way against Balaam; Ital., and the Angelo [the same Gr. word] of the signore appeared upon the road for to contradict, or, oppose, him; E. V., and the angel of the Lord stood in the way for an adversary against him.

Numb. xxii., 32, Heb. . . . for (a) stn; Gr. for (a) diabolen (of the, added); Lat., that I might oppose (thee); Douay, Ital., and E. V., to withstand (thee).

Esther vii., 4, Heb. . . . tsr, (the) adversary, enemy; Gr. the diabolos; Lat., (the) enemy; Douay, an enemy; Ital., and E. V., the enemy. [Here we have the Gr. diabolos for the Heb. tsr, defined the same as the Heb. stn; each being defined, an adversary, an enemy. Diabolos is the word used for the Heb. stn, and therefore must have a meaning corresponding to that of stn, adversary, enemy. Any other word that can properly be given for diabolos must be equivalent in meaning to stn. We shall find such other words to be, deceiver, seducer, tempter. To show this, we anticipate two of the verses cited by "D."—Rev. xii., 9; xx. 2. In the first, the Gr., is, And eblethe, was struck down, beaten down, overthrown, killed, that dragon, that great, that serpent, that original, called diabolos, and the stn, called tempter, seducer, deceiver, and the adversary which planon, leading astray, deceiving, seducing, the whole habitable globe: eblethe, he was struck down, [or either of the other words above given], eis ten gen, to the ground; and the angeloi, messengers, of him, together with him eblethesan, were struck down, beaten down, overthrown, killed, [All men of sin are angels—messengers—of the breath of evil. I have used the language —"the principle of evil." In accordance with Scripture the breath of evil is the proper language. The Scripture language is to pneuma to hagion, the breath, the holy; and to pneuma to poneron, the breath, the bad, the evil. And in 1 John iv., 6, we have, to pneuma tes aletheias, kai to pneuma tes planes—the breath of truth, and the breath of seduction: seduction is equivalent to temptation. This breath of seduction is the breath of evil, seducing, tempting, to transgression, sin. In the verse Rev. xii., 9, above, we have given, struck down to the ground. The ground is frequently meant by the Heb. arts, and the Gr. ge, used for it; as in Gen. xxxiii., 3, where the Heb. is arts; the Gr. there is, epi ten gen —to the ground; Lat., in terram; Ital., a terra; Douay, to the ground; E. V., to the ground. And in Gen. xxxvii., 10 the Heb. is arts; Gr., epi ten gen; Lat., super terram: Ital., a terra; but there the Douay gives, upon the earth; and the E. V., to the earth. It should be, to the ground. And in Job. xii., 8, the Heb. is, to (the) arts—ground; Gr., to the ge—ground; Lat., to (the) terra; Ital., terra; Douay and E. V., to the earth. It should be, to the ground: and Gesenius gives this verse as an example and renders, to the ground. The Lat. of Rev. xii., 9, is that great dragon, serpent of long standing, which is called diabolus and satan which seduceth the whole orb; and he was thrown in terram to (the) ground; Ital., And the great dragon, the serpent ancient, that is called Diavolo, and satan, which seduceth all the world, was gittato in terra—knocked down upon ground, and were with him gittati—knocked down—his angeli—messengers. [Graglia in his Ital. and Eng. dictionary, under terra gives gittare a terra, and for it gives, to knock down, ruin. To knock down, is to knock to the earth—down upon the ground; which Graglia gives as an Ital. phrase for to ruin.] The Rheims of Rev. xii., 9, is, And that great dragon was cast out, that old serpent called the devil and satan, who seduceth the whole world: and he was cast out unto the earth, and his angels were thrown down with him. [Observe, first, the Gr. article is not here used before diabolos, and in such cases, our article the can never be used: And the Ital. puts neither of its articles here before Diavolo. The Latin language has no article, and Romanism takes the license of using our article the, in numberless instances, in rendering the Latin (which it has made the sacred language) into English, where the Greek does not use its article. The Rheims here has an instance of such license in giving the devil. The Rheims Romish Version, by its rendering of this verse, means to teach that the orthodox Devil and his lesser devils, having made war upon God in the orthodox heaven, were finally beaten, and were cast out unto the earth.) The E. V. of the verse is, And that great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him. [The E. V. improves on Romish orthodoxy here, by giving the Devil, and Satan, (a capital D and S), and by giving, was cast out into the earth. But it seems to me that orthodoxy's theory is, that its Devil and devils were cast down to the orthodox hell. We here refer the reader to the fourth column of p. 1 of THE HERALD OF LIFE, of Dec. 4, 1867, beginning at Rev. xii., 10.]

In Rev. xx. 2, cited by "D.," the Gr. is, And ekratese, he mastered, conquered, the dragon, the serpent, the original, which is diabolos kai satan—(a) deceiver, seducer, tempter, and (an) adversary; Lat., And he laid hold of, or, held, (the) dragon, (the) serpent of long standing, which is (a) diabolus and satan; Rheims, And he laid hold on the dragon, the old serpent, which is the devil and satan; E. V., And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil and Satan. [Here, again, the E. V., follows the Rheims in putting the before Devil.] These verses,—12, 10; 20, 2, show plainly that the great dragon, the serpent the original, diabolos, and satan, all mean one and the same thing. The serpent represents the of evil, that is, (filling the ellipsis), the breath of evil. This breath of evil is called also, diabolos, tempter, seducer, deceiver, and is called also, stn, adversary. The d'evil—devil, is right when we have got the meaning of it, namely, the of evil, symbolized by the Heb. word nhsh—whisperer, used in Gen. chap. iii., where the Douay and E. V. have serpent. What more apt symbol for the breath of evil—the of evil—than the whispering serpent? Diabolos has no such signification as whisperer; but it is another apellation for the of evil—the breath of evil, namely, tempter, deceiver, seducer; and stn, adversary is another appellation for the same thing. It is this breath of evil—tempter—adversary of which Paul speaks, when he says, Rom. vii., 21. Gr., I find hence tou nomon, the arrangement, established law, in, or, to, me wishing to do the good that to me to kakon, the bad lies near, or at the side; and in v. 23, Gr. I see, but, or, indeed, another nomon in the members of me warring against the nomos of the noos, purpose, disposition of mind, of me. And a Pagan poet, Ovid, before the Christian era, expresses beautifully the same sentiment:

—"Si possem sanior essem,
Sed tratrit invitum nova vis: aliudque cupido,
Mens aliud suadet. Video meliora proloque,
Deteriora sequor.",

We attempt a translation:

"If I could, wiser, (or, sounder) I would be,
But draws unwilling, (or by constraint) a new force:
Forasmuch as one (thing) I desire (the) mind another (or the contrary) persuades.
I see (the) better (things) and approve; (the) worse, I follow.

This breath of evil is not the accuser, but is the whisperer, tempter, adversary. And Matthew, in iv., 3, gives "the tempter" for "the diabolos" in iv., 1. The Rheims, and E. V., give "the devil" in iv., 1, and "the tempter" in iv., 3. Actual sin is the accuser, not the breath of evil—proneness to sin. The distinction between this proneness to sin and actual sin is made very plain by the Apostle James, chap. i., 14, 15. In v. 14 the Gr. is, But every one peirazetai, is tempted, solicited, (to evil, says Donnegan; it should be, to sin,) being drawn along and enticed by his own epithumia, eager, desire, longing for, passion, lust, appetite: [that is, by the breath of evil, proneness to sin. Breath is often used in Scripture for desire, lust: desire is, breathing after: And peirazetai, in this verse, is from the same verb from which is peirazon, in Matt. iv. 3, for which the Douay, and E. V., there give, tempter]. In James i., 15, the Greek is, Thereupon the epithumia [see v. 14] becoming pregnant bringeth forth amartian—sin: and the sin [sin without our article] being accomplished, terminated, produceth death. Here we have the breath of evil, the whisperer—tempter—and so, the adversary; and actual sin as the result of yielding to the enticement. Every one has this breath of evil, this d'evil —devil—in him. But God has given to every one the moral faculty—the moral sense—conscience—the divine monitor, acting instinctively within him as an opposing force to the breath of evil, the tempter; and adversary. "The still, but solemn whisper of conscience, instintive in its nature, and independent in its judgments, acts with the rapidity of thought, and with the force of a divine mandate" against the whisper of the breath of evil [that is, enticing to sin]. And acts against its first suggestions. It does not wait till the sin suggested is committed; though its judgment of condemnation also follows the act of sinning. It is the disregarding the voice of conscience, and yielding to that of the tempter, the evil propensity within us, and so committing actual sin, that accuses us to our conscience, the arbiter of right and wrong. And it was their actual transgression that accused our first parents to their awakened conscience. Does the orthodox Devil that "D." would get from diabolos accuse any one either of actual sin or of proneness to sin?

A PIOUS woman in the days of persecution, used to say, she should never want, because her God would supply her every need. She was taken before an unjust judge for attending the worship of God. The judge on seeing her, tauntingly said, "I have often wished to have you in my power, and now I shall send you to prison, and then how will you be fed?" She replied, "If it be my heavenly Father's pleasure, I shall be fed from your table." And that was literally the case; for, the judge's wife being present at her examination, was greatly surprised at the good woman's firmness, and took care to send her victuals from her table, so that she was comfortably supplied all the time she was in confinement: and the other found her reward, for the Lord was pleased to convert her and give her the blessings of his salvation.

FAITH rests with confidence on the word of God, assured that his promises cannot fail. When one has right views of the Divine character, he feels that he could sooner doubt his own existence than the promise of God. The Bible itself furnishes no finer illustration of a sublime faith than the following reply of a poor Scotch woman to Rev. John Brown, of Haddington:

Mr. Brown had been pressing her with hard questions, to test her knowledge of the Scriptures, and the strength and depth of her piety. At last he asked:

"Janet, what if God, after all he has done, should break his promise and drop you into hell?"

The poor woman promptly replied: "Let him do e'en as he likes. If he does, he'll lose mair than I do."

It would be hard for anyone to go beyond this in right conceptions of the faithfulness of God.

Letters and Extracts.

LIBERTY WETHERBEE, Bangor, Me., writes: I am glad of the weekly visits of the HERALD OF LIFE. I prize it above all other papers. I have never taken such interest in it as of late. It grows more and more interesting. I am laboring Sundays at Kenduskeag. It is a new place for the Bible truths that we hold. The Life question is taking deep hold, and there is a searching of the Bible as they have never done before. The opposition are trying to shut out these truths. But the harder they oppose, with the spirit they possess, the more the truth prevails. We strive to present the truth in the love of it. Our Father will take care of the consequences. I send you one new subscriber and shall send more soon. Some who have strongly opposed the HERALD OF LIFE now wish to take it, and have come to the conclusion there is no life future out of Christ.

P. FLICKNER, Delton, Wis., whose paper, by some misunderstanding, was discontinued at the commencement of this volume, writes: I send you $2.50 for the HERALD OF LIFE. I should like the back numbers. Oh, how I have missed it since it stopped. We know not how to do without it, and I should not have been so long without it now had I not met with an accident which came near putting an end to my life; it was the explosion of a large lamp directly in my face, burning it terribly, and my hands worse, if possible. Though it has been nearly three months, I am not able to use but one hand yet, and the probability is that the other will never be as good as before. But the Lord knoweth best, and doeth all things well; so we shall not complain, but thank him that it is as well with us as it is.

PAULINA D. CAMPBELL.

AN OLD YEAR'S POEM.

Though I be poore, yet will I make hard shift,
That I may send my God a New Year's gift:
Nor myrrh, nor frankincense,
Can I dispense;
Nor gold of Ophir
Is in my coffer;
With wealth I have so small acquaintance, as
I scarce know tinne from silver, gold from brasse.

Oriental rubyes, emeralds greene,
Blue sapphires, sparkling diamonds I have seen,
Yet never yet did touch!
Or gemme—or ouch,
Nor pearl, nor amber
Are in my chamber!
These things are in my mind, but never yet
Vouchsafed to lodge within my cabinet.

My ever-living, ever-loving King
Yet shall receive from me a better thing!
For prince's diadems,
Flaming with gemmes,
With riches drest,
Of East or West,
Match not this gift! which if my God shall owne,
I'll not change lots with him that wears a crown!

An heart! with penitence made new and cleane,
Filled with faith, hope and love, must be my strane!
My God! thou didst not slight
The widow's mite!
Accept of this
Poore sacrifice;
Though I here give but what before was thine;
A treasure taken out of thine owne mine!

—Rev. George Herbert, 1632.

A NEW YEAR'S POEM.

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light:
The year is dying in the night—
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new—
Ring, happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in redress for all mankind.

Ring out a slowly-dying cause,
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out my mournful rhymes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite:
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease,
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land—
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

A GOOD WATCH.

FREDERICK I., king of Prussia, surnamed The Great, was very familiar with his soldiers, and often chatted with them without restraint. One day, at a review of his troops, he perceived, attached to the uniform of a simple corporal, a beautiful watch-chain. He playfully pointed out the soldier to one of the officers of his staff.

"If your majesty wishes to enjoy a hearty laugh," responded the officer, ask him to show you his watch."

Frederick continued his review. Arriving before the corporal and casting his eye upon the chain he said:

"I congratulate you, my brave fellow, in having been sufficiently economical to buy a watch upon your pay as a corporal. Does your watch keep good time?"

"I—I guess not, very," stammered the corporal, considerably embarrassed.

"Let us see," rejoined the king, pulling out his own watch which was beautifully ornamented with diamonds; "mine marks exactly six o'clock; look at yours."

The corporal, who began to blush and stammer, dropped his head slightly and drew from his pocket his chain, at the end of which was supended, not a watch, but a rifle ball, and presented it to Frederick.

"Sire," he said, gaining confidence as he spoke to his sovereign, "my watch neither marks six nor seven o'clock; but it reminds me whenever I look at it that at all hours of the day or night I ought to be ready to die for my country and my king."

"Very well, my friend, responded Frederick, visibly affected, take my watch also, in order that you may the better tell at what hour you ought to die for me."—Youth's Casket.

STOP THIEF!

IT is all very well to cry stop thief! when your money has been stolen, or your orchard has been robbed. But there are some thieves which no constable can catch, no human law can punish. I am sure that you can tell what they are. No? Well, then, let me suggest one or two of them.

First, then, there is INTEMPERANCE. Isn't he a thief and a swindler as well? Truly he is. He steals away the brains of any poor victim who will associate with him. He is apparently a jolly good fellow along at first; he talks and laughs and cries out huzza! huzza! But you just take him into your confidence, and before you are aware of it your brains will be gone. But that isn't the whole of it, though it may be the worst. He steals the money out of the pockets of his votaries; he robs them of their time and of their reputation. Very, very often he takes health, and even life. And then he robs the wife and the children of the money which is rightfully theirs, leaving them often in poverty and want.

But is there no law to punish such an immense sinner? No; none that ever I heard of. The only thing we can do is to keep out of his company and watch him. One TOTAL ABSTINENCE is the only constable capable of taking care of the fellow. In his hands you will be perfectly safe. Yet he only prevents mischief—he cannot punish the thief for what he has already done. Some people think that License will be a capital officer to prevent the crime and misery which intemperance scatters around us; but I have no faith in him. I fear he will be making bargains with the wretch: agreeing that he may do mischief if he will do it according to law. No, no, boys; if you care anything for my advice, just engage Total Abstinence to take care of you. He's your man.

There's another thief I may just mention. I mean PROCRASTINATION. He isn't so much to be dreaded as the other, but he should be shunned. He steals your time.

"Now, Charlie," said his mother to him as he went out of the door to go school, "don't you harbor that thief to-day."

"No, mother, I will not," answered Charlie, deliberately and emphatically.

As he sets off to school, his mother bids him "remember."

On he goes until he gets almost over the bridge, when he stops a minute to watch the little fishes darting about in the water below. He almost wished he were a fish, that he had no grammar to learn or copy to write; he was sure fishes must be very happy, with nothing to do the livelong day but play in the water.

Charlie well knew that he had not a moment to spare on the bridge; he knew that precisely five minutes after nine the master fastened the door, and no tardy boy could get in; he knew it was too bad to lose a whole half day's school; but for all that he kept stopping and delaying. In fact, his old companion, the thief, was by his side, ready to steal his precious moments, so the boy kept stopping, and stopping, thinking about the fishes, and saying, "Oh, it is not pleasant to be cooped up in that old schoolroom," until, all at once, his mother's word, "REMEMBER," rushed into his mind. It seemed as if she spoke again in his ear.

He started up from his lounging attitude, threw back his arms, as much as to say, "Hands off, Mr. Thief!" and took to his heels in the direction of the schoolroom. Charlie ran with all his might. He arrived just a minute before the door was closed, and got in.

"Good!" he said to himself; "good! I have made my escape this time, I know. Good-bye, Mr. Thief, you and I have done, I hope. We'll not have any more dealings together."

I hope the lad was as good as his word.

There are other thieves beside these which beset us night and day. No constables, as I have said, can arrest them, no law can punish. In every case the victims are punished, while the greater criminal gets off scot free.

Yes, we can protect ourselves, and we are foolish if we do not. We must watch for the appearance of these pests, and drive them promptly away. The youngest as well as the oldest are equal to the task and can escape. TOTAL ABSTINENCE, PROMPTNESS, EDUCATION, VIRTUE, and INTELLIGENCE are capital assistants, and they can be had if we want their services.

TIME SERVERS: THE CHOICE.

A MAN once asked a question without waiting for an answer; "What is truth?" I am not going to answer this question; I would much rather ask it where he did, and wait patiently for an answer.

The truth, with regard to a future state, is of infinite importance to know and believe; and I wonder it is so little regarded.

In a world like this, so full of deceit and guile, we may not expect to gain anything of value without labor. Very few are born into the truth; yet we are apt to flatter ourselves that this is the case. Early impressions are hard to be eradicated, true or false.

The great majority of men take up with the faith of their fathers, and follow in their footsteps. This road is so easy, and costs so little, it tempts too many to take it without questioning where it will lead them. Some fancy it is of little consequence what they believe; all will prove equally safe at last. Well, if so many have toiled, and striven, and suffered in vain: if the truth is not to be found, or if found, it is of no more value than error, we may as well go with the multitude in the broad and well-beaten track.

"Take it easy," is the best motto. "Let the priest or the minister do the talking and preaching, it is their business, and not ours." This is the way people act, and actions speak louder than words. Again, people don't like to be disturbed in their long-cherished hopes and expectations. To raise a doubt in their minds of the truth or value of their idols, is not to be endured. "Great is Diana of the Ephesians."

The cry is "Let us alone; do not disturb our sweet repose with any new-fangled theories. Our fathers, for generations, lived and died in this faith. Can we doubt for a moment their safety? It is so uncharitable to raise a doubt that they were not right; good, honest, and sincere as they were. Shall we set ourselves up in judgment against them? How much better shall we be esteemed in the world and in the church, to cast a wide mantle of charity over all these conflicting opinions, and try to believe all will come out right at last. Christ and his apostles did indeed require all to believe the gospel of the kingdom, and to obey it so as to be made wise unto salvation: but they were inspired, and in this enlightened age it is hopeless to expect to bring all these sects and parties to think or believe alike. It would be a hopeless and thankless task and few are bold or silly enough to make the experiment.

"We are indeed commanded to search the Scriptures; to prove all things; to cleave to the good; to buy the truth and sell it not. But why not keep quiet and let every one judge for themselves in these matters?" How can we expect our little light to shine in this dark world, in opposition to the wise and learned D. D.s, who fancy that wisdom will die with them? We are told, indeed, to let our light shine, however small, and to improve our one talent, but worldly wisdom dictates a much easier plan, and not half so costly, namely, charity that covereth a multitude of sins: this is the grand specific that cures all diseases, and bids fair to supersede all other remedies. Some may think this method of interpretation liable to some objections, but if the majority rules in these matters we are on the safe side. There are some who find themselves in the minority all their lives by imbibing a troublesome habit of thinking and judging for themselves, and changing their views every time they see occasion to do so. This habit keeps them in the pioneer rank all the time, and exposes them to all the hardships of striving against wind and tide."

We are warned not to throw our pearls before swine, lest they turn again and rend you: if we love a whole skin, it is not safe to disturb the repose of those who wish to enjoy the bliss of ignorance. If men love darkness rather than light, why not leave them with the bats and owls, where they belong? If both the herd and keepers fall into the ditch together, and they love husks better than wholesome food—there is no accounting for tastes—let them alone! Prophets, apostles, and reformers, ancient and modern, have labored to little purpose, and have met with nothing but calumny, reproach, and persecution: and though they have cast their bread upon the waters, they have seldom lived to see the increase. If they had consulted their own ease, preached smooth thing, and catered to the fashionable theories of the times, as the popular teachers of the present day love to do, they might have saved themselves much trouble, and have gained both honor and emolument in the world. If our object is to please men, the way is easy, and the reward sure, and near at hand. If it is to find the truth, and publish it, through evil and good report, we shall find the evil comes before the good, and have to wait for the latter till the end of the ages, the resurrection of the just. How few there are who choose the better path—"through much tribulation to enter the kingdom!"

Broad is the road that leads to death,
And thousands walk together there;
Straight is the gate that leads to life,
With here and there a traveller.

DAVENPORT, IOWA, Jan., 1868.

EULOGY ON GRACE.

There's none can know the Father's right
But those who learn it from the Son;
Nor can the Son be well received.
But where the Father makes him known.

Every day of my life convinces me more and more of the truthfulness of the glorious doctrine of grace. It is an ornament to the books of nature and revelation. O, with what resplendent lustre does it shine forth to my vision. O how I love it, because it exalts the name of Jesus above every name, and abases man by bringing him down at the foot of the free mercy of God as a lost, helpless and ruined sinner, justly doomed to DIE. Yes, my soul responds to the sentence, "justly doomed to die." Glory to God, while the sinner was in this ruined state, the Father cries out, "I have found a ransom." "The Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, hath prevailed to open the book and loose the seven seals thereof." O what a shout was then heard on the plains of Judah, at this eventful moment. All was interest in the court of the Eternal.

O, my soul, be astonished and ashamed that thou hast no more revered the name of him who hath at so great a price opened up the way whereby rebels like us might obtain a pardon of our sins, and finally come into possession of earth in its renovated state. Where the glory of God, like a boundless sea, will bathe the immortal company, and pure love's banner and friendship's wand shall wave above the princely band. Yes, he whose groans Calvary witnessed, and at the sight the sun felt himself called upon to put on a mourning garb, and for the space of three hours his radiant beams were not felt or seen, and all nature seemed to be hushed into silence around that hallowed spot. But O, how great the change when he from the tomb came forth, and had "the monster death in chains!" Therefore death is a conquered foe to all those "who die in the Lord." Hence, they will be made alive when he in glory comes. But on high he ascended where all heaven were in waiting to receive him, and conduct him to his Father's throne, where he has ever since resided, to make intercession for the purchase of his blood, according to the purpose of the Deity.

Glory be to God through his exalted name, at the time appointed he will return to gather the trophies of his victorious grace. Not, however, as he made his first appearance, to be cradled in a manger, with no cherubic legions to guard him, but with the retinue of heaven to accompany him, as he shall be seen riding down the burning pathway of the heavens in his flaming chariot, whose wheels shall roll in fire, to take "vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" by removing them into a state of non-existence, bringing earth back to its Eden state, and dressing it up in more than its primeval beauty and glory: the throne of David given to him, and he to reign over the house of Jacob, the jewels of his victorious grace forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Glory to God. Self will then be lost sight of, and the song of the redeemed will then be, as they walk the plains of Paradise, which will be glowing in immortal verdure, "Unto him that hath loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God." What a moment! Redemption completed! tribulation ended! O what a shout will then be heard among the subjects of his grace, while walking the golden streets of the New Jerusalem, which will be more brilliant and glorious than the light of yon orb of day. A shout as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying "Alleluia, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth."

Reader, will you be among the jewels of his victorious grace? For this I labor and pray, and shall endeavor so to do, while my Father gives me strength. Glory be to his exalted name, that grace drew the wondrous plan; grace has marked out the way for sinful man to walk in, and by it he must be led, and by it he must be saved, or else die that death from which there is no revival into life. "For by grace (favor) are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God." That is, grace is the gift of God, while "faith is a basis of things hoped for," or an act of the mind laying hold of this favor through Jesus the LIFE-GIVER: and this "unspeakable gift" is the antidote for sin, and sin is the transgression of law, and the penalty of this law is death, and death is the extinction of life, and this favor, or "free gift," when applied to man, will bring him out of Hades—"the empire of death"—into possession of life and earth in its restored state. Only such as comply with the conditions upon which this free gift, which is life, is offered, will the Father give to Jesus, the LIFE-GIVER. Amen.

"THE EARTH SHALL REEL TO AND FRO."

THIS testimony by Isaiah is illustrated by the terrible earthquake at Santa Cruz, last November. The following is an extract from a letter, by an officer of the U. S. Steamer Monongahela, that was wrecked in that shaking of the earth. It is from the Boston Journal:

On the afternoon of the 18th inst., about 3 o'clock, we were visited by one of those infernal, or internal, shakings of the earth, which I am sure will remain unobliterated in the minds of the present generation of this island and the present crew of the Monongahela. The first intimation we had of the terrible affair was a violent shaking of the ship as if she was clearing her boilers by blowing off steam, but with twenty times the force. So violently did she tremble that there was every fear the masts would fall and crush all under them. The water was actually seething as in a caldron, and, though anchored about a mile from shore, the shocks were as perceptibly felt as they were on the land. At first, everybody laughed at the strange phenomena. We felt no sense of danger until the second shock. Then we saw the houses swinging to and fro, the church steeples tumbling and the people leaving their houses and running for the hills. The sea rushed past us, our anchor seemed to sink, and the bottom seemed to have sunk, for the sea rushed past us at the rate of forty or fifty knots, and the land seemed moving and appeared to approach the ship and then sink into its natural position, and out we floated with the receding of the water. Our cable not being slipped in time, we were left on the bottom, the water receding a half a mile astern of us. This hove the ship on her side, sending all on board to the other side and injuring several. When the sea went as far as it could in a seaward direction, it instantly gathered itself together with all its power, like a boa ready to pounce on its prey. The bottom of the sea was visible for a mile and a half and looked like a fine, sanded beach. Soon the order rang out "Hold on, boys, the sea is advancing!" Who can imagine the sensation that came over us; every man holding on for life, but no one expected to escape. When that terrible boa came rushing on the ship, roaring with a terrific noise, thirty or forty feet high, we shut our eyes, expecting it would roll over us and swamp the ship, never more to rise. But Providence ordained otherwise. The sea took us up as if a chip, and hurled us with a crushing force against the houses and trees of the town. The water at this time rushed furiously through the town, fifteen feet high, sweeping everything before it. The screams and shouts of the people, as they ran before it, trying to escape, were fearful. Whole houses were swept from their foundation, merchandise of all descriptions floated out of the stores and shops. Suddenly the water receded, carrying with it everything it picked up in its ravishing course. Our ship was carried out almost to her old anchorage, and then was enacted over the scene of the first shock, viz: the receding of the water, leaving us on the ocean's bottom; the rumbling of the earth, like heavy thunder, followed by that soul-fearing quaking, as if the ground would open and swallow all. Then came another boa, more dreadful than the first, rolling on the ship as if she was doomed, lifting us a second time, and sending us against the storehouses of Mr. Moore (American consul) with terrific force, crushing them as if they were so many paper boxes, and breaking the trees as if they were pipe-stems.

Again the water receded, and careened the ship on her port side on the rocks, at the water's edge, where she now lies a wreck. The last time we struck the shore, orders were given for every man to leave the ship and save himself. I must confess it looked dubious, for we were then expecting another boa, which, if it came, would inevitably have crushed the ship on the rocks, or carried her out to sea, where she would have sunk, and all hands been lost. The crew understood this, and, as life is dear to every man, all obeyed orders. Every one rushed to the edge and threw ropes over, and escaped from the ship, only to meet a large body of water forcing its way through the town, through which the men had to struggle against the rapid current, waist and neck deep. The rushing back of the waters carried with it all sorts of rubbish, which felt rather unpleasant against the tender part of a man's leg, especially when he had a mouthful of salt water and sand.

The mass of water rushing to its natural bed was fearful. That, with the cries of the struggling women and children, as they went down and rose successively, carried under by the rapid current, and the trembling, rumbling and shaking of the earth, will ever be impressed on my memory. At every subsequent shock the poor people would fall upon their knees and send up a heart-rending shout, supplicating their Maker to spare them. Mothers with their daughters, fathers with sons, crowding and pressing together for a place of refuge among the hills. Christians with their prayer-books and Bibles in hand, quietly sending up prayers and exhortations to their Creator, thinking, no doubt, the day of judgment had come.

The second shock threw up a bar a mile astern of us, and sunk, causing the receding of the water to fill up the vacuum created by the sinking of that transient bar. Our loss of life was four men, drowned by the capsizing of one of the boats in which they were.

PILLSBURY AND THE GIANT.

Mr. PILLSBURY, warden of the State Prison in Connecticut, once received into the prison a man of gigantic stature, whose crimes had for seventeen years made him the terror of the country. He told the criminal when he came, he hoped he would not repeat the attempts to escape which he had made elsewhere. "It will be best," said he, "that you and I should treat each other as well as we can. I will make you as comfortable as I possibly can, and I shall be anxious to be your friend; and I hope you will not get me into difficulty on your account. There is a cell intended for solitary confinement; but we have never used it, and I should be sorry ever to have to turn the key upon anybody in it. You may range the place as freely as I do: if you trust me, I will trust you."

The man was sulky, and for weeks showed only gradual symptoms of softening under the operation of Mr. Pillsbury's cheerful confidence. At length information was brought of a man's intention to break the prison. The warden called him and taxed him with it; the man preserved a gloomy silence. He was told it was now necessary for him to be locked in the solitary cell, and desired to follow the warden, who went first, carrying a lamp in one hand and a key in the other. In the narrowest part of the passage, Mr. Pillsbury, a small, light man, turned round and looked in the face of the stout criminal. "Now," said he, "I ask whether you have treated me as I deserve? I have done every thing that I could to make you happy. I have trusted you, but you have never given me the least confidence in return, and have even planned to get me into difficulty. Is this kind? And yet I cannot bear to lock you up. If I had the least sign that you cared for me—"

The man burst into tears.

"Sir," said he, "I have been a very demon these seventeen years; but you treat me like a man."

"Come, let us go back," said the warden.

The convict had free range of the prison as before; and from that hour he began to open his heart to the warden, and cheerfully fulfilled his whole term of imprisonment.

WRITERS on physiology assure us that an over-anxiety of the mind relative to the action of any organ of the body will disturb the natural functions of that organ. For example, if one convinces himself that the action of his heart is disturbed, and that he is threatened with the heart disease, the pulsations of his heart will soon become unfavorably affected—and by the workings of his imagination. There is a gentleman in our city who became impressed that the action of his diaphragm was morbidly affected. He accordingly concentrated his thoughts upon this fancy to such an extent that the natural action (involuntary muscular) was disturbed, and his lungs worked so badly that, after going to bed, he would often have to dress himself and take a short promenade in the street before "tired nature's sweet restorer" would visit him. If, however, his attention happened to have been previously occupied by business, lively company, or anything else that would divert his mind from its morbid direction, he fell asleep at once. Physical disturbances, when they really exist, are increased twofold in their intensity if stimulated by mental anxiety. There seems to be a connection between the mind and the body, which gives the former an imperative influence over the latter.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

A Defence of the Bible.

Last week we gave our first speech on this subject. The following is the second:

The Bible is on trial charged with the blackest crimes. We have called for the rule by which the Bible is to be tried, and we are told that that rule is natural religion, or, in other words, the religion of nature. I do not know that there has been any receding. My friend Wright said very distinctly that the rule by which the Bible was to be tried was the religion of nature. If they recede from that position, I have no objection, certainly; but it is manifest that there must be some rule. Now, to say that the rule is in the Bible itself, is to say that the criminal is to be judged by himself. (Cries of hear, hear.) It is taken for granted that he is a criminal. Now what law has he violated? Has he violated the religion of nature? I wish it to be distinctly understood with regard to myself, as I have before said, I do not stand here to contend that everything written in the Bible is inspired of God. That is not my position. I do not stand here to say that every sentiment that is uttered in the Bible is approved of by the God of the Bible. I do not stand here to affirm, when a certain character said, "Thou shalt not surely die," that that was inspired by God. No, it was a libel upon God. I said last evening that I conceived that the true question should be, not is the Bible a revelation from God, but is the Bible a true history of revelation given to men in times past, and does it contain a true record of transactions connected with these revelations? As I have already said, the truth of that position depends upon the credibility of the witnesses; but I am not going to argue that point to-night. What does the resolution charge upon the Bible? Who has ever said that the Btble, "as a whole," emanated from God? I have just quoted one text that is recorded there that did not emanate from God, but from his enemy. The objection, however, that is urged against the Bibe—the crime that is charged upon the Bible, is not a new one. It is substantially the same that has been urged by many eminent men prior to this day. We here give you a quotation from Lord Bolingbroke. He says:

> The God of Moses is partial, unjust, cruel (hear, hear); delights in blood, commands assassination, massacres, and even extermination of people, etc. (Hear, hear). The God of Paul elects some of his creatures to salvation, and predestinates others to damnation, even in their mother's wombs. If there was not a Being infinitely more perfect than these, there would be no God at all, nor any true religion in the world. But there is most assuredly such a Being, and he who proposes any system of religion wherein this all-perfect being is not to be found, may say he is not an Atheist, but cannot say with truth that he is a Theist. —Works, vol. v., p. 600.

Here you perceive substantially the same argument. It is not a new one. How is the Bible tried by natural religion—the religion of nature? By contrasting it with the character of the God of nature? If I have misstated the question I have not intended to. I have not come here with any feeling of quarrelling in my heart. (Hear, hear.) I am almost prepared to say from my very heart that I respect the Deists because they have rejected the Bible, they having been taught that the Bible teaches certain doctrines which I am satisfied are not to be found in it, but originated in the perverse understanding of men. Now, sir, we are going to test the God of the Bible by the God of nature, and see how the God of the Bible stands by this law in respect to the God of nature. Now shut up the Bible and look at the God of nature. The God of nature is cruel. What, "the God of nature!" Yes, sir, outrageously cruel, barbarously cruel. "How do you prove that charge?" Go yonder, sir; see where that city stood. All were in the enjoyment of blessings and sympathy of friendship, rejoicing in each other's love, the love of society, and the God of nature marched through by his earthquake, shook the foundation of the city, and buried them in ruin! Is the God of the Bible worse than that? What has he done worse? (Applause.) Here is a populous country that spreads itself along the pleasant river, and the fields are whitening for the harvest. The inhabitants dwelling along the borders of that river are flourishing and in prosperity. Their families are happy, but the God of nature pours down the waters, and the river rises and swells, and sweeps away their dwellings and destroys the inhabitants. Ah! did the God of the Bible do anything worse than that? Come, God of nature, stand up and defend yourself. We charge you with being a cruel God. (Applause.) We see men spread abroad over the land, pursuing the business of life, and not interfering with the God of nature; but the God of nature travels along through the country with the cholera, and calls off thousands upon thousands. Does he not sanction "wholesale murder?" We are trying the Bible by the God of nature, and I will ask you, as a jury sitting on the trial, if, so far, the God of nature is not likely to be quite as bad as the God of the Bible? But, sir, we do not stop here—we go further. You complain, perhaps that the God of the Bible authorized Moses to exterminate whole nations—wholesale murder you may call it, if you please. How has the God of nature acted in this respect? I beg leave again to refer to Bolingbroke. It is in his views on the subject of evil, in his Works, vol. v., pp. 403, 404. He says:

> True it is that men are sometimes involved in general calamities which they can neither foresee nor prevent, such as inundations, earthquakes, pestilences, and the entire devastations of kingdoms or provinces by savage and barbarous people, like the Huns of old, or the Spaniards in later ages. But these calamities are rare. They may be considered as chastisements, for chastisements are reasonable when there are any to be amended by partaking of them, or by being at least spectators of them. They may be considered as mere effects, natural, though contingent of matter and motion in a material system, put in motion under certain general laws. If they are seen in the first light (i. e., chastisements), they should teach mankind to adore and to fear that Providence which governs the world by particular as well as by general dispensations. If they are seen in the second (i. e., as mere effects, etc.), they should suggest some other reflections which are not without their utility neither." On page 438, Bolingbroke says: "Cotta, who exercises greater injustice toward God than any of the tyrants he quotes did toward men, is much scandalized that those two eyes of the Mediterranean coast, Corinth and Carthage, were put out, etc. But how did he know that Mummius and Scipio (the Roman generals by whom these cities were destroyed) were not instruments of the justice of Providence, as well as of Roman policy and passion? The worst men, and the Romans were none of the best, are employed to punish the worst. None so fitted to the task. They are the instruments, and in their turn the examples of divine justice. The wealth, the splendor, the magnificence of Corinth were great, but Corinth was a sink of iniquity. Carthage was a great and powerful state, but the Carthaginians were a faithless, factious and cruel people. Might not these be the remote and true causes (of the judgment of God upon them), whatever the immediate and apparent were of their destruction?"

Now, sir, here is one who is talking of the God of nature. He admits it right, and undertakes to justify the God of nature in suffering these two eyes of the Mediterranean Sea to be put out. For what reason? "Why," says he, "they were abominably corrupt." Therefore the God of nature was justified in causing them to be destroyed, and destroyed, too, by the wickedest of men. Now I ask this intelligent congregation whether the cases are not parallel with the God of the Bible, and whether the God of the Bible is to be condemed by the God of nature. What was the reason which the God of the Bible himself assigns why Abraham was not yet to possess the land of Canaan? Why his posterity were to be kept out of that land for centuries to come? Turn to the Bible itself and hear what it says Genesis xv., 13, 16. After speaking to Abraham of the bondage of his children in Egypt, he says, "But in the fourth generation they shall come hither again." Now mark, "For the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." What is that, sir? Why, the God of the Bible did not allow Abraham to possess that land or injure its inhabitants, for the reason that their iniquity was not yet full; but when it was full—as Lord Bolingbroke says, the iniquity of Carthage and Corinth was full—then, sir, the God of the Bible did the same thing that the God of nature did.

Now, sir, how are you going to condemn the God of the Bible by the God of nature? Whoever will take the history of the world will find that the God of nature has suffered and countenanced the same crimes which it is affirmed the God of the Bible has; and without spending time to go into details, we will say that the God of nature has countenanced, sanctioned, and sustained exterminating war, Lord Bolingbroke himself being witness on the subject, so that the God of nature is a "wholesale murderer." Sir, if the God of the Bible was, so is the God of nature; and once judged by that law, the Bible stands at least on an equality with the God of nature, or with natural religion, if you like the expression better.

But, sir, why is it that there must be a disposition or inclination on the part of some on this question to foist upon the God of the Bible certain doctrines which the Bible never taught, and never does teach? I am of opinion, as at the outset, that the question first of all to be settled is, not whether the Bible is a revelation of God, but whether it is a faithful history of revelations made at different times to different persons under different circumstances, and a faithful history of transactions connected with those revelations? Now, sir, we take a transaction which was referred to last evening and yesterday. My friend Pillsbury asked me last night, why I would not take up the case of the slave whipped to death? Now, sir, we are going to turn to that text. Did my friend Barker intend to insinuate to this congregation that the God of the Bible sanctioned the whipping of a slave to death, and because he was the money of the master, the master was not to be punished for it?

Mr. Barker—I said that the Bible lays down the principle that if a man whip his man-servant or his maid-servant so that the servant dies, if the servant does not die the same day, then the master shall not be punished; and the reason assigned by this passage is, "because he is his money."

Mr. Storrs—Now, sir, we will read the passage, mark you—the question was, whether the God of the Bible sanctions the murder of a slave? "And if a man smite his servant or his maid with a rod, and he die under his hand, he shall surely be punished;" and what is the punishment? "He is his money, and must not be hurt!" Just let the Scriptures explain themselves and get their own testimony. The same chapter, twelfth verse, says, "He that smiteth a man so that he die, shall be surely put to death." That is the plain statement. "But perhaps," says one, "that does not exactly prevent his smiting a slave so that he dies."

Mr. Barker—Does Mr. Storrs mean to say that he has read the whole passage referring to the smiting to death a servant?

Mr. Storrs—No, not now; I am coming to it by and by. Turn to Deuteronomy, chapter xix. Here are provisions made that in case a man slew his neighbor, not intending his death, he might, by fleeing to a city of refuge, be preserved from death, if it was a manifest fact that he did not intend to kill him; but the person could not be saved from punishment where there was any intention of killing. Mark the law: "But if any man hate his neighbor, and rise up against and smite him that he die, and fleeth into one of these cities, then the elders of the city shall send and bring him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die. Thine eye shall not pity him, but thou shalt put away the guilt of innocent blood from Israel, that it may go well with thee."

Now, sir, I ask if the law does not clearly specify that in case a person intends to kill another, there should be no such thing as deliverance? but he should die. That was the penalty. We come back again to chapter xxi. of Exodus. You have seen that this man, who is supposed to have a pecuniary interest in his man-servant or maid-servant is found chastising or whipping them for some supposed, imaginary, or real offence. Why, says the law, "If he die under his hand he shall be surely punished;" and the punishment is, "he shall surely die for it." But, says the following verse, "and notwithstanding if he continue a day or two he shall not be punished, for he is his money." Did you ever hear of manslaughter? What is the punishment spoken of in the text? Death. Well, now, this person who has thus inflicted upon a man-servant or maid-servant chastisement, or punishment, or whipping, so that after a day or two he dies, it is supposed, from the nature of the case, that he did not intend to take the life of his servant, therefore the punishment which had been specified beforehand was not to be inflicted upon him. I ask if this is not the case in modern days with our laws? Does not the law call it manslaughter where a man lingers along a day or two after he is injured, and where it is proved that the one injuring him did not intend to take his life? The very fact that the master has an interest in the servant is prima facie evidence that he did not intend to take his life, and therefore is an evidence that he did not intend to commit murder. The impression has been made that the Bible sanctions such a servitude as American slavery; but we have in the chapter before us now—"and it a man smite the eye of his servant or the eye of his maid that it perish, he shall let him go out free for his eye's sake." He was punished for striking out his eye by the loss of all pecuniary interest, whatever it was. "And if he smite his man-servant's tooth, or his maid-servant's tooth, he shall let him go free for his tooth's sake"—for loss of a tooth. Pretty good punishment, was it not? that he should be obliged to lose the property that he had in his servant? Therefore you see that the law guards against injury in inflicting punishment upon these servants. I say, then, sir, that the reason why he should not be punished with death is a good reason; and the principle is admitted in the administration of common law under our own government—the principle that circumstances may show that the man did not intend to kill. Here, then, sir, we conceive that the God of the Bible is not so bad as they have charged him to be in this particular.

Remarks on John v., 27, 28, 29.

BY RUBEN CADWELL.

In regard to these verses, I think the greater evidence is the rule, and only safe one to be taken, in ascertaining what is taught in them. For the evidence of their application is mostly circumstantial. There are two or more points, in my opinion, too much overlooked in this chapter, which to a careful observer of the predictions of the prophets require a more prominent place in our mind in order to any rational hope of their understanding.

1. The discourse was delivered to a portion of the tribes of Jacob, but mostly of the tribe of Judah, and ought not, without the best possible evidence, to be applied to any other people.

2. The 20th verse shows it was intimately connected with the people he was addressing, as they were to be eye-witnesses of these works, here declared, and not yet performed; for they would be liable to marvel or wonder when the Father should show them unto the Son. And therefore these works covered all that was declared, although not yet performed in this chapter.

The third evidence to this fact, is found in verses 39, 40, where they are referred to the Scriptures which testify of me.

The fourth evidence is found in the language and the manner in which the event is described as taking place; as if to teach us who are intended when compared with the Scriptures of the prophets.

Let us now look at the correspondence of the Scriptures on these points. And to learn who is this Son of man, and when, and on whom, this work is to be performed. Verse 27. "To execute judgment" by the authority of the Father, is to fill the office of a judge or ruler in the name of the Father, or the administering the laws and executing the will of the Father. Jer. xxiii., 5, xxxiii., 5–9, Mich. v., 4. When and where is the Son of man identified as such a judge, or ruler? Mich. v., 1, 2, identifies the judge of Israel with the Son of man before Pilate, when smitten with the reed upon the cheek. This in his first advent. And on account of which, his brethren, the thousands, or people of Judah, were to be given up till she which travaileth hath brought forth. Chap. iv., 10, a time of trouble and anxious longing for their king, from which they were delivered. And then these brethren, given up to dispersion, should return to the children of Israel. Verse 3. The judge is here identified by the works he does with the Son of man, executing judgment by the authority of the Father, at his second coming. "And he shall stand and feed, or rule (marginal reading) in the strength of the Lord, and in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God;" and "they—the children of Israel—shall abide." "For now shall he be great unto the ends of the earth." . . . "And he shall save us from the Assyrian when he cometh into our land, and treadeth in our borders."

Thus we have the Son of man pointed out as the judge of Israel when executing judgment, and for whom when he was to "be great to the ends of the earth." In harmony with this, was the declaration of Jesus before the High Priest; "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." And Daniel says, there was given him dominion, glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages, should serve him. And at this time, every one of Daniel's people shall be delivered, found written in the book. . . . And many that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake. Also, Isa. xxvi., 19. These Scriptures teach who the Son of man is, in the execution of judgment.

In verses 28 and 29 we have a certain class of persons spoken of in a certain condition, not in graves common to any of the race of men, nor, in the general state of the literally dead—for this would not harmonize with facts; but the most of the language concerning these, and every idea in reference to them and the event, agrees with, and is found in, the Scriptures of the people addressed; and I am satisfied never can harmonize, as referring to the race in general, in death Nor could they nor can we form any correct idea of what the Son of man meant to teach except from those Scriptures to which they were referred.

We do not design to be very critical here, but before we pass on, we will give one more thought, that is, if the Saviour had not designed to point out certain tombs before designated, and understood of that people in the future; and had only spoken of them in relation to the tombs; and this is understood, it required him to say with equal truth, their tombs, as the tombs, on account of relation of being in, and possession of the persons, in them. This would bring the language most entirely like the language used of a certain people described in the prophets, who, in a future period, are found exactly in the condition of the persons here mentioned. It looks to me very improbable, that persons should hear and come forth out of their graves to the resurrection (or raising up) and not have some kind of life; and yet one class do all this, and have not the life to which they come. On the other hand they who have done evil, and in condemnation, would have some kind of life to come forth to a resurrection of damnation, and yet have not the damnation to which they come. It is not said, They shall hear his voice and live. This would be short work.

And if they are the literally dead, and in coming forth have life, why add resurrection and life, both? In the case of both they hear and come forth to a certain condition; and after that to life in one case, and to damnation in the other.

Are not the literally dead as much alive when they come forth from the state of death, as they ever will be? John xi., 44. In verse 21, of this chapter, Jesus connects the quickening of the dead with the raising up. It is not, he raiseth up and then quickeneth them; but he raiseth up and quickeneth. Two acts in one.

Now the facts in the case of the people we are considering demand this representation. God saith in Ezk. xxxvii. 10–15, "O, my people, I will open your graves"—first fact—"and cause you to come up out of your graves"—second fact—"and put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and place you in your own land." Third fact. Or, as in Isa. xlix., 6, "Thou art my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob"—first and second fact—"and to restore"—even to life in their own land, "the preserved of Israel"—third fact.

Thus Israel have not national and spiritual life, till one nation in the land, or not both together, till the raising up is completed. I will now make one more quotation in this place—taken from whole chapters, expressly written for the faith of the seed of Jacob in dispersion; and for the faith of all who read, in their restoration and future blessings. And can agree with no other people, upon the face of the whole earth, but his posperity, in the line of the three great birthright blessings of God to Jacob.

"Write all these words in a book." "For lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the Lord: and I will cause them to return to the land I gave to their fathers and they shall possess it." . . . . "and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him, but they shall serve the Lord, and David their king . . . . and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid." Ezk. xxx., 2; Mich. iii., 9, 10. In Ezk. xxxvii., this bringing out of their graves is thus explained: "Say unto them, saith the Lord, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and will bring them into their own land, and will make them one nation in the land, upon the mountains of Israel, and my servant David shall be their prince forever."

This is said of the whole house of Israel. Now turn to Ezk. xx., 33–39; and see what happened to a portion of them. Here we learn that they would be all brought out, but the rebels would be purged out from among them, and that they should not enter the land. And, it seems by the representation, were destroyed. At least, they came not to the resurrection of life, but of condemnation.

From what is said, and from the word rebels, we get the implied language applicable to both classes as found in John v., 29. We learn that a portion of them were unbelieving, disobedient and rebellious. Hence the opposite was the character of the other portion. We learn here, also, and elsewhere, that those believing and unbelieving, were such in the countries before they were brought out, or at the time, and both continued to be tested till they were brought into the land of the covenant, or failed to be saved thereby.

To make this "having done good" and "evil" a little more plain as to the natural and moral condition of the first, we have their words often expressed, as in Isa. xxv., 9, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord, we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." "For in this mountain shall the hand of the Lord rest, and Moab shall be trodden down as straw is trodden down for the dunghill." The waiting children of Jacob say "the judge of Israel will save us from the Assyrian, when he cometh into our land, and treadeth in our borders."

Thus it appears, it is good and acceptable to God that the remnant of Jacob should believe in, and hope for, their soon-coming Messiah. "For God will turn again to us; he will have compassion upon us; he will subdue our iniquities; he will perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham." "God is able to graft them all in again who continue not in unbelief." But those who continue in unbelief and accept Napoleon III. as their Messiah, or join the great Assyrian opposer of Israel, in the last days, will be liable to perish. Would that none of them may be found in rebellion to their soon-coming Prince, to gather together the remnant of Jacob: "That he may be for salvation to the ends of the earth." But rather may the children of Jacob still believe the predictions of their prophets, and look for and seek the Lord, and the Beloved, their King, in these latter days. That, having done this, they may be found to be that favored "residue of men which shall seek after the Lord, together with all the Gentiles on whom my name is called, saith the Lord; when he shall rebuild the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down. And he shall prepare the throne in mercy, and sit upon it in truth, in the tabernacle of David, judging, as the Son of man and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness." May they soon say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Parading the Term Hell.

The following just rebuke is administered to those ministers who parade the term hell so often that they exhaust it, and cannot find it often enough in the whole Bible to answer for one of their sermons. We take this article form the Evening Journal, of Jersey City, for Jan. 25th. It will answer for statistics for new beginners:

WHAT IS MEANT BY "HELL?"

Mr. Editor: I have been attending the evening meetings held in some of the churches in this city a number of evenings of late, and have been a little surprised at the familiar manner in which the word "Hell" is used, as well as the description of it: "a literal lake of fire and brimstone." And such other expressions "as the damned will go up to the judgment seat with their garments reeking with fire and brimstone to be judged according to their deeds, etc., etc."

Now, Mr. Editor, it seems to me like presuming upon the credulity or ignorance of the people to make such assertions, and to think they are to be believed. Every good, biblical scholar knows, that the word "Hell," as it occurs in the Scriptures, is a translation of four different words. First, "Sheol;" second, "Hades:" third, "Tartarus;" fourth, "Gehenna." "Sheol" is a Hebrew word, and always occurs in the Old Testament. It signifies the state of the departed, without any reference to their happiness or misery. It is sometimes used by the prophets to represent temporal calamities. And they described Jonah, when he was in the deep, as praying to God "out of the belly of Hell." (Jon. ii., 23.) This word occurs sixty-four times in the Hebrew Bible. In the common English version it is translated sometimes hell, sometimes pit, and sometimes grave. In half the instances, viz: thirty-two, it is translated hell. And consequently, the word hell occurs in the common version of the Old Testament just thirty-two times; and in all cases should be understood to mean what the original word "Sheol" meant.

The other three words "Hades," "Tartarus," or "Tararus," and "Gœhena," or "Gehenna" occur in the New Testament; "Hades," 11 times; "Tartarus," 1; "Gehenna," 11 times. "Hades" signifies the same as "Sheol"—it is the Greek word by which the Hebrew "Sheol" is intended. It means only what "Sheol" means. "Hades" occurs eleven times, in ten of which it is translated hell. Therefore, the word hell occurs in the Bible in both the old and the New Testament: As a translation of "Sheol" 32 times: "Hades" 10; "Tartarus" 1; "Gehenna" 12. Total 55 times.

Just fifty-five times in all the Scriptures. There are seventy-six different books in the Bible (excluding the Apochrypha) so that the word hell does not occur on an average once in each book. There are eleven hundred and eighty-nine chapters in the Bible. If we were to parcel out this word hell, as nearly as possible among the chapters, it will occur only once in twenty-one chapters. I have counted it in one sermon more times than it occurs in the whole Bible. The word hell does not occur in the books of Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 1st Samuel, 1st and 2d Kings, 1st and 2d Chronicle, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Ecclesiastes, Songs of Solomon, Jeremiah, Lamentations, Daniel, Hosea, Joel, Obadiah, Micah, Nahum, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zachariah, Malachi. These are the books of the Old Testament in which the word hell does not occur. In the New Testament the word does not occur in the following books: Gospel of John, Romans, 1st and 2d Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, 1st and 2d Thes., 1st Tim., Titus, Philemon, Hebrews, 1st Peter, 1st, 2d and 3d John, Jude.

In the Old Testament the word hell occurs only: In Deuteronomy 1 time; 2d Samuel 1; Job 2; Psalms 8; Proverbs 7; Isaiah 6; Ezekiel 4; Amos 1; Jonah 1; Habakuk 1. Total 32 times.

In the New Testament Matthew 9 times; Mark 3; Luke 3; Acts 2; James 1; 2d Peter 1; Revelations 4. Total 23. In all the Bible 55 times.

It will be seen that the word hell does not occur once in all the Epistles of Paul; and Paul says, he "did not shun to declare all the counsels of God." Do our modern Pauls declare the counsels of God? Do they expound the Scriptures correctly? Or do they adopt the principle that they may give a wrong interpretation of the truth in order that good may come of it? The Episcopal creed says that "Christ was crucified, that he died, and was buried, he descended into hell—(lake of fire and brimstone?)—and on the third day arose"—(with his garments reeking with fire and brimstone?) What sin did Christ commit that he should descend to hell, where the "fire is not quenched, and the worm dieth not?" "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book." Rev. xxii., 18. "For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory, why yet am I also judged as a sinner?" Rom. iii., 7. I submit these few pen scribblings for the consideration of your numerous readers, trusting that they will not accuse me of attempting to cast any reflections upon religion in any manner; for I will challenge any man to have a greater reverence for religion or love for God than I have.

A CHURCH GOER.

CRITICISM.

DESERVED criticism is always beneficial if bestowed and received in the right spirit. Especially should those who write for publication, and whose thoughts and opinions by means of the press are widely circulated, and must have an extended influence for good or evil, be willing, not only, but desirous, that their sentiments thus advanced be thoroughly criticised. For, if their views be correct, criticism will only further elaborate them; if incorrect, the error, which is always hurtful, being shown, will be gladly relinquished, and new conceptions of truth be produced by the investigation.

Even undeserved criticism may be profitable, if rightly appreciated; for, in explaining the grounds of that which is asserted, we not unfrequently discover a new principle, or find something to give added strength to foundations already established.

Let us then, beloved, gladly encourage, and even invite generous criticism of those who are, with us, investigating truth.

CONVINCING TESTIMONY.

AT a certain town meeting, the question came up whether any person should be licensed to sell rum. The clergyman, the deacon, and the physician, strange as it may now appear, all favored. One man spoke against it, because of the mischief it did. The question was about to be put, when there arose from one corner of the room a miserable female. She was thinly clad, and her appearance indicated the utmost wretchedness, and that her mortal career was almost closed. After a moment of silence, and all eyes being fixed upon her, she stretched her attenuated body to its utmost height, and then her long arms to their greatest length, and raising her voice to a shrill pitch, she called upon all to look upon her. "Yes!" she said, "look upon me, and then hear me. All that the last speaker has said relative to temperate drinking, as being the father of drunkenness, is true. All practice, all experience declares its truth. All drinking of alcoholic poison, as a beverage in health, is excess. Look upon me. You all know me, or once did. You all know I was once the mistress of the best farm in the town. You all know, too, I had one of the best—the most devoted of husbands. You all know I had fine, noble-hearted, industrious boys. Where are they now? Doctor, where are they now? They lie in a row, side by side in yonder church-yard; all—every one of them filling the drunkard's grave! They were all taught to believe that temperate drinking was safe—excess alone ought to be avoided; and they never acknowledged excess. They quoted you, and you, and you," pointing with her shred of a finger to the minister, deacon, and doctor, "as authority. They thought themselves safe under such tender teachers. But I saw the gradual change coming over my family and prospects, with dismay and horror; I felt we were all to be overwhelmed in one common ruin; I tried to ward off the blow; I tried to break the spell, the delusive spell—in which the idea of the benefits of temperate drinking had involved my husband and sons; I begged, I prayed; but the odds were greatly against me.

"The minister said the poison that was destroying my husband and boys was a good creature of God; the deacon (who sits under the pulpit there, and took our farm to pay his rum bills) sold them the poison; the physician said that a little was good, and excess ought to be avoided. My poor husband and my dear boys fell into the snare, and they could not escape (there were no Washingtonians then), and one after another was conveyed to the dishonored grave of the drunkard. Now look at me again, you probably see me for the last time—my sand has almost run. I have dragged my exhausted frame from my present abode—your poorhouse—to warn you all—to warn you, deacon!—to warn you, false teacher of God's word;" and with her arms high flung, and her tall form stretched to its utmost, and her voice raised to an unearthly pitch, she exclaimed, "I shall soon stand before God, and shall witness against you all." The miserable woman vanished—a dead silence pervaded the assembly—the minister, deacon, and physician hung their heads—the president put the question—shall we have any more licenses to sell alcaholic poisons, to be sold as a beverage? The response was unanimous, No! Selected by L. C. T.

PUNCTUALITY.

A COMMITTEE of eight ladies, in the neighborhood of London, was appointed to meet on a certain day at twelve o'clock. Seven of them were punctual, but the eighth came hurrying in, with many apologies for being a quarter of an hour behind time. The time had passed away without her being aware of it, she had no idea of its being so late, etc. A Quaker lady present, said, "Friend, I am not so clear that we should admit thine apology. It were matter of regret that thou shouldst have wasted thine own quarter of an hour, but here are seven beside thyself, whose time thou hast also consumed, amounting to the whole of two hours, and seven-eights of it was not thine own property."

THE PLEDGES.

NEARLY six months have elapsed since our annual meeting, at which pledges were nobly made to sustain this paper. Some have paid up wholly; others partially; but some have as yet paid nothing, we presume because it has not been convenient; but we assure them it will not come amiss to receive the amount pledged, in whole or in part, at their earliest convenience.

HEAVEN.

A LIVING divine says: "When I was a boy I thought of heaven as a great, shining city, with vast walls, and domes, and spires, and with nobody in it except white, tenuous angels who are strangers to me. By and by my little brother died, and I thought of a great city with walls, and domes, and spires, and a flock of cold, unknown angels, and one little fellow that I was acquainted with. He was the only one I knew in that time. Then another brother died, and there were two that I knew. Then my acquaintances began to die, and the flock continually grew. But it was not till I had sent one of my little children to his Grandparent—God—that I began to think I had got a little in myself. A second went, a third went, a fourth went; and by that time I had so many acquaintances in heaven that I did not see any more walls, and domes, and spires. I began to think of the residents of the celestial city, and now there have so many of my acquaintances gone there that it sometimes seems to me that I know more in heaven than I do on earth."

That is what is called "going to heaven at death," and sung, "Death is the gate to endless joy," etc. The minister who made the foregoing statement seems to have been a "boy" when he began to think about heaven, and never appears to have outgrown his boyhood, though he might have come to be a big boy, and so "sent one of my little children to his Grandparent—God," etc. That looks very much like a "childish thing," such as Paul said he "put away when" he "became a man." This "living divine" has one thing in his favor, he has a chance to grow while he still lives, and he should be led to leave off looking at imaginary things; and instead of indulging his fancy should exercise faith in the word and promises of God; thus he may yet learn to look to the resurrection of dead ones, instead of looking into an imaginary heaven, of which he seems to be as ignorant now as when he "was a boy;" for it is evident his views are as unscriptural now as when he first began to think about it, and have no more foundation in truth.

Our Lord never taught that his followers should go to heaven at death. But he did teach them that "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one who seeth the Son, and believeth on him, hath everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." He said no such thing as that he would take them to heaven at death, as the modern theology teaches. He testified, "I am the resurrection and the life;" and his apostles taught, "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen . . . . then they also that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished."

The whole tenor of the Bible is, that a future life is dependent on a revival from death, and that that event only takes place "at the last day," when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven" . . . . that it is "then the dead in Christ shall rise . . . . to meet the Lord in the air," etc.

Truly, men, who ought to know better are "teaching for doctrine the commandments [or inventions] of men," and have gone after "fables." Let them set themselves to work, and find, if they can, a promise in the Bible that men shall go to heaven when they die. "The dead praise not the Lord," is the divine testimony, affirmed again and again in the inspired record, and no other hope for a future life is held out to the believer but that of living again from the dead "at the last day."

This "living divine" manifestly thinks little or nothing of a resurrection from the dead, for which Paul labored and suffered, "If," says he, "by any means I might attain unto the resurrection out from among the dead." This minister is watching heaven, where he saw nothing to attract till his "acquaintances" began to go there; and as their fancied number increased, it increased his knowledge of the place, till he says, "It sometimes seems to me that I know more in heaven than I do on earth." Here is no recognition of God or Christ, then, except as the "Grandparent" of one of his "little children," that he has reluctantly sent along to make the place more attractive than it would otherwise be.

Can we wonder at the prevalence of "Spiritism" under such teaching as this? What fruit so naturally grows from such seed as he here furnishes as modern spiritism? It is the legitimate offspring of the theory that is filling heaven with disembodied souls, or spirits. The doctrine robs Christ of the glory of being God's LIFE-GIVER to the perishing children of Adam, and puts the crown of life on inherent immortality, thus indorsing the serpent's falsehood, "Ye shall not surely die."

"The heaven of heavens is the Lord's, but the earth hath he given to the children of men," is the divine testimony, and "the meek shall inherit the earth," not heaven. God has not promised heaven to any man, either at death or at any other period: no such promise can be found in the Bible. Even the resurrection places the saints not in the theological heaven, but gives them possession of the earth, and makes them "kings and priests," and "they shall reign on the earth," and be partners with Christ in his "dominion from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth." The earth is to be redeemed from all the evil that sin has introduced, and "God will wipe away tears from off all faces, and take away the rebuke of his people from off all the earth." Then it is that "He will swallow up death in victory;" and "the last enemy—death—shall be destroyed." Here is a real, tangible inheritance—substantial, eternal. But that fancy "going to heaven at death" is an ignis fatuus that deceives and leads away from the hope of the gospel.

THE POPE'S TEMPORAL POWER.

THE attempt of Garibaldi and his associates to capture Rome was a failure so far as that design was involved; but it was a success so far as prophecy was concerned: it resulted in the "taking away his dominion;" (Dan. vii., 26) that is, the dominion of the Papacy, or "the little horn," which "spake great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints," etc. It is now apparent that the Pope's temporal power is probably dead; he is no longer an independent ruler, even in Rome. The Queen of Spain has had soldiers enlisted for the use of the Pope; but Louis Napoleon gives her to understand that he is himself ruler at Rome, and she is forbidden to send troops there; so not the Pope, but Napoleon III. has undisputed authority over the Pope's territory.

This utter loss of temporal power, by the papacy, is the grand epoch of its final downfall. It terminates the 1260 years of its dominion, as we supposed it would when, over twenty years ago, we took the position that the grand epoch of Papal supremacy commenced between 604 and 608, and that it would end between 1864 and 1868. For that position we were ridiculed by many of the professionally "wise," who claimed they should "understand," but were not then willing to learn.

"Well, suppose the temporal power is at an end: what next?" Let the prophecy speak for itself. Dan. vii., 26. "The judgment shall sit, and they shall take away HIS DOMINION, to consume and to destroy it unto the end." How long a period is to elapse in this consuming process, is just that which "knoweth no man;" therefore, as we have said elsewhere, we are now in the "watching time." We know not the day, hour, month, or year that is to "end," or be the consummation of this "judgment" now begun on the Harlot: or what, precisely, are the events to transpire before that "end;" yet it is tolerably certain the personal appearing of Christ, to and for his saints, is closely connected with that "end" of the Harlot and her "Daughters." But we choose not to say more now. The developments shortly to be made, will show the watchful that the advent is nearing. Instead of wasting time to find the exact time of that glorious event, let us watch, as our Lord has bidden us to do; and that, because "ye know not when the time is;" but the watchful shall know "when it is nigh, even at the door."

THE SOUL OF A D. D.

BR. STORRS: Will you make room in the HERALD OF LIFE for the following curious orthodox theological speculation by Rev. Hiram Mattison, D. D., of the M. E. church? He says:

Were the globe a solid mass of crystal, the beams of the sun would pass through it as swiftly as through vacant space. And could not a celestial do as much? If Gabriel were to meet a vast planet in his etherial flights, would he be obliged to go around it, as a ship at sea would sail around an island? Such is the superiority of spirit over matter, that angels and disembodied human souls can doubtless fly through solid marble and granite as easily and as swiftly as in the open void of heaven.

After reading the paragraph above I felt inclined to ask, has Dr. M. got possession of the wandering soul of the old pagan philosopher, Pythagoras, which wandered about from one body to another? But Dr. M. does not want that. Once out of the body, he does not want to be in "prison" again. He calculates his soul will be able to run through "solid marble" and rocks of "granite," thousands of miles in diameter, through burning suns and blazing comets as easily as the beams of the sun would pass through a globe of glass! What a dangerous customer the Doctor will be when he gets out of prison!

When he gets out, and is commissioned to go on his "etherial flights," what effect will his soul have on those bodies it passes through? Will it be anything worse than a "sunbeam" through a bit of "glass?" and if so, will his opponents have anything to fear, that he may not indulge in the pleasant passtime of making holes through them? If "disembodied souls" have such power as the Doctor says they have, what are the walls of hell made of? Is there any metal or material known by which a wall could be built that would keep in close confinement a "disembodied soul?" Who will answer my question? Of what are the walls of hell built?

J. W. S.

Chester, Pa.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—We give place to the foregoing to gratify a subscriber. We knew, years ago, that "the soul" of that personage was so exceeding small and unsubstantial that it "could not be seen or felt," (to use his own language), and we presume the addition of "D. D." to his name, since, has not increased its size or weight. We shall not therefore dispute but what his soul can go through a rock of marble just as easy as to take any other route. He did, however, run against a rock some fifteen years since that impeded his progress, and he had to "go aground" in a way "Gabriel" (who delights in truth) would not dare to travel. If any are anxious to see the road he went, let them read the "DISCUSSION" between him and the then EDITOR of the Bible Examiner. After reading the work you can judge for yourselves whether you think his soul can get through a solid body.

QUESTIONS.

1. Is the Tree of Life, Rev. xxii., 2, literal, and in a future age?

2. Is the judgment scene, Math. xxv., 31, prior or subsequent to the resurrection out from among the dead? WILLIAM WOOD.

Lawrence, Mass.

1. We do not pretend to know whether that tree is literal or not, but from the general character of that allegorical book, we incline to look on it as a representation of life uninterrupted. That it belongs to the future age seems evident from its location in the prophecy, being placed after the new heavens and new earth dispensation is opened.

2. The judgment scene, Math. xxv. 31, is after Christ sits "on the throne of his glory;" which is after his second advent: hence it must be subsequent to the resurrection of them who sleep in Jesus; for, "the dead in Christ shall arise" when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God."

JOHN V, 28, 29.

MUCH has been said on the above text, and the question is often asked, What does it mean? That it does not teach the doctrine of the literal living again of all the dead, I have been satisfied for more than twenty years. There is certainly but one true meaning to the verses; and if properly understood they will harmonize with all the other Scriptures in regard to the great subject of the resurrection of the dead. To ascertain the truth of the text, there are a few preliminaries in order to comprehend the teachings of our Lord.

First. To whom was our Lord speaking when these words were uttered? We answer to the Jews. John v., 18. Therefore to apply them to the Gentiles is altogether out of place.

Second. What was the relation of the Jews to God at the time Christ uttered the words of our text? Answer: they were in covenant relation to God. Ex. xxxiv. 27, 29.

Third. What was their condition under that covenant? Having sinned, or failed to keep the covenant, they were condemned to suffer the penalty of death under their covenant. That is, they were condemned under their law, the same as a man having been condemned to suffer capital punishment under our law; and this included every individual in the whole nation.

Jesus said, "Did not Moses give you the law? yet none of you keepeth it." John vii., 19. Here is a testimony that the whole nation was guilty under their law: (quoting the language of the editor from his article "Two Covenants.") "In this law covenant, or covenant of works by Moses, every transgression received a just recompense of reward, and there was no escape, except by resorting to the continued offerings appointed in this covenant, without which the nation would have become extinct by the penalty of death."

Fourth. Was there any time appointed in which God would cease to accept such offerings as a substitute for the sins of the nation, and wind up this covenant, and make an end of sins and transgressions under this covenant? In Dan. ix., 24, we read, "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, (Daniel's people, the Jews) and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation; (between the offending covenanters and their God), and to bring in everlasting righteousness," etc.

Fifth. That some other substitute must be supplied beside bulls and goats is self-evident from Paul's language, Heb. x., 4–9, "For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins. Wherefore when he cometh into the world, he saith, Sacrifices and offerings thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me . . . . Then said he, Lo I come, to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first covenant (of death, by the sacrifice of himself), that he may establish the second," (covenant). Now that God did find such a substitute in the place of the guilty nation of Israel, we find recorded in Isiah liii., 4–12, "Surely he hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him, stricken, smitten of God and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions (under our covenant), he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we (Israel) are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we (Israel) have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all; (Israel) . . . . He was cut off out of the land of the living; for the transgression of my people (Israel) was he stricken . . . . Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief. . . . When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin (under the first covenant), he shall see his seed (redeemed), he shall prolong their days, and the pleasure of the Lord (the new covenant) shall prosper in his hands. He shall see of the travail of his soul (Israel redeemed from under the first covenant) and shall be satisfied; by his knowledge shall my righteous servant (Christ) justify many; . . . because he poured out his soul unto death, and he was numbered with the transgressors; and he bare the sins of many, and made intercession for the transgressors," (under the law.)

Sixth. In order to accomplish this work, Jesus Christ was made a Minister of the circumcision. Rom. xv., 8. He was made under the law to redeem them that were under the law. And this took place at the fulness of time. Gal. iv. 5.

Seventh. Jesus Christ was to Israel what Adam was to his race. Adam was a figure or type of Christ in his trial. Adam was tried and failed; and the race condemned. Jesus was tried for his people Israel. Jesus was faithful, and Israel was justified.

Eighth. In order to accomplish this work, John the Baptist came first, preaching, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand; repent and be baptized for the remission of sins (under the first covenant). Jesus followed John saying, The TIME is fulfilled; the kingdom of heaven is as hand. Daniel's time had come for establishing the kingdom. And Zachariah was filled with the Holy Spirit, and prophesied, saying, Blessed be the God of Israel for he hath visited and redeemed his people; and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us, in the house of his servant David: as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets since the world began; that we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us. To perform the mercies promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy COVENANT," etc. Christ came to John the Baptist requesting baptism of him; thereby confessing the sins of the nation, and receiving baptism for their remission. On him God laid the iniquities of the whole nation. And being the substitute for Israel's sins, he died in their stead. Thus the condemnation under which Israel was placed fell on him. He came to his own and had his own received him, he would then have established the kingdom God promised to their fathers. Thus Jesus Christ complied with all the requirements that God had made of the nation. Paul says that this law entered that sin might abound. But where sin abounded grace did much more abound. Rom. v., 20. Here, so to speak, God concentrated sin under this covenant, in order that he might condemn sin in the flesh. "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of (but not in) sinful flesh, and by a sacrifice for sin (margin), condemned sin in the flesh." Rom. viii., 3.

Now, to sum up our eight heads, we remark, that Israel under the first covenant was condemned to death, and would have been destroyed unless some deliverance was found. Caiaphas understood the law of redemption under the first covenant, and, therefore, said, "That it is expedient for us that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not." John xi., 50. Jesus having come, and as a representative man, he was tried for his nation; and having complied with all the conditions and requirements of the law, the law had no claim on him: but standing for his people, God transferred all the conditions of the covenant unto Christ; and therefore he became the sacrifice under the law in their stead; and by the act of his death, he completed, filled up, and took away the first covenant; and thereby raised from under the condemnation of death all that was under that covenant.

Hence the remarks, John v., 22, "For the Father judgeth no man (under this covenant), but hath committed all judgment unto the Son (verse 27); and hath given him judicial authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of Man." What was the executive and judicial judgment that Jesus said, "The hour is coming and now is, when all that are in their graves shall hear his voice?" In Luke xxi., 22, we read, "For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled. . . . And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: And Jerusalem shall be trodden down," etc. Why look away to some future time for the fulfilment of an event that was right upon them? Jesus became their sacrifice; died under their covenant; and in him, by proxy, every Jew in the nation was crucified, died and paid the penalty of the law. And hence, the law had no more claim upon them. Paul says Gal. iii., 19, "For I, through the law, am dead to the law, that I might live unto God. I am crucified (by proxy) with Christ; nevertheless (although dead) I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith (of whom? myself? No) of the Son of God; who loved me, and gave himself (died) for me." And so could every other Jew say the same thing; the life the Jew now lives, he lives because Jesus Christ died for him.

What then was the resurrection of which Jesus spake in John v., 28, 29? We answer, Not a literal resurrection from a literal death; but a political resurrection from a political death. Jesus, by dying under their covenant, delivered them from the consequences of their covenant, and raises them from under it, and from its penalties. And they that had done good came forth to enjoy life under the new dispensation. The doing good was, to hear the prophet which the Lord raised up unto them. And they that had done evil came forth to suffer punishment, or the condemnation. Not as a nation; not under their covenant; that condemnation was death; but individually to suffer the punishment that God had said should come upon them, if they failed to hear that prophet. Thus the first covenant was wound up and completed; and all the blessings and curses fell upon Christ; and has no further claims upon the Jew. Whatever blessings may be in store for Israel, are under the new Covenant through Jesus Christ. This has been our understanding of John v., 28, 29, for years. Yours, in the hope of a part in the new covenant.

TRUST NOT IN MAN.

"PUT not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Psa. cxlvi., 3, 4.

The course of man from his creation down to the present time attests his inclination to trust in the arm of flesh. Forgetting that God rules the earth, controlling the destinies of nations, he rests his confidence in finite instruments of omnipotence rather than in the source of all power. We read the earlier history of those of our race whose political economy was a theocracy, under which they were exalted to such conditions of national enlightenment and strength as rendered them objects of jealousy and hatred to surrounding peoples, and wonder at their unfortunate proneness to forget the divine favors they had enjoyed, and to overlook promised blessings, in the vain hope of deliverance by human power. We remember with surprise how that once-favored people, while yet smarting under the infliction of one judgment for their neglect of God and his word, would expose themselves to another by their fatal error of trusting in human strength, and think how different would have been our course.

When their promised Messiah presented himself as the manifested Son of God, and offered them a deliverance far more glorious than they had ever experienced, they haughtily rejected him in their proud reliance for temporal deliverance upon a strong arm of flesh, and for this, Christians bitterly reproach them, and denounce them in unmeasured terms. But the Christian church itself, though it became well established, and flourished amid persecutions, soon began to change its faith in the sublime doctrines of him who had "become the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him" for those doctrines of human invention which ere long leavened the whole lump, putting out its light of truth, and plunging it into that dark, awful night which for centuries wrapped it in a pall of deepest horror.

By the light of the experiences of others, we see the rocks upon which many have become shipwrecked in the upper waters of the great stream of life, and we lightly talk of the want of faith and trust in him who reigns supreme which led them into false reliances, and on to destruction; but how is it with us in these enlightened later days?

Vain must be all attempts to adequately portray the many diabolical deeds of persecution during that long and terrible night when "the mystery of iniquity" held tyrannic sway; for no words of tongue or pen can fitly tell the hideousness of the frightful crimes then perpetrated in the name of Christianity. But at last, in the providence of God, faithful Bible students were blessed with unfoldings of truth upon some prominent points of "the faith once delivered unto the saints," and, proclaiming it in the fear and power of the "Lord of hosts" to an apostate church, began to shed glimmerings of pure gospel light upon the pathway of such as would believe. Among the very foremost of those instruments in the hands of Almighty power for initiating the great work of reformation, were Luther, Melancthon, and Calvin. Although the advance ground of their opposition to that mass of error and corruption, papacy, was at first very limited, they nobly maintained it against the fearful torrent of bitter opposition launched against them. They successfully stemmed the current, gaining one foothold after another, wrenching weapon after weapon from the enemy, and had accomplished much work, when they rested from their labors and fell asleep in Jesus. Until arrested by death, their march in the path of truth was ever onward and upward.

But, trusting in the men, rather than in the God who led them, thousand of their followers stand to-day in positions occupied by them more than three centuries ago, quite content with a degree of truth which failed to satisfy these eminent men, and clasp in fond embrace errors which they diligently sought and prayed for strength to dissipate.

At a later period tried servants of God were called to place other bright gems of truth upon the triumphant standard of reformation. These had not only to battle with the common enemy of Christian progress, but had also to contend against some of the many errors of preceding reformers whose doctrines, wrong as well as right, were, because of undue trust in man, clung to by respective followers with superstitious zeal. But, stern and unyielding in their devotion to the right, earnest, faithful, and consistent disciples of Jesus, they were eminently successful, under God, in dissipating much of the "gross darkness" which yet enveloped the minds of the people, and caused the truth to shine with greater brightness and beauty. They, too, sought to grow "in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ;" but when they had finally passed under the dominion of death the fragments of their unfinished work were gathered up by admiring followers and are to this day guarded with jealous care, as if they were all of truth God ever designed to reveal. Present, now, to blind adherents of popular theology any truth with which they happen to be unacquainted (and with how few, comparatively, are they not) and, however conclusively you may show by Scripture testimony that it is truth, they will unhesitatingly denounce it as false and pernicious; in proof of which, they will point to Wesley, or Fox, or some other apostle of Christ, as their infallible theological father, who did not believe any such thing. Though acknowledging that all those eminent Bible students continued to learn while they lived, these subjects of greatly superabundant confidence and trust in finite man act upon the reprehensible assumption that, when the voices of their leaders were stilled in death no gospel truth worth knowing remained unlearned. Laymen of the various religious organizations do not, to any considerable extent, think for themselves upon doctrinal points; but, trusting in man instead of in God, they leave that important work to their fawning hirelings, very few of whom dare think, much less express, anything at variance with their creeds, through fear of damaging their pecuniary prospects. In fact, both clergy and laity are under a God-dishonoring surveillance; for the very establishment of a creed is a virtual avowal that its subscribers shall not think except in full accord with its sentiments, else why any creed at all. With this chain of antichrist's own forging do individuals consent to be bound when they accept as their unchangeable faith any creed framed by human minds, and especially so in accepting such as were devised when Scripture pages reflected far less of heavenly light than by God's grace they now do.

Eternal torment for the wicked, in a hell of fire, is the avowed faith of several religious sects, but it is very little preached now-a-days because so many people disbelieve it and will not listen to it; and yet, none dare hint the propriety of severing it from the expressed faith of the church for fear of being "cast out of the synagogues."

Professing Christians talk about their great faith in God's word, but most of them exercise great faith in the traditions of men. Many of the doctrines of modern theology are directly opposed to those of the Bible. The former are purely traditional; the latter are divinely revealed truths. Confidence and trust in the former leads men to attempt to harmonize the two by taking a liberty with that sacred book, the Bible, which they would not presume to take with any book of human production, and that is to so far violate the laws of language as to attach to the plainest and most positive declarations of Jehovah's meaning the very reverse of those which the words convey. For instance: God has said, "the soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek. xviii,, 4. Modern theology says, "the soul is immortal and cannot die; therefore, although when the word 'die' occurs in any other book, that was ever written, it means to cease to live, to expire, it must in the Bible sometimes mean to live eternally in sin and suffering; to never expire." Again Paul says, "The wages of sin is death." Theologians are compelled to claim that, notwithstanding other writers use the term "death" to express a total cessation of all the vital functions, Paul must of course, use it to express eternal life in unhappiness. This is exceeding queer logic on the part of popular theology, but it is the best that can be done without subjecting its system to utter demolition. Doctors of divinity ought to style themselves doctors of theology; for their theology is very sick, "nigh unto death." But all their doctoring cannot save it: its disease is constitutional and must ere long prove fatal. Like papacy it subsists, as an institution, upon ignorance; and just in proportion as it permits free investigation of Scripture among its votaries it suffers loss, crumbles to pieces. True it gives Bibles to its subjects, and tells them to read; but it takes the precaution at the same time to warn them that certain doctrines, and only those, are taught in the blessed book; and if, perchance, any happen to indulge in a little thinking for themselves, and thereby arrive at conclusions other than those prescribed, their lips are at once sealed to any expression of their views, under penalty of expulsion from religious fellowship as heretics or infidels. To their praise be it said, many such accept the worst that can be inflicted upon them, and hold on to the truth, together with the privilege of proclaiming it.

This immaculate and infallible institution would not circumscribe the religious liberty of any of its subjects, not it; all may think for themselves, provided they think in strict accord with its commands. All must have faith in the word of God, but then they must have supreme faith in theological interpretation of the word. Despite, however, all efforts to prevent innovations upon it, the miserable fabric of man-made theology is fast falling into disrepute, because found to be grossly inconsistent with the gospel of him who freely poured out his life on Calvary. If Christians, professing to love the truth, will withdraw their trust from "man, in whom there is no help," and trust wholly in the living God, the eternal word of truth will "have free course and be glorified." They may be sent out into strange paths, but they will feel it good to be there. They may be led in ways which they knew not of, but great indeed will be their peace and joy in the service of God and of his Christ. May all we who have been delivered from the bondage of tradition, and been brought into the marvelous light of truth, earnestly and faithfully strive to show forth the beauty and excellency of implicit trust in God.

New York, Feb. 1868. L. C. T.

Is there a Personal Devil?

The above question seems to be a subject of unceasing interest lately throughout the country. Of course it is a popular belief, but like all popular errors, it is only necessary to subject the poison to the crucible of truth, in order to expose and eradicate its deadly effects among mankind. But, unfortunately, many, if not a majority, of our Advent proclaimers still cling to this phantom of heathen manufacture, and popish cupidity. I have had to fight this ghost for twenty years, without having the pleasure of seeing the subject ventilated through the public press, until lately. The discussion, therefore, is still in its infancy; and although Judge Halsted, and Dr. Finley and others have been digging at the root, the vine and branches still cumber the ground, and will again take root if not thoroughly removed and destroyed. Our Advent preachers have generally outstripped the Orthodox in the extravagance of their description of the omnipotent, omnipresent power of this imaginary god of heathen superstition. But I feel inexpressibly thankful that the "Life and Advent Union," headed by our aged Editor, have allowed the columns of the Herald of Life to be used to discuss this too-long neglected relic of Popery.

That there is, however, a personal devil, I verily believe; and has been ever since Cain killed his brother, inasmuch as our Lord calls him the first one. John viii., 44. "Ye are of your father, the devil, and the lusts of your father will ye do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth; because there is no truth in him; when he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar and the father of it." Hence it appears that all the false teachers are the children of the "wicked one," no matter how pious they may appear to us. If they assume the name of God's ministers, but preach error, reject the truth, and persecute its advocates, we are assured by these tokens that they are the adversaries of God; or, in the language of our question, "personal devils." And this opinion is sustained by our Lord and his servants, as shown by their teaching. Read the following passages for example: John vi., 70. Matt. xvi., 23. Acts xiii., 10; 1 John iii., 10; 2 Cor. xi., 14, 1 Cor. x., 21, Matt. xiii., 38, 39. 2 Tim. iii., 1; Rev. ii., 9, 10, 24, and many more passages might be referred to, but the reader will see by the above of whom to beware, and be prepared to resist with all the weapons of truth spoken of by Paul and Peter, 1 Tim. iii., throughout; iv., 1–8; 2 Peter ii., throughout. It is thus evident that the "Bibleite" can find any number of personal devils if he is faithful to his trust, without seeing imaginary ones in his way.

It must not, however, be supposed that this superstition has been accidentally introduced into the church. Evidently motives similar to the introduction of the immortal soul and eternal torment theory (as appears from the evidence of the early reformers), induced those tyrants of persecution to make those dogmas prominent, that they might overawe the multitude, enslave their minds and divert their attention from the real to the imaginary foe. And the use still made of this fancied monster shall convince every thinking mind that the deception is still continued with a design to carry out the original design.

The application of the term devil, in the Old Testament, to idols, etc., and in the New Testament to diseases, lunacy, evil thoughts, etc., has been well disposed of through the Herald of Life, by the the Editor and others, and the full exposure of the term in the "Theology of the Bible," through the patient labors and deep research of Judge Halsted, has laid us all under deep obligations for his timely and inestimable work upon that and many other questions of vital importance to the Bible student. It is certainly very cheering to those of us who have for many years been paddling against the stream of public opinion, and at the same time been denounced by brethren for these supposed heresies, to see the truth gradually gaining ground, and darkness disappearing with the light of approaching day. It is like a night of sorrow succeeded by the relief of the morning dawn.

May it be our happy lot soon to see the "Sun rise with healing in his wings," and "swallowed up death in victory," thereby "destroying the works of the devil."

It is said that when the mother of Washington was asked how she had formed the character of her son, she replied, that she had early endeavored to teach him three things—obedience, diligence, and truth. No better advice can be given by any parent.

Letters and Extracts.

From C. W. Chick.

Lynchburg, Va., Jan. 30, 1868.

Br. Storrs: Thinking you would like to hear from this distant corner, I will intrude a few items upon your consideration. The first thing is, I want to know if some of the laborers in the Life question cannot be prevailed on to come and spend a season with us, and proclaim the truth in this benighted section? I have presented the subject in conversation to all whom I have met, that would listen; besides, the tracts you sent have been read by some; and I trust many may be led to see the "error of their way." In a conversation with an Episcopal minister, a few days ago, after hearing him deliver a sermon, in which he used quite freely the expressions, "eternal death," "the soul that sinneth it shall die," etc. I asked him, how these passages were to be understood, literally or spiritually? He said, "We do not know what a spiritual death is; and it cannot mean a literal death. We use the phrases figuratively." I asked if he believed the soul went to heaven or hell at death? His reply was he did not know; but he believed it went to "some place, where it would be either happy or miserable." I offered to loan him Dobney's work, but he refused it. I also asked, how he knew he had an immortal soul? He said, "Because I feel that I have; which is proof enough without the Bible."

With the exception of my own household, and those with whom I have conversed and given tracts to, I know of none who ever heard the truth of the natural immortality doctrine questioned.

You have sown the seed over much soil. May the Lord give the increase; and may he sustain your efforts to spread the truth. I see many works noticed in the Herald which I should like to read. It may be that I shall be able some day to obtain them. Yours in hope of life.

Note by the Editor.—We wish we had laborers and means to send them into your region. We will send you more tracts, and trust you will keep them preaching, and get the people to look into their Bibles to see if "these things are so." If you can get the people out to hear, read to them some of the sermons we publish. That will open the way for more work, and may be the means of raising up laborers among yourselves. Our Lord often left only one or two new converts in a place "to tell how great things God had done for them." Do not look abroad too much for help, but work with the means within your reach, and call on the Lord to give power and efficacy to his truth, however humble the means employed to spread it. What books, pamphlets, and tracts do you want most? Let us know, and we will try to help you as we may have means. The minister you speak of gave the best reason he had for proof that he had an immortal soul; quite as good as is generally given; just such as we might expect when "men love darkness rather than light," lest they should lose their "church standing."

From Abel Larkin.

Mt. Sterling, Ill., Feb. 3, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I have just received from Z. Campbell, of Ashtabula, Ohio, a copy of the Herald of Life, and, believing it to be one among the best of religious publications, I hasten to enclose $2 for it. I am of the number who are anxious for the acquisition of all religious and prophetic truth, and I know of no way for the accumulation of this truth than a thorough and rigid investigation of the word of God. And let all new ideas, that have the appearance of truth, come forth, subject to scrutiny.

I have for a long time been well convinced that the depth of falsehood and corruption of the Christian apostacy is almost fathomless: the bottom has not been found, neither will it be so long as the "face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all" remains undisturbed. False positions of large magnitude must give way for the admission of those of an indispensable character for the coming kingdom. And those who labor must work for an increase of talent that they may be wise; for, "the wise shall understand." Confident I am that Jerusalem has yet a warfare to accomplish: "the same horn made war on the saints," or wise, who "shall understand," etc. "And the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Dan. vii., 22.

See Rev. xii., 7, Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not. It should be recollected that it is the same "Michael" that Daniel xii., 1, speaks of: "The great prince that standeth for the children of thy people."

It is impossible for me to understand the Book of Revelation, unless I put the fulfilment of almost the entire book in the future, and there locate its predictions in a very short space of time. The closing scenes of the fourth universal empire are so vast and great as to necessarily require it as a point of time, for the concentration or culmination of almost all prophecy. And I must believe that the time when, and the way and manner in which, they are to take place, should be the study of the prophetic students, and is the only way that the admonition can be heeded—"What I say I say unto all, watch," etc.

I believe in time, but whether the time of the great day of the Lord can be ascertained now is doubtful with me, though I am certain it can't be this side of 1875.

But I must forbear, for I am aware that I am a stranger to you, and hope you will excuse these intrusive remarks.

Note by the Editor.—The writer of the foregoing is a new subscriber, and entirely unknown to us, except as his letter introduces him. He says he "believes in time." So do we: but not in a prophetic period that gives the day, month, or year of the second advent, and therefore we cannot say "It can't be this side of 1875." But he has the same right to say that as others have to say it will be "this year," or any other definite year. All such calculations, in our view, are baseless, because it has been settled with us for years that no such definite "time is in the Bible:" and we are persuaded God will yet teach all such speculators that they "labor in vain, and spend their strength for naught." We cannot say of any definite year, "The Advent will not occur this year," because that would be the same as to say the definite year is revealed, and that we deny. That the event is not far off, the prophetic history of the world clearly indicates; therefore we are in the watching time, and it becomes us to be always ready; for, "in such an hour as ye [my friends] think not, the Son of man cometh;" and "ye [my friends], know not when the time is," Thus spake our divine Lord, and it is infinitely more important for us to heed the words of Jesus than to spend time and labor in following the speculations of men who have often lived to see their calculations baseless.

As to our friend's views of the prophecies of the book of Revelation being mainly in the future, we do not see the matter in that light; but we do not wonder he takes that view, when we consider the vain speculations of the multitudes of professed interpreters of that prophecy. There are general features of that book clearly traceable, but the particulars, in fulfilment, are not so easily established, but may be sufficiently understood for all practical purposes, and that without supposing it to be chiefly in the future.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

Beck's Creek, Ill., Jan. 25, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I have been exploring new fields, and it would do some of our preachers good to be out here and travel with us if they could stand the hardship that we have to endure, for we have no rest day or night; the people are all stirred up about the strange doctrine as they call it; and they come from every quarter to hear what "the old babbler" has to say. The school-houses are filled to overflowing, so that some have to stand out doors or go home. You will see sleigh loads going before sundown in order to get seats, and they would willingly stand for two or three hours, and at the close there will be perhaps a half dozen applications for us to come and preach to them.

The sectarian preachers are terribly in earnest. One came out fiercely against me, and said he would fight me as long as I staid in the place. After exhausting his resources the people advised him to say no more. The Campbellites have sent a long distance, I am informed, to get some of their preachers to come and whip me out. So be it. I understand the weapons they use, and have no fear of them.

Jan. 31, Eld. J. Lewis writes again from Beck's Creek:

We are having very interesting times here; more so than any place I have ever visited in this State. When I wrote you last I thought of leaving soon for other fields of labor, but the interest is increasing; so much so that they come six or eight miles to hear, and the cry, "Can't you come and preach to us?" comes from every quarter. I preach every night, and two or three times on the first day of the week, and then have many questions to answer, day after day, by the preachers and members of the so-called church, as well as the outsiders; and if God had not blessed me with strong, sound lungs, I should have been prostrated long ago. Praise the good Lord for health and strength and friends, but we want help. Hope Br. Osborn will come back, and abide with us a long while. Br. Walter was a good, true yoke fellow, but we have not seen or heard from him since last fall. Wish he was here to take part of the labor. Will he write to me to the above place?

I want to say that we are entirely out of tracts, and there is a deep anxiety to get them. I appeal to all to support the tract cause, so the West can have the light of truth as well as the East. We now want the Bible vs. Tradition, Six Sermons, Watch Tower, and Life from the Dead. These works are called for every day. But in addition, the Atonement is becoming more and more interesting. Should like to have some more of the "Short and Long Hell," "Questions on Immortality," but money is quite out of the question here, in consequence of the almost entire failure of the crops, in consequence of which some of the hireling priests have stopped preaching to them. But there is a thirst for hearing the word of life. Now, brethren and sisters, the question arises, Can the old one-armed preacher be sustained, and the poor and needy have the gospel preached to them or not? Our blessed Lord is coming soon to give reward to his servants the prophets, and to the saints, small and great, and to destroy the corruptors of the earth. Your brother in tribulation, and in hopes of deliverance soon.

Fredericksburg, Iowa, Feb., 1868.

Br. Storrs: I am highly interested in the contents of the Herald of Life; especially the subject of the non-resurrection of the wicked, and that of the devil. But while I am interested, I am greatly astonished that the death of Christ does not settle the question of the non-resurrection of the wicked, with all the readers of the Herald. Did Christ die twice? No one pretends that he did. Did he suffer the full penalty of the law? According to the Scriptures, we believe that he did. Then why add, another penalty for the sinner? The Scripture saith, "Knowing that Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God." Rom. vi., 9, 10. Now, dear reader, you see that Christ died once: and he dieth no more: so there is no second death as a penalty of the law; but "the wages of sin is death." Not two deaths; "but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Now, what is the hope of the unbeliever? Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. But the wicked do not believe; and there is no other name under heaven given among men whereby we may have life, but by the name of Jesus.

Again Jesus saith, "And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." Blessed promise: the sure foundation of the true gospel hope: the hope of eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord; and that by a resurrection from the dead, or from among the dead. But where is there a promise, in all the Word of God, that the wicked shall have a resurrection to life? When I have been searching the Scriptures, I have marked many passages in Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Isaiah, on the destiny of the wicked.

I will give some of them. Job xx. 7, 8. "He shall perish forever like his own dung: they which have seen him shall say, Where is he? He shall fly away as dream, and shall not be found: yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night." xxi. 30, 32. "That the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction, they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath. Yet shall he be brought to the grave, and remain in the tomb." xxiv., 18. "Drought and heat consume the snow waters: so doth the grave those which have sinned." This is but a little of what is found in Job; but all are of the same character.

David, speaking in the first Psalm, of the blessedness of the righteous, says, "The ungodly are not so: but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away. Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous." Psa. xxxvii., 2. "For they shall be soon cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb." Verse 9. "For evil doers shall be cut off: but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth." Verse 10, "For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." Verse 12. "The wicked plotteth against the just, etc." Verse 13. "The Lord shall laugh at him: for he seeth that his day is coming." Verse 17. "For the arms of the wicked shall be broken, etc." Verse 20. "But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." The latter clause of verse 28: "but the seed of the wicked shall be cast off." Verse 34. "Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it." Verse 33. "I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree." Verse 36. "Yet he passed away, and, lo, he was not: yea I sought him, but he could not be found." Verse 38. "But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off."

You see by the passages that I have selected, that they all agree; all have one character; all describing the destiny of the wicked; "the end," the "cutting off," the "destruction," the "perishing," the "shall not be."

More hereafter. May God bless the reader, and the writer, and the whole Israel of God, with the truth as it is in Jesus.

Eld. John Craig, Westford, Mass., under date of Feb. 3d, writes: Your timely letter, with $5 from Br. Chase, has come to hand: the $2, also, from M. S. Chambers was received. Our heavenly Father bless and reward an hundred fold. I should have written sooner, but my wife was so sick when your first letter was received that I waited, hoping she would be better: but instead of that, she is failing fast every hour. I have been confined to her bedside for three weeks, and while I write a heavy pressure of pain and wasting disease is upon her. She rests her only hope in Christ, our Life-giver. I wish our Brethren and Sisters to know that our Father sustains me wonderfully in my deep affliction, as I am also suffering from a broken shoulder by a fall last month. I am unable to use my arm to any extent. But how can I doubt the goodness of our covenant God? He gives me strength as my day is. I am still waxing stronger in the blessed truth of Life only in Christ. I have searched diligently the Bible to find the resurrection of the wicked dead; yet I find it not; but the opposite seems clearly taught. How this view honors God. How the old theory dishonors him.

Wife requests the prayers of God's children in her behalf. She is a great sufferer now: her cancer is eating up into her throat. She cannot live much longer.

Note by the Editor.—We hope our friends will remember this afflicted Brother, not only in their prayers, but pecuniarily, as he is undoubtedly needy, and is worthy of our aid.

A. D. Krewson, Harrison, Ohio, sends us $2 for a new subscriber, and writes: Dr. B. is an old friend of mine that I have not seen for some five years; then we talked nearly all night, on the subject of Christianity, and our views harmonized and we enjoyed ourselves remarkably well. We have both been investigating from that time until the present, without much variation in views, although he has not read anything on the subject of "No life out of Christ." As soon as I showed him the Herald of Life he gave me $2 to send for it for him. He was willing to have all the help he could get in the investigation of the word of truth. I hope the good Lord will prosper the paper and prolong the life of its Editor, that he may be the instrument in the hands of God in opening the eyes of the blind, and leading many sinners to Christ, that they may have life.

Note by the Editor: Br. Krewson has scarcely been a subscriber six months himself; but he is evidently in earnest. He has sent us four or five new subscribers within that time, for which we thank him. May his zeal, in this direction, stimulate others to a like effort. It becomes us all to work while the day lasts; for shortly our work must cease.

James W. Smith, Upland, Pa., writes: The Herald of Life is the only preacher I have, and it is a lonely "Lord's day" when I do not get it on the Saturday previous. There is not one person in this village that believes as we do but myself. The Methodists and Baptists are just the same; they will suffer no one among them who does not swear allegiance to Socrates, and bow the knee to Plato. I have given them copies of the Herald, and am lending the Six Sermons and other works. There are two or three who will talk on this subject, but as a rule the members are afraid to do so. The Methodist church do not believe in the second advent of Christ; they believe death is his coming, and is all the coming of Christ any one will see. "The soul, the soul," is the beginning and ending of all they have to say.

Randolph E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., under date of Feb. 9, writes: The discussion between Br. Wendell and Mr. Chattaway, on the question of "Man's natural immortality, and the literal resurrection of the dead, was held during the past week and the week before, and ended in the glorious triumph of the truth. I think the conviction upon the minds of the majority that heard the discussion was, that the arguments in support of man's natural immortality were very weak. An interest has been awakened in the investigation that will not soon subside. You will be furnished with outlines of the discussion by one who took notes. Suffice it for me to say, that the blessed Bible truth never shone so bright here as now. To God be all the glory.

A Choice Library of Music.

The United States Musical Review, published by J. L. Peters, No. 200 Broadway, New York, is before us, and merits the attention of all lovers of music. It is a mammoth monthly magazine, sheet-music size, containing over seventeen pages of musical news, reviews, and choice art items, every line of which is readable, and we should say, invaluable to all musicians. This alone is well worth a year's subscription, which is only $2. The publishers, however, do not stop here, for, in addition to the above, each number contains four pieces of choice new music by the best writers in America, thus giving a select library of new music at such a low rate that even the poorest may indulge in what has hitherto been considered a luxury.

The U. S. Musical Review is published at $2 per year: single copies 20 cents. No musical family should be without it.

Poetry.

Words of Jesus.

O, the precious words of Jesus,
Radiant with the light of life,
Balm for every mortal anguish,
Calm for every mental strife;
Richer far than earthly treasures
Are the joys they can impart,
Bread of life for starving mortals,
Power to heal each br.ken heart.

O, the blessed words of Jesus!
"I'm the shepherd, ye my sheep,
And of all my Father gives me,
To the end I'll safely keep.
None shall ever take them from me,
For I know them every one,
And they know the Shepherd's calling,
At his word with joy they run."

O, the loving words of Jesus!
"Come, ye weary, unto me;
And thou heavy-laden sinner,
I have peaceful rest for thee;
Come and take my yoke so easy,
Come and learn awhile of me,
I am meek and I am lowly,
And my burden light shall be."

O, the cheering words of Jesus!
"If I go away I'll send
The blessed, holy Comforter, and
He'll be with you to the end.
My Father's house hath many mansions,
Or I would have told you so;
I will come again and take you,
That where I am ye may be too.

O, the glorious words of Jesus!
"I'm the way, the truth and life,"
Firmest anchor for life's sailor
When the rudest storms are rife.
Words of Jesus, words of Jesus,
Radiant with the light of life,
Balm for every mortal anguish,
Calm for every mental strife.

The Boy who Became an Ink-Maker.

"Mother, why do you always stop before this house, and look at it and cry?" This question was asked by a little boy, who was twelve years of age, of his poor, but neatly-clad mother.

"Oh!" said she, "there are very unpleasant memories connected with this place. It was here that I was born. This large and beautiful house belonged to my parents, who were among the wealthiest and most respectable people of the city. My uncle lived with us, and he held a very high office under government. And now—" She was so overcome with grief that she could not continue.

"And now I am nothing but a poor errand boy! Pray, do tell me, mother, what has made the difference?"

"The war and my wicked uncle," she answered. It was in the year 1813, when the French army drove the Russian and Prussian troops into Silesia. From May until November my parents were compelled to quarter troops, so that in that time we were required to support twenty thousand officers and soldiers. Of course, provisions of all kinds were very high. The troops made us get just what they wanted, no matter how much it cost. This itself was enough to make us poor. My father's business was ruined, and after the troops left he was compelled to sell our beautiful home. Owing to the war, property was very low, and when our house was sold, my uncle bought it for almost nothing. If he had been kind, he would have loaned my father money enough to help us through our difficulties. But he was not kind; for, as soon as he bought our house, he turned us all out, and said: 'Go—take care of yourselves!' But come along; don't let us stop here. The Lord has taken care of us thus far, and he will take care of us until the end."

Benno and his mother walked slowly to their little room, in the upper story of an old house in one of the dark alleys of the city. They did not speak much to each other on the way, but each seemed to be buried in thought. Just before reaching their home, Benno's mother told him not to feel unkindly toward his uncle, but always to treat him respectfully. Benno promised to do so, and he was never afterward known to speak a disrespectful word of his uncle.

Benno carefully saved the money that he earned as an errand-boy, and gave it to his mother every Wednesday and Saturday evening, when he came home from his work. One Tuesday morning he asked her if he might spend three cents for a little ink, as he wanted to take writing-lessons in the night-school. His mother gladly gave her consent, and the first spare half-hour that Benno had he went to Emrichs, the grocer, to get his little supply of ink.

Old Emrichs looked up at him, and said: "Other boys are always buying candy and nuts, but you never seem to want anything of that kind, but want to buy something useful. Tell me how old you are, and how would you like to live with me and make ink for me? I am just now in want of a boy for that purpose."

Benno told Emrichs that he could not answer his question until he had asked his mother; besides he was engaged to Mr. Minhold as an errand boy until the 1st of April. Emrichs told him that April would be soon enough and requested him to follow him up-stairs and see what kind of work he would have to do. He then showed little Benno an iron mortar, and told him that he would have nothing to do but pound the materials for the ink in that mortar, for there would be somebody else who would mix them and put the ink in bottles.

A few months passed on and Benno might have been seen any day in old Emrichs' garret, pounding ink-powder. He enjoyed his work very much, and could take a great deal more money home to his mother than he used to do, for his wages were much higher. One day he had more than his usual amount of work to do, and it was after dark before he had finished it. His mother had already been waiting for him for some time, and wondered why he did not come. Benno stayed still later to help Emrichs make out his bills for his customers, and this took them until ten o'clock. Benno had never stayed away from his mother all night, but as the distance was long, and he would have to go through many dark alleys, he accepted Emrichs' invitation to spend the night in his house.

Little Benno tried hard to get to sleep as he lay in the little garret bed, which stood near where he was in the habit of making ink-powder. He heard the old clock down-stairs strike eleven, twelve, one, and two; and he could not go to sleep in that strange bed and queer old garret. So he lay and thought how pleasant it would be for him some day to have a nice house for his mother to live in, and when it would be no longer necessary for her to take in sewing and washing. Suddenly he thought he heard somebody in the back yard, trying to open the door and get into the house. He lay and listened until he heard some persons talking. He quietly left his bed, walked softly to the other end of the garret, and looked out of the window that was right above the door which the burglars were trying to enter. Just as soon as he saw that they were burglars, he ran back, slipped down the garret-stairs, tapped at old Emrichs' door, and told him what was going on in the back yard. The old man put on his clothes as quickly as possible, went out of a side-door, and hurried to the police-office. Three policemen came back with him. But while he was gone, the burglars had broken the door open, and were in search of old Emrichs' money. Benno was afraid the policemen would not get there in time; so as soon as he heard the burglars open the door, he threw down a basket containing six of the biggest bottles of old Emrichs' ink. They fell in the right place for they broke on the burglars' heads, and the ink flew all over them. It went into their eyes, and they could not see which way to run.

Just at this time the policemen came up and seized them without any trouble. The burglars were tried before the court, and condemned to the penitentiary for six years. It was a good thing for old Emrichs that Benno stayed with him that night, and did not go to sleep as soon as the other people in the house. It was also a good thing for Benno, for it raised him very high in the estimation of old Emrichs, as he would probably have lost the twenty thousand dollars that lay in his chest, if it had not been for his little ink-maker.

A few weeks after this, Benno's wealthy uncle, of whom we have already spoken, died. He wrote no will, as he died very suddenly. His property was left to his nearest relative, who proved to be none other than Benno's mother. In due time they lived in the very house from which Benno's parents had been driven by their unkind uncle. On Benno's seventeenth birthday, old Emrichs took him in as his partner, and he always prospered after that. He was honest in all his dealings, and never became idle and proud. He was honored by the people with very important offices, and frequently was called by the king to give his advice on commercial matters.

Now I will tell you what passage in Proverbs Benno calls to my mind: "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings: he shall not stand before mean men."—Selected.

The Parable of the Ten Virgins.

BY CHARLES C. TUCK.

Much has been said and written concerning this parable within the last twenty years, by the Advent people; or, at least, a portion of them; and great importance has been and still is attached to it by many, who regard it as having a direct fulfilment in the history of that people during the last quarter of a century; and not only so, but this view of the parable is strenuously urged, both in preaching and writing; and a belief or disbelief of this particular interpretation is considered by them a test of Christian character. This interpretation of the parable I look upon as erroneous, and therefore discard it, although formerly holding the same view myself. I love truth because it is truth, and not merely because of the fellowship which comes from a belief in it. Although realizing how sweet and blessed is the communion and fellowship of brethren, yet that blessing ought not to be purchased at the cost of relinquishing what we honestly believe to be truth. Fellowship gained at that price is not worth having.

This parable is imagined to have been designed expressly to show the different movements of the Advent body, and especially the various "definite time" movements. But this application of the parable is plainly a mistake, for several reasons. First, Christ locates the likeness in a different place. Hear him. After speaking of the "evil servant," as recorded in Matthew xxiv., and onward, he says (verses 50 and 51), "The Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

When is the evil servant cut asunder? Answer: At the coming of his Lord, and not twenty or thirty years before he comes. At the time when the evil servant is cut asunder, Jesus says, "the kingdom of heaven" shall "be likened unto ten virgins." He says "then" it will receive its likeness, and not one word to intimate that it will receive that likeness before. In what respect is the kingdom of heaven (the church) to be like the ten virgins? Answer: In respect to watchfulness. That is the principle which Jesus was trying to impress upon the minds of the disciples, as is seen by his language, used both before and after uttering the parable.

Second, Jesus locates the coming of the bridegroom at midnight; whereas my Advent brethren say midnight passed with the passing of the definite time in 1854. Jesus says (chapter xxv., 6,) "And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh: go ye out to meet him." Immediately upon hearing that cry, the virgins rise, trim their lamps, and the foolish ones, finding they have no oil, go to buy some; but while they are gone, the bridegroom comes, etc. And when is all this transacted? Answer: At midnight. Take notice that the cry, "Behold the bridegroom cometh," is made at midnight; and furthermore, the virgins are at that time directed to go out and meet him. But how could they go out and meet him at midnight, if he was not coming till morning? They could not do so. It is further evident that the bridegroom comes at midnight, rather than in the morning, from the fact that the virgins are under the necessity of using lamps when they go out to meet him.

It is said that the parable was fulfilled in this way: The "time" movement in 1843 answered to the "going forth" of the virgins; from thence to 1854 the virgins slumbered and slept, while the bridegroom tarried; the "time" movement in 1854 answered to the "midnight cry;" since that time the virgins have been engaged in "trimming their lamps," etc. They trim their lamps to obtain more light. It was said previous to the passing of the 1867 "time" argument, that the result of their trimming their lamps was the discovering of the true time of the Lord's coming (in 1867). But the bridegroom did not come; therefore that could not have been the true time. It is said that the tarrying of the bridegroom was between the "going forth," in 1843, and the "midnight cry," in 1854; as if the Lord had not been tarrying ever since he has been gone! The word "tarry" is used by many in a wrong sense. They say that to "tarry" is to remain away beyond a certain fixed time when one is expected to return. This is a mistake. That word, according to Webster, simply means "to stay, to continue, to delay;" hence Jesus has been tarrying in heaven for eighteen hundred years, and he will continue to tarry till he comes to the earth.

It is said the figure used by Jesus in the parable was the marriage peculiar to that eastern country. This was evidently the case. But what were the proceedings peculiar to marriages in that country? Let the historian answer. Kitto, in his history of Palestine, says: "When the nuptual day arrived, the bridegroom went, in the evening, with his friends and associates, in holiday attire, to take home his bride from her father's house. She, splendidly arrayed, and with the bridal crown upon her head, came forth, attended by her young companions; and, walking under a canopy, was escorted to her future home with songs, and dances, and instrumental music."

Here, then, is the simple figure which Jesus employed to impress upon the minds of his disciples the importance of watching. Is there anything in the figure concerning a "going forth to meet the bridegroom," a disappointment, a going to sleep, a subsequent awakening, and going out the second time to meet him with lamps, and finally waiting till morning before he came? Not the slightest hint that such was the case; but the figure simply gives one going forth, which was in the evening, when lamps would be required; and says nothing about a disappointment, but does say the bridegroom came at that time. I think that by a careful examination of this parable, it will be seen that my conclusions in regard to it are right. Christ says that at the time of his coming the kingdom of heaven (or church) would be likened unto ten virgins that took their lamps and went forth to meet the bridegroom. They would be likened to them in respect to watchfulness: some being ready and some not ready. Christ used the figure of the eastern marriage to illustrate his subject, and in order the more fully to set forth the condition of the church at his coming, as he foresaw it would be, he divides the virgins in the figure into two classes—wise and foolish—and then, with this slight alteration, or higher coloring of the figure, proceeds with his illustration. The first four verses of the chapter give the outline of the parable—the story of the going forth of the virgins, their character, condition, etc. The 5th verse then commences a description of the particulars of the parable, beginning prior to the announcement of the bridegroom's approach, while he tarried and the virgins slept; and in the following verses, (from the 5th to the 12th) is the announcement of the bridegroom's coming, the awakening of the virgins, the going forth, the conversation between the two classes, etc. The great mistake in the exposition of this parable consists in confounding the general outline, contained in the first four verses, with the description of the particulars of the parable, contained in the subsequent verses.

May the Lord guide us in the study of his word, and enable us so to live that when the bridegroom comes we may hail him with joy, and go in with him to the marriage supper.

God has three houses—one for instruction, another for correction, and a third for destruction.

The Head and the Feet.

[The writer of this lives in a village not a hundred miles from New York, and calls himself "L." He is not much used to writing, but he styles himself "the feet," and so we give him a chance to walk.]

Standing on the corner of one of our streets in the darkness, a person accosted me thus: "How do you do L.? Let me see, you are a grear Storrs' man." I replied—"What do you know about Geo. Storrs? He responded, "I used to hear you talk in my store, when I resided in this place, and since I have been in New York I have frequently heard him: I think him a man of truth, a sound reasoner, and the strongest prop of that faith—a hard worker, and one who does not aspire to grand churches with organs and high steeples. Truth only seems to be the object sought."

So much for the head. Now for the feet. It is said of him: "He is an infidel, but honest; he is skeptical; he is calculated to do more harm than any other man in our village; he will not be whipped; if you corner him one day, he is ready for you the next." One said to him, "L. I don't see into it, you are honest, good to the poor; I would trust you with untold gold; yea, with my very life; and yet you believe in that damnable Storrs' doctrine, no eternal torments after death. I don't understand you." Another said—"Well, we have one man in this place who can put you to silence, Lawyer W." Said lawyer is an educated man and L. has never had even the advantages of a common school education. A "Spiritualist," after talking with L. awhile said, "I have had a jackass kick me before." Having said this he made off with himself. Another said—"L. is the devil." Another, after a little talk, said—"I don't want to talk to you any more." Another, when asked to show some of the doings of the spirits without matter, said, "It is time lost to talk with you." An old man of the Methodist E. Church, said, "I am not able to talk with you." And yet he came to persuade L. that he was wrong; but refused to take the Bible to show wherein he was wrong. The decision of the M. E. Church was—"We consider L. a Christian, and give him the privileges of the church, but he cannot be a member." A minister of that church said—"Come right along into the church, and when the questions are asked from which you dissent, just nod assent." A member said—"If you will stop talking that Storrs' doctrine we will admit you into the church." One says, "L. is not wise: another, "You had better not talk with him, for he will get you into a knot in five minutes." Another says—"Sir, you will find yourself in hell:" another says—"It's no use talking to him, he is too well posted, and he likes to talk on that subject." So they talk on.

I call our Editor "the head," under God, as God has seemed to set him as a leader in the work. L. I call "the feet," because he seems to be one of the lowest in education. I shook hands once with the Editor, and told him how I was used. He only laughed, and said, "It did not hurt much." That word proved a blessing: for I never have been hurt since by any of these things. L.

How to Leave off the use of Tobacco.

Br. Storrs: I am now 46 years old. I formed the habit of chewing and smoking tobacco when about 16. When arriving at mature manhood I began to detest myself because of this filthy habit. I sought to break off from it again and again by using less and less, and trying thus to gradually emancipate myself from this great scourge of the 19th century. Sometimes I would leave it off almost entirely for six months, taking only a little, just enough to feed the appetite and thus keep it alive, till this real devil would again overcome me and again lead me into bondage worse than that of Egypt.

Thus matters went on till about eight months ago, when I resolved, live or die I would use no more tobacco. When I did this the enemy was more than half conquered. He rallied his forces a number of times, but always ineffectually. In short, it was not long before he was completely subdued. I have never tasted tobacco since, and I wish to tell your readers, that, God helping me, I will never use it again. To those addicted still to this habit, I would say, if you wish to break it off, total abstinence is your only antidote. I speak from experience. Try this remedy and you will never regret it.

Since leaving it off, my health has improved greatly. My nervousness, my irritable temper, my wakefulness at night; and, above all, my cleanliness of person, have greatly improved.

Tobacco for Smokers.

In Paris, and probably in this country, there are people who gather up the cigar-stumps. The first man who did this gathered together only a few stumps, cut them up very fine, and then sold the tobacco to poor people to smoke in their pipes. He was very poor and this was the way he took to get a living. He succeeded so well that his business was found out, and, of course, there were plenty of others to pattern after his example. It is estimated that there are three hundred thousand cigars smoked every day in Paris, which would leave three hundred thousand stumps to be picked up in the streets, under the tables of the restaurants, in the public squares, and on the bridges across the Seine. Now, these stumps are carefully gathered up by a great many people who are engaged in the business. They are cut up very fine into smoking-tobacco, are packed up into beautiful packages, and a man who smokes—which nobody ought to do—is just as apt to buy one of these papers to smoke in his pipe as the very best tobacco.

How Goodness Protects.

John Kant was professor of divinity at Cracow, a pious, holy man, with a spirit peculiarly gentle and guileless. His head was covered with the snows of age, when he was seized with an ardent desire to revisit the scenes of his youth in his native country, Silesia. The journey appeared fraught with peril to one of his advanced age; but he set his affairs in order, and started on the way, trusting in the protection of Him who cares for his children.

One evening, as he journeyed along through the gloomy woods of Poland, holding communion with God, and taking no heed of objects beside him, on reaching an opening in the dark forest, a trampling noise was suddenly heard, and he was instantly surrounded by figures, some on horseback and some on foot. Knives and swords glittered in the moonlight, and the pious man saw that he was at the mercy of a band of robbers. Scarcely conscious of what passed, he alighted from his horse, and offered his property to the gang. He gave them a purse filled with silver coins, unclasped the gold chain from his neck, took the gold lace from his cap, drew a ring from his finger, and took from his pocket his book of prayer, which was clasped with silver. Not till he had yielded all he possessed, and seen his horse led away, did Kant intercede for his life. "Have you given us all?" cried the robber chief, threateningly. "Have you no more money?" In his terror, the trembling doctor answered, that he had given them every coin in his possession; and on receiving this assurance, he was allowed to proceed on his journey.

Quickly he hastened onward, rejoicing at his escape, when suddenly his hand felt something hard in the hem of his robe. It was his gold, which, having been stitched within the lining of his dress, had thus escaped discovery. The good man, in his alarm, had forgotten this secret store. His heart again beat with joy, for the money would bear him home to his friends and kindred, and he saw rest and shelter in prospect, instead of a long and painful wandering, with the necessity of begging his way. But his conscience was a peculiarly tender one, and he stopped to listen to its voice. It cried in disturbing tones, "Tell not a lie! Tell not a lie!" These words burned in his heart. Joy, kindred, home, all were forgotten. Some writers on moral philosophy have held that promises made under such circumstances are not binding, and few men certainly would have been troubled with scruples on the occasion. But Kant did not stop to reason. He hastily retraced his steps, and entering into the midst of the robbers, who were still in the same place, said meekly, "I have told what is not true, but it was not intentionally; fear and anxiety confused me; therefore pardon me." With these words he held forth the glittering gold, but, to his surprise, not one of the robbers would take it. A strange feeling was at work in their hearts. All were deeply moved. Then, as if seized by a sudden impulse, one went and brought him back his purse, another restored his book of prayer, while still another led his horse toward him, and helped him to remount it. Then they un.tedly entreated his blessing; and solemnly giving it, the good old man continued his way, lifting up his heart in gratitude to God, who brought him in safety to the end of his journey.

Ivory Inexhaustible.

New Siberia and the Isle of Lakon are, for the most part, only an agglomeration of sand, ice, and elephants' teeth. At every tempest the sea casts ashore fresh heaps of mammoths' tusks, and the inhabitants are able to drive a profitable trade in the fossil ivory thrown up by the waves. During the Summer innumerable fishermen's barks direct their course to this isle of bones; and in winter immense caravans take the same route, all the convoys drawn by dogs, returning charged with the tusks of the mammoth, each weighing from 150 to 200 pounds. The fossil ivory thus obtained from the frozen North is imported into China and Europe, where it is employed for the same purpose as ordinary ivory, which is furnished, as we know, by the elephant and hippopotamus of Africa and Asia. The isle of bones has served as a quarry of this valuable material for export to China for 500 years. And it has been exported to Europe for upward of one hundred years. But the supply from these strange mines remains undiminished. What a number of accumulated generations does not this profusion of bones and tusks imply?

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 300 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

[THE following is our third speech in the Convention of the Deists in defence of the Bible.—ED. HER. OF LIFE.]

The great theme before this Convention is the trial of the Bible. It is said that we come here and repeat over and over again things we have said before—that we manifestly come here with nothing to say. I ask if in this respect we have differed essentially from our friends on the opposite side of the question? We labored at the outset of this Convention to see if there was a law by which the Bible could be tried, and after laboring for nearly two days we consented, for the sake of having the argument go on, that the law adduced should be the law by which the Bible should be tried, and that law was stated to be natural religion, or the God of nature. By the religion of nature, or the religion of the God of nature, the Bible and the God of the Bible are to be tried. Then I endeavored to show the congregation, last evening, that in this trial the God of the Bible suffered nothing in comparison with the God of nature; and if that was the rule by which the God of the Bible was to be tried, either the God of the Bible must go clear, or the God of nature was in the same condemnation. My friend Mr. Wright has felt, I have no doubt, the force of that remark, therefore he has labored very hard to acquit the God of nature, and to bring out fresh charges against the God of the Bible. The Bible, he says, represents God as ruling the world by arbitrary laws and penalties. He affirms that the God of nature does not rule the world by arbitrary laws and penalties. Am I right in saying that you affirm it?

MR. WRIGHT—Yes, I do affirm it.

Mr. STORRS—Sir, what law by which the God of nature rules the world does he ever change? What penalty that the God of nature has fixed to his laws does he ever alter? If that is not arbitrary law—arbitrary penalty—I ask to know what is? One of the very charges which they bring against the God of the Bible is, that he does sometimes change his laws; therefore the law, speaking in the most absolute sense, is not arbitrary, but it is subject to be changed by the Author of that law, while the God of nature is unchanged and unchangeable in his laws and in his penalties.

Mr. WRIGHT—I desire to say that I used the terms affixed laws and fixed penalties, and arbitrary laws and arbitrary penalties, as laws and penalties that are opposed to each other.

Mr. STORRS—Fixed fast in fate? Then what are you but the mere machinery of the God of nature? But "the God of the Bible is a very cruel God." The God of the Bible is represented as "commanding parents to stone the child to death. Abraham is commanded to butcher his son;" and, says my friend Wright, "I have been asked if I would do such a deed if God commanded it? No, I would not; I would cut the throat of such a God." Well, I was a little surprised at that remark of my good friend Wright, because, formerly, when a follower of Jesus, he was a peace man—a non-resistant. (Applause.) Formerly, if a man should take his child and dash out its brains before his eyes, he would not strike him to keep him from doing it; but he has changed since he has become a worshipper of the God of nature: he is now a war man to the knife.

Mr. WRIGHT—I wish my friends to keep in mind, distinctly and emphatically, that by that form of speech I desired to show that I do not believe in the existence of any such being as a God who ever did command men to take the life of any human being. I do not believe that in cutting the throat of such a God I would be cutting the throat of anything more than a mere metaphorical God.

Mr STORRS—I deny that the God of the Bible ever commanded Abraham to butcher his son. He told him, indeed, to go and offer him up as a burnt offering; but when Abraham took hold of the knife, God commanded him to stop. He had gone beyond what he told him to do. But my friend Wright will have to butcher his God, and cut his throat as sure as life; because the God of nature has given the command to delicate mothers, and compelled them to butcher their own children and eat them too. Is it or is it not a fact that in sieges of cities, where they have been driven to desperation for the lack of food, mothers have killed their own children, and eaten them to preserve their own life? What was it that commanded them to this? The God of nature! (Applause.) The God of nature, when he saw that they were like to starve to death, commanded them to "butcher" their children, and they actually did butcher them. Has the God of the Bible done anything worse than that? No, sir. The God of nature has shown himself to be altogether as guilty as the God of the Bible; and if my friend Wright is true to his declaration he will have to take his knife and cut the throat of his God of nature. "The God of nature," he says, "never did send earthquakes to kill men—earthquakes are natural omens." They are then the natural actions, I suppose, of the God of nature, are they? If it is not understood in this way, I confess myself incapable of telling how it is understood.

Mr. WRIGHT—My remark is that earthquakes are the effects of natural causes.

Mr. STORRS—Who constituted these natural causes? (Applause.) The God of nature, I suppose. (Applause.) Does his God escape? "The God of nature, in these natural causes, did not kill these inhabitants in those cities; oh no—they only put themselves right across where his car came!" But, sir, the God of nature drove his car right through their cities, and never gave them the least notice that he was coming. Surely that was almost as bad as going into the draw at Norwalk. (Laughter.) [NOTE—A short time before this speech a terrible railroad disaster occurred at Norwalk by a train of cars running into an open drawbridge, by which fifty lives were lost.] This God of nature having established in his works natural causes which produce earthquakes that will swallow up cities, if they happen to be planted in a certain place, if he was a good God one would seem to think that he would have sent some notice to the children of men, and tell them not to build the city, for his car—an earthquake—was going to plough through there. But, sir, he leaves them in total ignorance, and allows them to plant their cities and go on to great happiness and prosperity, and then, without a solitary warning, the God of nature drives his plough of destruction through their streets.

But our friend Wright is very accommodating to the God of nature. If he were half as accommodating to the God of the Bible he would not find so much difficulty. I should like to know what can be found in that manifestation of the God of nature that goes to prove his goodness. Can the God of nature speak to men really in any way possible? If he can, why did he not give them some notice that he was going to destroy such a section of country, and that therefore they must move away from it or else he would destroy their lives? How good he must be to destroy all their labors and destroy their families! "But the man would not have been hurt when the lightning fell from heaven, if he had not been in the way of it." Indeed he would not! But did the God of nature tell him when he was walking along that he was going to get in the way below? Did he not suffer him to go on, and dash him to death in a moment?

Now, suppose we should make such a defence of the God of the Bible. The God of the Bible, when he divided the earth among the children of men, divided a certain portion to the chilren of Israel. He determined to establish that people in that land; but here is another class of men that came along, and plant themselves down in the land of Canaan, to possess the land that God had designed for a particular people. Instead of keeping their own inheritance they plant themselves there in that land. The time comes when the God of the Bible is determined to put his people in possession of the land which he reserved for them at the creation.

Now, sir, what does he do? Why, it is true he does not send an earthquake through the land and take them all by surprise. Did he give them no notice of what he is going to do? At first he waited until their corruption was such, in wickedness, that they were no longer to be endured. He had previously informed Abraham (see Gen. xv., 16) that the reason why he would not at an earlier period cut off the intruders in Canaan was, that "their iniquity was not yet full." But when it was full, and God's purpose to put Abraham's seed in possession of the long-promised land was now to be accomplished, he does not take them by surprise: he gives them forty years' notice that he is going to dispossess them. And during that forty years he performs certain miracles or actions which were designed to convey to the inhabitants of the land that fact, that the God of the Bible was determined to bring a people in there to whom that land belonged. He gave them timely notice of it, and they who were believing saved their lives, as Rahab and her family. But all did not believe. Suppose, then, that he commissioned his people to destroy that people out of the land, has he done anything worse than the God of nature, who destroyed the cities we spoke of. The question is not whether we can defend the God of the Bible, but whether he can be defended in view of the law by which he is to be tried. We might make the same remark in regard to pestilence.

Our friend Wright told us that this, too, was a natural affair; but suppose it is a natural affair—suppose it is in the course of nature, I ask again, who controls that course of nature? Is it the God of nature? and if so, I ask if the God of nature is not chargeable with this terrible crime of sweeping millions of the human race away by the most desolating pestilence?

Just here, at this point, I beg leave to be permitted to read a little from some eminent men on the other side of the question. The names of Hume and Bolingbroke are well known by my friends on the opposite side of the question. Here let me say that I do not despise any man for being a Deist. I do not use the term Deist ever reproachfully. It is simply one who rejects what we denominate revelation. He believes in God, and revelations of the God of nature. I cannot wonder that there are so many Deists in the world, when they suppose that the God of the Bible will do certain things which are attributed to him. I wonder that the whole world are not Deists under the theology in which we have been trained. (Hear, hear.) But if we have the time, we will show that these most objectionable doctrines, which have led so many into the rejection of revelation, have no foundation in the Bible. [The speaker read from Mr. Hume's "Essay on Providence and the Future State," as found in Dr. M'Colloh's Analytical Investigations concerning the Credibility of the Scriptures," vol. i., p. 97.]

Allowing the gods to be the authors of the existence or order of the universe, it follows that they possess that precise degree of power, intelligence, and benevolence which appears in their workmanship; but nothing further can be proved, except we call in the assistance of exaggeration and flattery to supply the defects of argument and reasoning. So far as the traces of any attributes at present appear, so far we conclude that the attributes exist. The supposition of further attributes is mere hypothesis; much more the supposition that, in distant regions of space, or periods of time, there has been or will be, a more magnificent display of those attributes, and a scheme of administration more suitable to such imaginary virtues.

Last night we were told to remember that the Bible says yea, and the Bible says nay. Now Mr. Hume, who is a Deist, says yea, and then the Deist here says nay; then their theology may be called in question as well as ours. [MR. WRIGHT—To be sure.] And who shall decide? That is the question exactly. (Hear, hear.)

Again Mr. Hume says: "The great source of our mistake in this subject, and of the unbounded license of conjecture which we indulge, is, that we tacitly consider ourselves as in the place of the Supreme Being, and conclude that he will, on every occasion, observe the same conduct which we ourselves, in his situation would have embraced as reasonable and eligible. But beside that, the ordinary course of nature may convince us that almost everything is regulated by principles and maxims very different from ours; beside this I say, it must evidently appear contrary to all rules of analogy, to reason from intentions and projects of man to those of a being so different, and so much superior. In human nature there is a certain experienced coherence of designs and inclinations, so that, when from any fact we have discovered one intention of any man, it may often be reasonable from experience to infer another, and draw a long chain of conclusions concerning his past or future conduct. But this method of reasoning can never have place with regard to a being so remote and incomprehensible (as God), who bears much less analogy to any other being in the universe than the sun to a waxen taper, and who discovers himself only by some faint traces or outlines, beyond which we have no authority to ascribe to him any attribute or perfection."

Lord Bolingbroke, in his Works, vol. iv., pp. 87, 88, says: "We are made able to arrive, by a proper exercise of our mental faculties, from a knowledge of God's works to a knowledge of his existence, and of that infinite power and wisdom (intelligence) which are demonstrated to us in them. Our knowledge concerning God goes no further." Lord B. continues: "We are in absolute ignorance of the real essence and inward constitution of every sensible object. How much less reason is there to expect any knowledge of the manner of the being, nature, and essence of the invisible God, or of his physical and moral attributes, beyond what his works, the effects of his nature and attributes, communicate to us? This degree, this sufficient degree of knowledge concerning God, is a fixed point, on one side of which lies Atheism, and metaphysical and theological blasphemy too often on the other."

Now I ask the congregation who have heard this morning, whether one Deist does not say yea, and the other nay—whether the God of nature is not as much at variance with himself as the God of the Bible?

There is one other point that I shall notice in the remarks of my friend Wright this morning, particularly. He tells us that Jesus was good—a good man. Thank him for that. He says that Jesus founded a sect. Any harm in that, friend Wright? [Mr. WRIGHT—Yes.] Very well, how did he found it? In any other way than you are founding a sect now? [Mr. WRIGHT—Yes.] No. Well, but what of that? Was the sect good at the outset? Yes; my friend Wright acknowledged that the persons concerned in it, at the outset, were good men. [Mr. WRIGHT—Yes.] I thank him. The men that were first concerned in founding this sect were good men, true men, faithful men, Christ-like men; and they demonstrated their integrity to the truth, by contending for the truth even unto death, at the hazard of their lives. What then? Since that period this sect have become corrupt, and done certain things injurious to society. I am rather glad my friend Wright said that "those who assume to be this sect have had an injurious influence upon the world." Don't you say so, Br. Wright?

Mr. WRIGHT—Mr. Chairman, if it is proper to answer, I may answer; but yes or no would not express what I should want to say. I meant this, that those who profess to be guided by the spirit of Jesus, but have no more affinity to that spirit than Satan has, have perpetrated the foulest crimes. I do not believe that a man under the guidance of the spirit that Jesus had would ever commit those horrible sins.

Mr. STORRS—He says these men do not belong to Jesus. What then, have they to do in pouring contumely upon this sect, or the system Jesus introduced? Why bring them to this stand, when he says himself they have no affinity to Jesus? He has given us the argument. He has told us that Jesus was good—that the men to whom he committed this work were good, true men. He has now told us that those who assume to be of that class act just as contrary to Jesus and his first ministers, as Satan does to God. I will use the expression for him, although I do not know that he used it.

I will not stop to investigate the fact whether Jesus did found a sect or not: but if he did found one, I ask upon what principles he founded it? My friend Wright will not deny but that the principles were right. He says that he was a man. Very well; suppose he was nothing but a man, then could he foresee that such glorious principles as he laid down would be corrupted and perverted, and entirely departed from, on the supposition that he founded a sect?

Now, sir, I ask again, what were the principles upon which he founded that sect! "Ye know," said Jesus, to those very men who were to preach his truth, "Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them. But so it shall not be among you; but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your servant," or minister; that is, one to minister to them—to do them that service which they might need for their welfare or happiness; but he charged them most solemnly that they should not exercise lordships over one another, and the apostle Paul to the Gentiles comes forward and in writing to the church at Corinth, says: "Not for that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy."

Here, sir are the principles of the founder—if you will have it so—of this sect; and I ask, sir, if it is not clear and plain that the founder of this sect, if it be a sect, did clearly denounce and condemn the course which those who "assume" to be of this sect have pursued for centuries past? Why, then, sir, are we cited, I ask again, to the wickedness of those professing to be of this sect, "who say they are Jews (Christians), but are not—but do lie?" Why are we cited to them as any reproach upon Christianity? "If Jesus was a good man," say you "he ought to have known just such rascality would have come up?" Indeed! but then you say that he was a man. I have answered my friend only on his own ground.

HEBREWS X., 29.

BY HON. O. S. HALSTED.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD OF LIFE: I observe that in your "Response to Dr. Field," in your issue of Feb. 5th, and in answer to his quotation of the E. V. of Heb. x., 29, "of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy" etc., you give the Syriac reading, "How much more, think ye, will he receive capital punishment who hath" etc. The Syriac gives the true sense, and with your remarks on that reading is a sufficient answer to the E. V., verse. But a true rendering of the Greek quite as effectually shows that the E. V. verse is wrong. I give the Gr. of verses 28, and 29, v. 28. Any one having put away (a) law of Moses, without compassions upon, or, by, two or three witnesses shall die: [that is, as a finality. For the language, two or three witnesses, see Deut. xvii., 6, Matt., xviii., 16, John viii., 17; 2 Cor. xiii., 1.] v. 29, Poso cheironos timorias—By how much of an inferior punishment, think ye, shall be deemed meriting ho—who—[for, he or she who] the Son of God hath trodden down (metaphor, says Donegan, spurned). Posos is, How much; and Poso is the dative of it; the dative is used also for the ablative, the Gr. not having, or using, the ablative. We thus have for Poso, By how much, cheironos timorias are in the genitive singular. Cheironos is the genitive singular of cheiron, an adjective, defined by Donnegan, worse, inferior, weaker, less powerful. We thus have By how much of an inferior, a weaker punishment, think ye, etc.? [That is, By how much will his punishment be inferior, or, weaker?] Taking the two verses together, the sense of v. 29 plainly is, Do you think that he who who hath spurned the Son of God will not receive the same punishment as he who put away a law of Moses? Do you think he will receive a punishment inferior to, weaker than, the same death? And our word worse is frequently used in the sense of weaker, inferior. We say (for example) of one getting weaker in sickness, he is getting worse. The Lat. in v. 29 uses the comparative of its adjective deter, defined by Ainsworth, "ill, naught, bad, in any kind, of things, or persons; weak, feeble." And if the Latin had left out its word magis—more, and had put the comparative of deter which is deterior, in the genitive singular and its word for punishment in the genitive singular as the Gr. does, the Lat. would correspond with the Gr., thus, How much of a weaker, feebler, punishment etc.; that is, than the death mentioned in v. 28. We use the verb deteriorate, from the Latin, in a sense very suitable to this verse: we say, deteriorated, in the sense of made inferior, weakened. The sense of the verse is, How much will his punishment be deteriorated from that mentioned in v. 28? That is (the interrogative form being often used for affirmation) his punishment will not be at all deteriorated. But this would not suit orthodoxy. Hence the Lat. inserts magis, and gives deteriora supplicia, the accusative plural, instead of the genitive singular. The Rheims is, How much more [inserting the word more for the inserted Lat. magis] do you think he deserveth worse punishments, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, etc. The Ital. is, Of how much peggior punishment? Graglia defines peggior worse; and peggiorato, grown worse. Hence peggior answers to the Gr. and Lat., weaker, feebler. The E. V. is, Of how much sorer punishment, etc.? We do not know whence the E. V. got its word sorer. It seems to have been thought that the word worse was too ambiguous, it being used in different senses; and that therefore an improvement must be made upon the Romish version; that orthodoxy should not be left to stand upon the Lat. deter, nor the Ital. peggior, nor the Rheims worse; that sorer was a surer word. Now let us see how sorer fits. In v. 28 the punishment is death without compassions. In the Bible sense of death there can be no sorer punishment. But orthodoxy says, death to the wicked, is eternal life in torment. Will it tell us what its sorer punishment would be? Would it have God employing eternally an additional number of its devils upon him?

These two verses teach, as is abundantly taught throughout the Scriptures, that death is punishment, is the wages—penalty—punishment—of sin.

THE SPRINGFIELD DISCUSSION.

1. IT commenced on Wednesday evening, January 29th, and lasted six week-day evenings, ending the 4th inst., and was presided over by Dr. N. E. Ames, a prominent member of the Congregational church. The writer made eighteen speeches, occupying his full time. Mr. Chattaway, waving his right to close the debate, made but seventeen, and several of those fell considerably short of the allotted twenty minutes. Utter discomfiture in argument, and want of relevant matter with which to prosecute his task, explain Mr. C.'s failure to occupy his time and also his refusal to have the debate continued according to our explicit understanding. He sought to close it on the third evening, but was persuaded by the writer to go ahead. But no entreaty would have availed with him on the sixth night; the fire was too hot for him and he beat a square retreat. It is believed in Springfield that it will be many days before Mr. Chattaway will care to engage again in public theological discussion. He has found that it means work; that something is needed beside the mere incoherent stringing together of texts of Scripture; that the citation of irrelevant passages does not strengthen an argument. The discussion may also have taught him many other things. One can hardly see how he could come out of it without at least a suspicion that his doctrine of natural immortality has no Bible foundation for its support. In this connection I will state that Mr. Chattaway is an Englishman, has lived in this country twenty years, and is, I should judge, above fifty years of age. He has belonged to the Episcopal and the Methodist church, and from the latter he has recently withdrawn.

2. From first to last we were favored with large audiences (averaging about six hundred persons), and on several evenings some who came were unable to get into the Cnapel and had to go away. The resident Universalist pastor, Rev. Mr. Nye, was present a number of evenings: Rev. Dr. Ide (Baptist) and Rev. Mark Trafton (till recently a Methodist—now pastor of the Memorial church) occupied seats on the platform on the fifth night; and on the last evening the Episcopal rector of the city, Rev. Mr. McKnight, occupied a seat in the gallery.

3. The first night was occupied with arguments from reason; the next four with arguments from the Bible; the question during these evenings having relation to the natural immortality of man, Mr. Chattaway being on the affirmative. The last evening was devoted to the question of the literal resurrection of the dead. The writer had the affirmative. Mr. C. in his second reply announced his purpose to appear no more in the debate after that evening, and afterward declined to make the closing speech. By unanimous request of the audience, I gave notice that I would continue the subject in a discourse the following evening. Mr. Chattaway informed me that he would come to hear me, and he did so—though in my sermon I did not mention him nor (that I remember) mention the debate. Mr. Nye also came and listened to the former part of the discourse. The congregation was large, though the night was stormy.

4. From circumstances (relating to incorrect rumors) that came to my knowledge, I judged it my duty, on the last evening, to state to the audience that I would be willing to continue this investigation in public with any minister or ministers of the city, only asking that I might be permitted to occupy one-half the time.

5. The discussion has created a new and widespread interest in our views among the people of Springfield, and the precious truth has manifestly received a decided onward impulse in that city. Facts illustrative of this remark might be given, but I have not time to write them. Our brethren there feel much encouraged.

6. One interesting fact I will give. The discussion converted our Moderator, Dr. Ames. When it commenced he believed in natural immortality—before it closed he believed in immortality through Christ. When I preached in S., on the 12th of January, Dr. Ames stated in our prayer-meeting, that his godly mother was "in heaven"—now, with Paul, he believes she sleeps in Jesus awaiting the resurrection at the last day. The new-found light is fire in the good Doctor's bones, and he will not fail to let his light shine. It is my prayer that, in humble dependence upon God, we may all forget the things that are behind, and reach forth unto those that are before. R. W.

MISDIRECTED EFFORTS.

A GREAT deal of interest is manifested now-a-days in the work of converting the heathen to Christianity, and for that purpose a large amount of treasure is annually expended in fitting out missionaries to various unenlightened peoples, and in maintaining them there. The intentions of those so deeply interested in this project may be, doubtless are, of the purest character, but, saying nothing of the fact that the movement has its foundation in the unwarranted assumption that the whole world is to be converted to Christianity previous to the coming of Christ, we very much question the propriety of spending treasure and effort upon an attempt to improve the condition of beings thousands of miles away, to the neglect of myriads in our very midst, whose situation, both morally and physically, is very much worse. In all foreign missionary efforts, the expenditure is so greatly disproportioned to the limited success achieved, as to suggest the idea of unjustifiable outlay. What! says one, put a value, in paltry dollars, upon the salvation of your fellow men? No, not just that. But it should be remembered that in the city of New York, for instance, more than half a million people never have the gospel preached to them (most others have it miserably corrupted), there being neither places where they can hear it, nor men who are willing to preach it, and among whom exist vice, misery, degradation and shame, to an extent and in such aggravated forms, as they do in no known heathen land. This being so, we are hardly justified in converting one foreign sinner at a cost which will convert at least two or three domestic ones, whose condition is more wretched. Nor is New York an exception. There are many localities where the gospel is little, if any, more generally preached. There are plenty of church edifices of magnificent designs, with lofty steeples, elaborate decorations, and roomy, luxuriantly-furnished pews, for which fabulous prices are paid, where people go to be entertained for an hour or two, on Sunday, by professional gentlemen, who well understand what is expected of them, and comprehend that anything short of it would soon work a serious embarrassment of their finances. People in the lower walks of life look upon these structures but never enter them, well knowing they are not wanted where the rich and fashionable resort. There are men and women enough ready to go to some distant part of the world and try their hand at the introduction of Christianity among heathen, because there is a sort of romance connected with it, but in the suffering field of home they see nothing to do. A reverend gentleman remarked to his audience, a few evenings since, that "when religion becomes a religion of a class, it is no longer of God, who is no respecter of persons. In the city of New York but a small minority of the eight hundred thousand inhabitants have the gospel preached to them. Suppose Paul had sent word to the Corinthians that he would go and preach for them if they would agree to pay him $2,000 a year salary. How long would it have taken him to establish a Christian church there? The church must be as free and universal as the common schools, and they also must be something more than places to preach in. The poor classes need as good preaching as the rich. Walking up Fifth avenue, one would suppose that we were the most religious of men; but how is it at the Five Points? We are just waking up to the fact that we must 'go to the front.'"

If the same amount of treasure, and the same number of laborers sent abroad, were judiciously employed in our own land, we are firm in the conviction that very much more suffering would be alleviated, and many more sinners be turned to Christ. L. C. T.

"THE LION BEARDED."

SOME time since STEWART CARLISLE, Wilmington, Delaware, sent the notorious R. W. Landis, formerly of Paterson, N. J., now in Wilmington—a challenge to discuss the immortality question, Landis having been preaching against our views, and repeating some of his old misstatements, which he promulgated in his book, some years since, published by the "Methodist Book Concern" in this city. It seems, for some cause, L. keeps silence, and returns no answer to Carlisle, so the latter comes out in the Wilmington Daily Commercial, Feb. 13th, with the following

CARD FROM MR. CARLISLE TO DR. LANDIS.

R. W. Landis, D. D.—Dear Sir: After patiently waiting for an answer to my former article addressed to you in regard to a public debate on the Immortality of the Soul, with its kindred subjects, without receiving a reply from you, I have thought it would not be out of place to inquire why a debate carried on in the spirit of Christian kindness for the single purpose of eliciting truth and an earnest desire to let the public have an opportunity to judge between the opposing theories, might be productive of good. We believe so, and are perfectly willing that our views shall be subjected to the severest Scripture criticism, and if not found in harmony with the sacred volume of inspiration, we stand ready and willing to renounce them at once and forever, and the same honesty of purpose that we claim for ourselves, we are willing to accord to you. If, then, both parties are sincere, and both think they have the correct view of truth, what harm can come from discussing the subject publicly? None that you can possibly see. It is true we do not rank among what the world call the mighty, the noble, the wise, nor even the D. D.'s: our rank is rather among those whom the apostle Paul calls "men of low estate." We are not men "seeking after notoriety," but after truth, and where truth leads it is our purpose to follow, regardless of the favor or the frowns of those who oppose truth.

Paul the apostle tells us not to mind high things, but condescend to men of low estate. Now, if the apostle condescended to men of "low estate," and you are following after and teaching the same truths, and we are willing to receive truth as he taught it, then what harm can possibly come from a frank, open, manly discussion as to which party teaches truth as he taught it; certainly none at all. True, error may be exposed, but our Father in heaven will see that his truth shall receive no injury from a candid investigation. And now, Dr., in view of the high position you have attained as a scholar and an author, having written a work of considerable size and delivered a course of lectures on the doctrine in dispute, perhaps there are none better qualified than yourself to meet in debate, and, by the superior advantages you possess, expose in all its hideous deformity what you suppose a dangerors error.

Do not content yourself with standing behind masked batteries and firing random shots. Come out! Enter the arena and strip for the fight, and by your massive arguments throttle the hideous monster and hold him up till friend and foe declare him dead, dead, dead, beyond the hope of a resurrection. Then the whole Christian world will "thank you for your timely work and your praise will be on all the churches."

And now if you can persuade yourself or be prevailed upon by friends to accept an invitation to a discussion, be kind enough to let me know. Very respectfully yours,

STEWART CARLISLE.

Wilmington, Feb. 8, 1868.

NOTE BY ED. OF HER. OF LIFE.—Our friend Carlisle has got the "lion by the beard," but there is not, probably, power enough in Wilmington to draw him from "behind masked batteries:" he does not care to be too much exposed to the "Sword of the Spirit;" he is more familiar with other weapons. Let C. publish L.'s statement from the Preface of his Book, about us, in Paterson, and the refutation of that slander, and see if the shot does not make the lion quiet. Try it, C.

AN alphabetical list of ninety-two sects in England has been published. Among them are some curious names, but they are those chosen by the sects themselves. The following are among the most peculiar: Apostolico, Baptized Believers, Christian Israelites, Christian Teetotallers, Electics, Hallelujah Band, Peculiar People, Providence, Ranters, Wesleyan Reform Glory Band.

HOW TO BE CHEERFUL.—A cheerful life must be a busy one. And a busy life cannot well be otherwise than cheerful. Frogs do not croak in running water. And active minds are seldom troubled with gloomy forebodings. They come up only from the stagnant depths of a spirit unstirred by generous impulses or the blessed necessities of honest toil.

THERE are flowers that are repulsive at first sight, but when closely examined unfold a world of beauty—and so with men. We should never judge a man from first sight, for he may have good qualities which will develop themselves on acquaintance.

LEARNING.—Learning is wealth to the poor, an honor to the rich, an aid to the young, and a support and comfort to the aged.

NEW YORK, JANUARY 19, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"FITS" where? In the N. Y. Ledger. Who fits so naturally into that sheet? The "Rev. Henry Ward Beecher." Who says that? Read the following letter to Bonner, the publisher of that paper, and you will see:

MY DEAR MR. BONNER: You have herewith the last line of Norwood. I began it reluctantly, as one who treads an unexplored path. But as I went on, I took more kindly to my work, and now that it is ended I shall quite miss my weekly task.

My dear old father, after his day of labor had closed, used to fancy that in some way he was so connected with me that he was still at work; and on one occasion, after a Sabbath morning service, some one in a congratulatory way, said to the venerable and meek old patriarch:

"Well, Doctor, how did you like your son's sermon?"

"It was good—good as I could do myself." And then, with an emphatic pointing of his fore-finger, he added, "If it hadn't been for me you'd never have had him!"

If anybody likes Norwood, my dear and venerable Mr. Bonner, you can poke him with your finger and say, "If it hadn't been for me you never would have had it."

You ask me to resume my old place, and write for you regular or occasional articles on any of the ten thousand topics that are interesting. I shall be glad to do so. I have got so used to the Ledger that I seem to fit into its columns more naturally than anywhere else.

I am, truly yours,

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

REMARK BY ED. OF HER. OF LIFE.—How "natural" the process of temptation. $25,000 for writing "Norwood" made the author "fit" into the Ledger "more naturally than anywhere else." When we read the foregoing letter, we could not help thinking of the following story:

A PROVIDENCE boy, five years of age, having stolen a can of milk, his mother took him to task with moral suasion, and wound up her discourse by exclaiming, "What in the world was you going to do with the milk, anyhow?" "I was going to steal a little dog to drink it," was the crushing reply.

How many "little dogs" in the churches will now run after "the can of milk"—the Ledger—who would never thought of such a pool to quench their thirst but for having been stolen "to drink it." How "naturally" it "fits."

THE APOSTOLIC COMMISSION.

TO WM. H. WHITMAN: Dear Brother: Your difficulty in regard to certain transactions of some of the Apostles, we think arises from the common supposition that all they said and did was by direct inspiration. On this subject Dr. McCulloh has thrown much light in his "Credibility of the Scriptures," (new edition, v. I., p. 345 and onward) where he has distinctly shown that the Apostles had no commission to add anything to what Christ had personally taught them, and that their whole work was that of "WITNESSES" to what they had seen or heard from him; and that their inspiration consisted wholly in the gift of the Holy Spirit to "bring all things to" their "REMEMBRANCE whatsoever" Christ had "spoken unto" them. They were not authorized to promulgate any new doctrine or practice other than what their MASTER had personally delivered to them. In other matters they some times followed their prejudices as Jews; and all the Jewish converts adhered to the law of Moses, as is evident by the language of James to Paul, recorded Acts xxi., 20, "Thou seest, brother, how many thousands of Jews there are which believe; and they are all zealous of the law," etc. This Jewish prejudice continued till the destruction of the temple service, when "the sacrifices were made to cease." The language of James to Paul was only a few years previous to the fall of Jerusalem.

If Christ taught his disciples to baptize with water (after his resurrection) he taught them to do it "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." We have no account that they ever used that formula when they baptized; but if they did, then it follows they did not (as is assumed) baptize after Christ's example, or "to represent his death and burial," unless the Father and Holy Ghost died and were buried, also; for the baptism was equally in these names as in the name of the Son. But we wish not to revive the baptism controversy. We have said all we wish to say, in our tract on "THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM," and are willing those who differ from us should practice according to their own view of the subject; only we pray them not to substitute water for the Spirit, without which no man can be raised from the dead, and hence must perish.

ELD. KNAPP IN CALIFORNIA.

NOT long since, we were informed by Eld. Teft, of Stockton, that Eld. Knapp had arrived in that place and was saying some pretty hard things against such as held our views on the Life question. We did not speak very favorably of him, and ventured to suggest that he would hurt himself more than us. We see by a letter by a correspondent in California to the Advance, at Chicago, Illinois, that we were not far out of the way in what we said. From that letter we take the following extract, which shows the man. The writer says:

"ELD. KNAPP—known to all men at least by fame—has been preaching some four weeks in the city of Stockton, with little or no results. Large congregations are drawn together to see and hear the preacher's eccentricities; beyond that there is but little interest. The Baptist paper of this city announced his arrival by speaking of him as one who came to preach a 'whole gospel.' The same paper intimated that Br. Earle had benefitted Pedo-Baptist churches and denominations more than his own, but now the man had come who would not shrink from the whole gospel. Let your readers make their own inferences. Brother Knapp is a little restive at the slow progress of events. He took occasion, a few days ago, to tell the Stocktonians 'that of all the perverse and mean devils he had ever known, the Stockton devil was the meanest and biggest of all.' What stuff!"

Sure enough, "what stuff;" but what other stuff could be expected from such a fountain of self-seeking, and such ignorance of what the gospel is? If he had not a theological hell, and a plenty of obedient "devils" to help him stir up its flames, his "revivals" would soon be known no more. "Stockton devils" could not stoop to this "mean" subserviency to a buffoon who disgraces the name of a Christian ministry.

A YOUNG THEOLOGIAN.

"A LADY out with her little girl and boy, bought him a rubber baloon, which escaped him and flew up in the air. The girl, seeing the tears in his eyes, said: 'Never mind, Neddy, when you die and go to heaven, you'll dit it.'"

Baloons have their attractions in heaven as well as little babies and great ones. Why should they not have? Ministers teach the lesson that as their babies and friends die, their souls go to heaven; and in this way that place becomes attractive. Why should not the little folks learn the lesson, and think if their baloons fly up they have gone to heaven too? Especia'ly when the string breaks and it mounts on high out of their sight? They have some reality about their views; for they see their baloons go up; while the learned theologian does not pretend to see souls go that way, but asks us to take his word for it. Sureiy the "little girl's" logic is far more convincing than the older theologian's assumptions. The young theologian is quite as likely to be right as the more advanced ones: so, little boys and girls send all the nice baloons you can to heaven, and that place will become quite attractive by and by. [See our article on "Heaven," last week.]

"DISTRESS OF NATIONS WITH PERPLEXITY."

WE have seldom seen anything, in so short a compass, that illustrates the prophecy of our Lord above stated, as to one of the signs of his coming again to this earth, and indicating the time near, as the following, which we take from the New York Tribune, of Feb. 10th Let it be read with Luke xxi., 25–28, before you.

A COMPARISON.

"Moralists of a certain class, like the three friends of Job who believed that God never permitted calamities except as a punishment for individual wickedness, are fond of pointing at the misfortunes of America, the derangement of finance, the depression of trade, the quarrels and corruptions of politics, the angry scars of war, the curse of dishonest rulers, and the hunger and demoralization of the South, as proofs that we have incurred the divine vengeance above all other peoples, and are being held up by the Almighty as a warning to the world. Not questioning that we have been pretty wicked, nor presuming to inquire too closely into the purposes of divine Providence, it may not be out of place to reflect that our misfortunes, after all, are no greater than those of our neighbors. The whole continent of Europe trembles with apprehensions of war. Italy is perpetually on the brink of convulsion. France is only held quiet in the grasp of a cruel despotism. Germany is in the throes of a reorganization of which the result is yet doubtful. Russia, in addition to the burdens of generations of maladministration, is tormented by the inevitable troubles which follow a change in the social condition of large masses of a people. Spain is little better than a moral and political bankrupt. In the British Isles there seems almost to be a general reign of misery. Famine and Fenianism together have reduced England to a deplorable condition of wretchedness, and Ireland has been for ages the reproach of her rulers. On our own continent matters are no better. The new dominion on our northern frontier, whatever may be said of its material prosperity, is dissatisfied enough with its own condition, and its people are forsaking it in such numbers to emigrate to the United States, that legislative interposition has been invoked to stop them. Mexico is just emerging, crippled and suffering, from an awful struggle; whether the end is yet who can say? The countries of South America are always at war. The islands of the Caribbean Sea are shaken by earthquakes, swept by hurricanes, drenched in the turbulent waters, and spread with wreck and desolation. Are our misfortunes greater than these, and is not the horizon of our future, at any rate, brighter than that of the other countries of the world?"

If a mere outline is thus dark, what is the filling up to be? Truly the coming of the Son of man draweth nigh; all human governments are evidently ripening for that destruction which they so deservedly merit by their long disregard of the authority of God, and oppression of those in their power: they have fed themselves and crushed the confiding people. May the kingdom of God, and his Anointed, soon come; and it will. The desired DELIVERER will "take the kingdom," and "reign in righteousness, forever and ever." "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

"THE WORLD UPSIDE DOWN."

FROM THOMAS R. CROCKER.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Feb. 13, 1868.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD OF LIFE: Br. Storrs: I wish to give you a brief account of some of the troubles our celebrated D. D.'s are going through under the pressure of the Life theme.

Some time ago I was requested by an acting pastor of a Baptist Church in our city (E. D.), to come and speak for him. Accordingly on the first Sunday of January last I complied with the request. I arrived at the church (house) a few moments before the time of commencing the services. I was met by the pastor, who was, apparently, very glad to see me, and who told me that he was very glad I came, as he had had so much labor of late that (to use his own expression) he was "played out, and did not know what to talk about." (Only think, Br. Editor, a D. D. not knowing what to talk about.) However, at the appointed time, I commenced and selected for my text Gal. iii., 11, "The just shall live by faith," or, as it should read, "The just by faith, shall live again." After making a few general remarks in regard to faith, I undertook to show under what covenant man is to live in order to obtain life through that faith.

And, first, I referred to man's creation, and showed from Gen. ii., 15–17, that the first covenant God made with man was a covenant of life and death. Life if he obeyed: death if he disobeyed.

2d, That man did disobey, and consequently died; and that terminated the covenant with Adam; and referred them to Gen. iii., 19, and v., 5.

3d, Next: God made a covenant with Noah in Gen. ix., 8, which was a temporal one.

4th, Next was a promise of a covenant as recorded in Gen. xii., 1–3, and Gen. xiii., 14–17.

5th, Now comes the covenant, Gen. xv., 18, Reason for making this covenant; Gen. xv., 6. That this was a covenant of faith; and from Gen. xvii., 19–21, showed who this covenant was confined to. That God tested Abram under this covenant of faith in Gen. xxii., and it stood the test. That God renewed that covenant in Isaac and confirmed it in Jacob, Gen. xxviii., 12–16, and Gen. xxxii., 24.

Then I assumed that in changing the name of Jacob to that of Israel was the starting point of the Israelites as a separate nation or people.

Next, I introduced the covenant of works to this particular people (the Israelites) known as the Law, Ex. xx., and contended that the law given was confined exclusively to that nation.

I then showed from Job xiii., 15, and xix., 23–28, that he (Job) was interested in the covenant of faith. Also, David in that beautiful Psalm, xxiii. Then again, Isaiah vii., 14; also Isa. xi., xxxv., and xl.

Then, for want of time, I passed over all the other worthies and came to the closing scenes of the law, or covenant of works, Malachi iii., and contended that all these (the Jews) were still under the Law.

Now comes the end. Luke i., 67–76. Angels sound the glad tidings, Luke ii., 9–15. What God promised him, Luke i., 32, 33. Then I took up the mission of Christ. 1. His birth. 2. Life. 3. Work. 4. Death, and 5. His resurrection.

I contended that Christ never preached to the Gentiles. Matt. x., 1–8; also that his mission was to his own people first. See Acts iii., 25, 26, also Acts v. 29–31.

Then I contended that sin abounded in this (Israelitish) nation because they were under the covenant of law and works, but grace did much more abound, because it went over the walls of the Jewish law and extended to the Gentile nations, and included them (the Gentiles) in the covenant of faith. I showed how grace abounded. Acts xiii., 46, and the result: Acts xiii. 48, and xiv., 27. In regard to keeping the law, I referred them to Acts xv., 1–30, and read them without comment.

In regard to the Jews being eventually saved, I referred them to, and read to them, Luke ii., 34, and Rom. iv. and xi. Then I made a few general remarks on the hope of the heirs of faith; the prospect on which this hope was based; their final release from the bondage of death by a resurrection from the dead, and the taking possession of the kingdom prepared for them: where that kingdom (or, heaven) was located: the time when they would take possession of the kingdom; and closed with an appeal to Christians to love God and serve him; to live by faith on his Son, and wait patiently until our change comes, etc.

At the close of the address, the presiding D. D. (or would-be D. D.) made the closing prayer. He thanked God for the truths spoken: prayed that the speaker might be blessed abundantly, and that the words spoken might be sanctified to the church for their good, and redound to the glory of God.

After the close of the meeting I walked with him to his house. More than once he expressed his thanks that I had come, and invited me to come again. Many of the members of the church gathered around me, at the close of the service, and wanted to hear more about the way of life; it was new to them; but they said, it sounded like the gospel.

Now, what I want to show you is this: the Christian spirit manifested by that Baptist Br., that was so glad that I came to speak for him. Since that time, I understand, he has devoted two Sabbaths, of three sermons each, making six sermons altogether, in ridiculing the Bible (for all I did, was to read it to them), and proving to that church that the doctrine I read from the Bible was false; that it was something dreadful; that I was teaching error: and when he had exhausted all his power of language against me (for reading the Bible to his congregation) he finally closed up by saying that, I "ought to be kicked out of the pulpit!" Alas, alas, my Brother! Let us earnestly pray and labor that the time may soon come when error and superstition shall be banished from the land and world; when the glorious gospel of the Son of God may have free course, run and be glorified.

But the seed has been sown. Some of the members of that church have been to see me, and invited me to come there again; and I am going on Sunday, February 16th, and then and there challenge the said pastor to name one error that I advanced, and from God's holy word prove that I am wrong; or else draw back; or suffer under the verdict. Of the result I will let you know. Yours in hope of life through Christ.

SPRINGFIELD—THE DEBATE.

BR. LADD's note in last week's issue will have led our readers to expect some outline of the discussion between Mr. Chattaway and myself. At my request Br. H. J. Sweetland took notes of the debate; my wish to have him do so arising from my hope that the affirmative disputant would acquit himself in a manner that would make a somewhat full account of his work, together with the replies to his speeches, interesting to our friends of the HERALD OF LIFE. But, as a matter of fact, Mr. Chattaway proved himself preeminently *dis*qualified for the task he had undertaken, and it would be a positive waste of space in our columns to give anything like a full report of the manner in which he filled up his time. The greater part of his proof texts were just no proofs at all; in other words, they were totally irrelevant. Such of his passages as do bear upon the subject it was easy to show are against natural immortality instead of affording it the least countenance. As an illustration of this remark, it will suffice to mention that the first proof text brought forward by the affirmative was Genesis ii; 7. It was not easy to find out how the text was supposed by Mr. C. to yield support to his assumption. Our question had to do with "man;" the passage in Genesis speaks indeed of "man," but only as a creature formed of the "dust of the ground." At one time Mr. C., in his confusion, affirmed immortality of the human body in its present condition, but this wild conceit was summarily quenched and we heard no more of it. Equally unsatisfactory was my friend's argument from the phrase "breath of life." It was insisted by the negative that man's immortality is no more proved by his having "the breath of life" than is that of the brute. This the affirmative seemed to admit, and John Wesley and Professor Agassiz were adduced as holding to the immortality of beasts. Mr. C., however, when pressed on the point, was not prepared to adopt or deny the view of those eminent men, and was hence to that extent unprepared insist upon the significance he attached to the phrase under consideration.

For several evenings all the implications of Mr. Chattaway's speeches were in the direction of Universalism. Indeed many of his utterances meant universal salvation or else they meant nothing at all; and yet he persistently refused to tell what he believed would become of the wicked. On the fifth evening, however, he veered toward orthodoxy, and quoted the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus. He even went so far as to declare that he was not a Universalist. But even here he could not overcome his reticence or his timidity, for the negative could not prevail upon him to state whether or not he believed that an immortal destiny is brought to view in that parable.

It should be mentioned, as a significant fact, that Mr. Chattaway's orthodoxy came to light (so far as it came to light at all) on the evening when Messrs Ide and Trafton attended the debate.

My friend's utter bewilderment of mind was amusingly illustrated on the last evening, when he remarked to me, in the hearing of the whole audience, that if our positions were reversed, i. e., if he were on my side and I on his, I would do no better in the debate than he was doing! I audibly assented to this, and the instant laugh over the whole house showed that the listeners saw, if Mr. C. did not, that he had unwittingly admitted that he was on the wrong side of the question. But I leave my friend's performances without further remark. The discussion, in spite of his incoherent work, gave multitudes an opportunity to hear for the first time the positive grounds of our faith on the immortality question, and it is certain that much good was done. To the Lord be all the praise.

As my pen is running on Springfield matters, I will mention a fact of interest communicated in a private letter by Br. Ladd. On the 9th inst., Rev. Mr. Nye, Universalist, preached on "Immortality as taught in the Bible." In his sermon he took distinctly the ground that man is not naturally immortal—that there is no immortality out of Christ—that immortality is put on at the resurrection. Does the reader say that, according to this, Mr. Nye has become a convert to our Life views? No, he has not; for 1. he holds that the resurrection life is entered upon at death, and, 2. that the entire race will participate in that life. His strong text of course is, "In Christ shall all be made alive." But that he misunderstands, and the use he and those of his faith make of it should admonish all believers in conditional immortality of the danger of including the impenitent in 1 Cor. xv., 22. R. W.

THE GLORIOUS FUTURE.

"YEA, all kings shall fall down before him, and all nations shall serve him. And blessed be his glorious name forever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory; Amen and amen." Psa. lxxii.

Often have I thought I could imagine how David felt when he penned this psalm, especially the last part: LET THE WHOLE EARTH BE FILLED WITH HIS GLORY! Amen and AMEN. O, what a scene is now before us! God the Father having descended, his glory, in fulfilment of his oath (Num. xiv., 21), in mighty waves now rolls over and inundates this entire earth. Then Christ, having fulfilled his mission, which was to put away sin (Heb. ix., 26), in the presence of this innumerable company of redeemed ones, makes his returns, or presents the work as finished to the Father, which he had sent him to do, that he may be all in all. See 1 Cor. xv., 24–28. And as a reward for the accomplishment of this work, he and his cabinet will reign as subordinate rulers, or princes, under the Father, over the subjects which had been prepared in the days of the Lord "for the AGES of the AGES."

And as Pharaoh was greater in the throne than Joseph, so the Father will be greater than Christ. And as Pharaoh governed his empire through or by Joseph, so God will govern his vast empire through or by Christ and his cabinet. Hence Canaan, the land promished to Abraham and his seed—the Eden where the garden was planted—and among its beautiful groves Adam and Eve once dwelt, is to become the seat of God's government. And the voice of the Elohim again be heard among its vine-clad hills.

O, come, come, take a walk with me around its beautiful city, view its jaspar walls, its pearly gates, its streets of pure gold! O, see the redeemed, as they are standing upon the sunny banks of life's beautiful river, whose waters are clear as crystal, as they roll majestically along among the verdant hills of the Paradise of God. View them as they walk amid Eden's beautiful groves, recline themselves among its vine-clad hills, which will be dressed up by a hand that is all divine; their ears are saluted with the sweet notes which will fall from Eden's feathered songsters borne along on zephyr's stainless wing. The victor's palm they bear, the white robe wear, the conqueror's song sing. Behold them! The joyful multitudes purchased by the redeemer's blood, standing on the celestial hills of their Eden home. The days of their mourning are ended. They have shed their last tears; they have uttered their last groans; they have heaved their last sigh; songs and everlasting joy are on their heads. A dazzling halo of unfading glory surrounds their once suffering bodies. Smiles of angelic sweetness dance on their glowing faces, and unsullied beauty lingers at their steps. O, their sun shall no more go down, nor their moon withdraw its shining. Their saving KING is with them—their mighty God is among them. A crown of righteousness shall ever sparkle on their brows, and harmonious music flows from their gladsome tongues. No devouring curse, no wasting disease, no violence, no swelling floods, no passing storms, no sweeping tornado, no chilling frosts or winds, no blasting mildews, no raging fires, no jarring earthquakes, no forked lightnings or rattling thunders, nor marring hailstones, nor fear, nor grief can enter there. O, see them as they rise higher and higher in glory. And as angels have in past ages visited this earth—those glorified ones may be permitted to visit other parts of the empire of Jehovah. Amen. R. "TRUTH SHALL MAKE YOU FREE."

FROM H. GARDNER.

Middle Bass, Ohio, Feb. 8, 1868.

GEO. STORRS—Dear Sir: Mr. Vaughan, my neighbor, has recently called my attention to some of your publications, and by his courtesy I have read "THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE," and "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST." I have been astonished to find Scripture so explicit in support of a doctrine that I had supposed was the product of reckless infidelity. I considered myself pretty well versed in Scripture, and acquainted with all men's opinions thereon, sufficiently, at least, to be an expounder thereof, but I find my ideas of your position were very erroneous.

I was bred a Methodist, and entered the ministry at the age of twenty. I studied diligently to "show myself a workman," and enjoyed every prospect of success until I met insuperable objections to my belief. These I endeavored to ignore, as ecclesiastically directed, that I might walk by faith. But at best I could no longer have faith in any satisfying sense, and I slowly, reluctantly, left my position. I humbly thought I advanced toward God; my brethren thought I retreated, and I loved my brethren. Years rolled on: perplexities gathered about me, and I entered the Union army, not particularly loath to die, and bearing allegiance to my country, rather than to do aught else in the universe. Well, I came home almost in despair. I had examined many creeds, and found rest in none, save that God is surely wise and good. I doubted the Bible somewhat, at last. Then I read carefully Beecher's "Conflict of Ages," and that nearly finished my interest in theological investigation. Orthodoxy compels him to hold that, because God could not honorably get men miserable at one step in this world, he had done it at two steps; one in pre-existence, and the other here!!

I was on the very verge of sweeping the board, as so many noble men have been compelled to by the hard alternatives of the popular delusion. But I must confess that your views lull to perpetual repose the tremendous "Conflict." Judge Halsted has certainly relieved the original Scriptures from the burden of a hateful God.

DAVID'S HISTORY.

A DIFFICULTY EXPLAINED.

WE have had an opportunity of witnessing, more than once, incidents of a kind that forcibly reminded us of scenes in the Scripture history of David, by which readers ignorant of the country in which they happened, may have been often not a little perplexed. When David was hiding in the Wilderness of Ziph, an opportunity presented itself of slaying King Saul as he lay asleep in the night, unconscious of any danger being near. Too generous to avail himself of the advantages that had come so unexpectedly and so temptingly in his way, David, nevertheless, resolved to show how completely his persecutor had been in his power. Stealing noiselessly into Saul's camp accompanied by a single follower, and passing unobserved through the midst of the drowsy guards, David "took the spear and and the cruse of water from Saul's bolster: and they got them away, and no man saw it, nor knew it, neither awaked: for they were all asleep." 1 Samuel xxvi, 12. Having performed this daring exploit, he and his attendant, Abishai, "went over to the other side, and stood on the top of a hill afar off, a great space being between them. Having got to this safe distance from the relentless enemy, David is represented in the sacred history as proceeding to address Abner, the leader of Saul's host, and to taunt him with his unsoldier-like want of vigilance in leaving his royal master exposed to the hazard of being slain in the very midst of his own camp.

What is apt to appear strange in this narrative, is the fact that these hostile parties should have been near enough to carry on the conversation which the narrative describes, and yet that all the while the one should have been entirely beyond the reach of the other. That all this, however, was both possible and easy, was verified in our presence. As we were riding cautiously along the face of the hill, our attention was suddenly arrested by the voice of a shepherd, who was evidently calling to some one whom we could not see, but whose answer we distinctly heard. The dialogue went on. Another and another sentence was slowly and sonorously uttered by the shepherd near us, and as often the response was distinctly given. At length, guided by the sound, we descried far up the confronting hill, the source of the second voice in the person of another shepherd; and learned from our Arab attendants that they were talking to each other about their flocks. Between these two men was the deep crevasses formed by the valley of the Kedron, walled in by lofty precipices, which no human foot could scale. It would probably have taken a full hour for one, even as fleet and as strong-winded as an Asahel to pass from the standing-place of one speaker to that of the other; and yet they were exchanging words with perfect ease. The mystery of the dramatic scene in the wilderness of Ziph was at an end; and we were reminded at the same time of an important truth, that in dealing with the Sacred Scripture, ignorance often makes difficulties which a larger knowledge and a deeper intelligence would at once remove. As we moved along the hill-face, dialogues of the same kind once and again attracted our notice, showing plainly that these trans-valline colloquies are of common occurrence. The facility of hearing was no doubt increased by the extreme stiffness of the air, and by the voice being at once confined and thrown back by the steep sides of the hill.—Selected.

GLORIOUS TRIUMPH.—One hundred thousand of the inhabitants of the Fiji Islands have been supplied with the Holy Scriptures, and are instructed in the Word of God. There are 17,000 church members, and 1,000 native catechists, and 38 native missionaries, ordained, or on trial preparatory to ordination: 40,000 pupils are regularly instructed in the schools of the mission. When a supply of Bibles, in the language of Fiji, recently arrived at these islands, the native Christians were greatly delighted in being permitted to handle the book. One of them exclaimed, "Now let thy servant, O Lord, depart in peace, since my eyes have seen thy words complete in the language of Fiji."

Letters and Extracts.

FROM DANIEL L. OSBORN.

FINDLEY'S LAKE, N. Y., Feb. 9, 1868.

"And as ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also to them likewise." To all who do as I do, when the good HERALD OF LIFE comes to hand so richly laden with good tidings, look it over to see who has written something for it. We are always glad to hear from the self-sacrificing pilgrims upon the world's highway, wending their way toward the haven of the just. And the thought called up the inquiry, perhaps somebody would be looking to see if I had written for the paper: and this called to my mind the words of Jesus, at the head of this article. Then the idea, I cannot write well enough; and if I write the Editor will throw it under the table. Well, the Editor has had a lot of patience with me in this direction; and I calculate he still will, and if some articles are declined, I know he is a better judge than I what is best to fill the valuable space of the HERALD. So write, one and all. We wish to hear from you. These short letters are good, and the long ones also; so write; do not be discouraged.

Brethren, I am partially bound in, on these high hills, with snow and extreme cold, with my armor on; ready, as much as in me is, to preach the gospel; but have no way to travel except on foot; yet I think of starting out when it gets warmer, if the Lord will. And when Spring arrives, if I live, I calculate to spend my time and money, if I can get it, in parts more remote, where the Lord shall call. Then if any want me to preach the word, write me at this place, and it may save me going to public places and paying out money; and you might esteem it a privilege to entertain a stranger. My mind is in the West, where I travelled some of the time last Summer. I most wish I was there. Probably I shall not be contented till I get back to fight the battles of the Lord with Br. Lewis, some others, or alone. Let me say to the Brethren West, I have not forgotten you or your kindness. "Hold fast, that no man take thy crown." If I visit Iowa, as I think to, probably I will pass through the old battle ground. Your brother in hope of Life at the coming of Christ.

FROM MRS. R. W. PIERCE.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., Feb. 10, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Enclosed please find fifteen dollars on pledge.

I think the good cause is going forward here. There are some that are searching the Word as they never did before. Mr. Love is holding a protracted meeting, and it seems to me that it is up hill work. I go in occasionally to their prayer-meetings, and I am amazed to see how little there is of the Bible in their prayers. Mr. Love wanted each one should give a reason why they thought they were Christians; but I can tell you, there were but a very few that could give a Bible reason for their hope. There was an old revival deacon in to see me the other day. He told me that I had got a little frightened because I thought Christ was coming soon; and that as far as our believing that he was going to lie unconscious in the grave a thousand, or ten thousand years, he did not believe any such thing; that he should go to heaven as soon as he died; he was not going to be cheated out of so many years of happiness. I told him, that David had not ascended yet, and that he must not expect to get there before David did: and as for my being frightened because I believed Christ would come soon, there was no sight that would gladden my heart so much as to see my dear Saviour this moment. O what is there that can lift a Christian above this world like thinking of Christ, his coming and kingdom. Paul says "Comfort one another with these words." What a comfort they are to one who prays, "Let thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." Such is the prayer of your Sister in Christ.

FROM ELDER T. T. JENKS.

FLORIDA, MASS., Feb. 12, 1868.

BR STORRS: The great and glorious doctrine of the Bible, "No future life out of Christ," appears more and more blessed every day of my life. It is so consistent with the teachings of the Bible and the revealed character of God that I most heartily embrace and teach it. And when I meditate on this glorious gospel, full of "good will to man," bearing on its banner the great central, and all-pervading truth, "God is love," I am led to wonder that so few embrace it. Yet when I look over my own history in this matter, my tardiness in rejecting the traditions of men and in embracing the plain truths of the Bible, I do not so much wonder that the great mass are so "slow of heart to believe."

But "God's truth is marching on." Many in this vicinity are searching the Scriptures anew. They are digging deep; and I doubt not will find "hid treasures:" to secure which they will "sell all that they have," or part with their former creeds, for the sake of the truth; the which is a treasure indeed.

But there are many who refuse to examine the Life question for themselves. Still they are ever ready to pronounce anathemas on those who hold to the doctrine of "Life and Death" as taught in the Bible.

We should ever pity such; for "they know not what they do." They may think, possibly, that they are "doing God service;" but sad indeed for them, if they should "be found fighting against God."

I love and respect the people on this mountain. In years past I labored with them in the ministry. They were kind to me. Pastor and people seemed to be united.

After an absence of some four years I returned to this place. But for years I had been studiously searching the Scriptures in regard to man's nature and destiny, and on my return was fully committed to the doctrine I now hold. The result is a cold shoulder from the church, as a body. I have been requested not to sit with them around the 'Lord's table."

"But none of these things move me." I had counted the cost. I made the sacrifice for the sake of the truth, and I have no backward steps to take. I have been urged to return to my former faith, with the promise of a field of labor as pastor over a church. I unhesitatingly refused the offer. I have bought the truth at no small cost. and shall not consent to sell it for the consideration of man's favor, or for paltry gold. However, I have many warm friends in this place; both in the church and community around, who have manifested by words and acts that they believe in entire freedom of thought and action in all matters of religion. I bless the Lord for friends in these days when those who dare to follow the truth do it at the peril, at least, of having their names cast out as evil. Let us march on brethren, in love to God and man, unfurling the glorious banner of God's truth, ever praying for those who oppose us, resting assured that "we shall reap, if we faint not." Yours, hoping for futrue life only through Jesus, the LIFE-GIVER.

FROM POLLY G. PITTS.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, Feb., 1868.

BR. STORRS: I feel a desire that the truth, as it is in Jesus, may run and be glorified. I attended a meeting last night, and the sermon was preached by a Universalist minister. He did not wrest the Scriptares to prove universal salvation; for he did not bring any to prove it. It is true, he took a text, and it was this—"Thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins." He did not tell us how Christ would save us from our sins, but we would be saved from them; not altogether in this world, but in the next. O, there was no gospel in it; it was just the thing to lead captive silly folks, men as well as women; those that were laden with divers sins and lusts. When he sat down, he gave liberty for any to make remarks. As no one spoke, I asked him to read Psalm xxxvii. He could do no less, but it was like reading his own condemnation. Never did I realize so clearly, as I did then, that God's word was was like a two-edged sword. O, how it turned the bowing wall, daubed with untempered mortar, upside down. Yes, it made it as flat as the blast of the ram's horns did the walls of Jericho. It was like a stone cast into a pond of dead water; it stirred it to its edges. O, how good is God's word; how good to go to the law and the testimony; how much better is a "Thus saith the Lord," than the traditions of men. O, let us labor to spread the truth as it is in Jesus, to the glory of God; for men are dying for the lack of knowledge. That God may keep us all from the error of the wicked, is the prayer of your sister.

FROM B. H. COUCH.

CONCORD, N. H., FEB., 2, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I have been into Vermont and the north part of this State. I presume you are as well acquainted with the condition of these two States, as any one. But I am astonished somewhat when I see the superstition of religious sectarians, professing to be like Christ; especially that class styling themselves "Adventists," pretending to be waiting for the appearing of our Lord and Master from heaven. The term "waiting" is as applicable to them as to those five virgins without oil and lights. I visited towns, finding hardly one individual who dared to stand out from the old dilapidated building which is just ready to be "ground to powder," and proclaim the present truth; whole towns destitute of the real truth on the Life and resurrection through Christ only. There are many professing to be keeping the commandments of Christ who would scoff and even mock at the saying of Christ's own words.

How can such persons expect salvation through him who said, "He that believeth not in me shall not see life?" What is it to believe in Christ? It is to receive every word of his sayings: "by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Every declaration of Christ's words rejected, is one step backward into darkness.

It is unbelief in the word of God which brings damnation to man. O, my Lord, I exclaim, what can we do? We see men rejecting the plain truths of Christ and still think they are safe. Men will not hear the truth of the gospel, much less help it forward. Men believing the doctrine of future life only through Christ have been into this city the past year or two, and did not so much as intimate the doctrine, so that the people knew what they meant.

Have we got hold of a doctrine that is not consistent to preach; even that one sermon out of ten should receive but a mere tincture? On what should we base our labors for reformation?

Shall we meet false doctrine as well as unjust acts? Shall mental culture be corrected and based on fundamental truths of the gospel, as well as physical culture? Can there be anything paramount to life from the dead? What do you think of such preachers?

Does not the doctrine of an age (probationary) to come spring forth from the false doctrine of all men from Adam having a future life?

Is not this a religious dogma, and one of the false charms of the Diabolo of evil, to lull man to sleep, as a narcotic, preventing from making any exertion in this life to be "begotten of the spirit (pneuma) from above," in order to obtain any life at all in the future?

Does not the false doctrine of endless misery grow out of the old Roman Catholic dogma, viz, The resurrection of all men from Adam? Could even the Pope pray men out of purgatory but on that doctrine? Pray tell me, ye masters of theology, what error on future life is not a sprout of that thorny bramble?

How can a person have future life without the germ of life in him when he goes down?

How can any seed planted produce life if there is no germ of life in it when put into the earth?

FROM LOUISA J. BEACH.

NEW BRITAIN, CONN., Feb. 13, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Many times during the past four months have I hoped that ere another month passed I should find time to write a little for "our paper," and was determined that with the opening of the new year I would make an effort to that effect. The first day of Jan., 1868, found me prostrated from an attack of hemorrhage of the lungs, induced by over exertion during these months of care, anxiety and watching in the sick room of my daughter, who has been an invalid since last May. For the measure of health I now enjoy I am thankful; but I still feel unfitted for any exertion, mental or physical.

The thought of rest a little in the future, is comforting, and sometimes, even with my love of life, and strong tenacity for it, the thought of taking rest in "sleep" is pleasant. But the Lord knows best what is needful. I can, however, say with Paul, that "to depart and be with Christ" would be "far better" than the present life, with its many ills, or death with its dreamless rest.

The HERALD, in its weekly visits, is perused with much interest by my family and myself; and to me the truth never shone brighter. I watch its progress on every hand, and rejoice in the assurance that it is effectually undermining the very foundations of error, causing its lofty towers to totter, as they must eventually do to their complete overthrow. A stronger and mightier than man rules, and in that assurance, the weak may say, "I am strong." Let none be weary in well doing, for every effort rightly made to scatter the light and truth, will tell somewhere and upon some one. And we know that "our labor is not in vain in the Lord."

I have been exceedingly interested in the result of the discussion in Springfield, Mass., in which Br. Wendell has been engaged. A friend in attendance has kept me posted. I trust the readers of the HERALD will be favored with a full account of the matter.

Before I close, I feel like asking those who love to pray, to remember me when they call upon the Lord. For thirty years I have been a follower of Jesus, and have had hope of salvation through him; but the past six months has been the most singular, and at times the darkest part of my whole experience. Buffetted, tried, tempted, assailed in parts where I thought myself invulnerable; sometimes in doubt, darkness, and almost despair; yet not really destroyed nor entirely forsaken. I have often thought if there was any immortality about me, it wasn't much to boast of. But I know "the fervent, effectual prayer of a righteous man availeth much:" therefore, I ask to be remembered.

FROM J. P. LAMB.

COLD WATER, MICH., Feb. 10, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Through the kindness of a Christian mother the HERALD OF LIFE is a weekly visitor, and a welcome one. I have long entertained the views advocated by it, and some years since labored earnestly to spread the truth; but my efforts met with such bitter opposition from professed Christians that I gave up in despair and became a drone in the hive, consoling myself with the text, "Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone." But now I see the folly of such a course; that it is not manly, neither like the spirit of our Lord and Saviour; and as I read the HERALD I ask myself, Where would that be, and the thousands of happy believers in "No Life out of Christ," if BR. STORRS and the few fearless pioneers in the great work had faltered because of persecution?

Well do I remember, twenty years ago, the first time I heard you preach in Philadelphia. And as I look back over that twenty years' conflict, loss of property, receptacle for abuse, a living target for the shafts of satan, shot from bows drawn by professed divines, and hurled from the sacred desk, well may we say, "The Lord is with you;" and your example gives us courage to try again, and to covenant with our Master that whatever talent we may have shall be consecrated to the work of explaining his will and testament to man, in hopes that some may thereby obtain the inheritance. Yours in hope of eternal life.

"MAY I say it? It is not hard to know God, provided one will not force one's self to define him.

"Do not bring into the domain of reasoning that which belongs to our innermost feeling. State truths of sentiment, and do not try to prove them. There is a danger in such proofs; for in arguing it is necessary to treat that which is in question as something problematic. Now that which we accustom ourselves to treat as problematic, ends by appearing to us as really doubtful. In things that are visible and palpable, never prove what is believed already; in things that are matters of practice and duty, command, and do not explain. 'Fear God' has made men pious; the proofs of the existence of God have made many men atheists. From the defiance springs the attack; the advocate begets in his hearer a wish to pick holes, and men are almost always led on, from the desire to contradict the doctor, to the desire to contradict the doctrine. Make truth lovely, and do not try to arm her: mankind will then be far less inclined to contend with her."

MRS. URSULA EATON, Leonardsburg, Ohio, writes: Revivals are rife at present, but the glorious gospel is not there. The great tidings of the coming kingdom of our Lord and LIFE-GIVER, Jesus Christ to rule and reign on the earth is not believed; consequently finds no place in these "revivals," so called. I do believe there are yet more people to be brought out of darkness into the saving knowledge of the truth; out of that immortal soul delusion, whose natural fruit is "spiritism;" and, if I read the organs of some sects aright, although they are professedly against "spiritism," they are already within its coils.

A. B. VAN DOREN, Chicago, Ills., writes: I do wish Br. Wendell could see the way open to come and settle in our city. That there is an opening here I have no doubt. My reasons are these—many of the ministers are preaching on the immortality question: and that their idol has been hit, I have no doubt.

OBITUARY.

FELL ASLEEP in Jesus, at Lockport, N. Y., Jan. 3, 1868, Br. JOHN PENEIL, aged 83 years and 9 months. Br. P. was a native of C. W., but moved to this country four years ago. He decided to follow Christ some fifty years ago. United with the E. Methodist Church, with whom he was honored and respected. But upon further investigation of the Bible, he became dissatisfied with their doctrines. Therefore he came out and united with the Christian Church, and by them he was highly respected.

He was among us who embraced the doctrine of Christ's coming in '43, to set up his kingdom upon this earth. He was the first in Port Perry and its vicinity to embrace the sleep of the saints, the destruction of the wicked, and the doctrine of the Age to Come.

Br. Peneil was a man of excellent mind. Being well versed in history, and a good Biblical scholar, having much of the spirit of Christ, he was well qualified to judge between truth and error. He left for his children and acquaintances a rich legacy. Not of this world's goods; for he did not possess them. But an unblemished character. In compliance with his request, made years ago, the writer attended his funeral, and presented to a house full of human beings, the BIBLE HOPE of a future state. Closed by showing them how they could obtain life in the future.

"THE GLAD TIDINGS" is the title of a new "Monthly Magazine" of 32 pages, published by "WM. H. SPENCER, Brockport, N. Y., devoted to Christ's second coming and kindred Bible truths, and the promotion of practical Christianity in its primitive purity. TERMS: $1 a year, or 50 cents for six months in advance."

We have hardly time to examine the first No. just received, so as to express an opinion as to the value of it. The object is good; and, if conducted with ability, will be welcomed as an auxiliary in the grand cause of truth. We wish the publisher success in his undertaking.

SORROWS are like tempest clouds; in the distance they look black, but when above us, scarcely gray. As sad dreams indicate coming joy, so will it be with the so-often torturing dream of life when it hath passed.—JEAN PAUL RICHTER.

"I AM rich enough, and can afford to give away £100 a year. I would not crawl upon the earth without doing a little for truth. I will enjoy the pleasure of what I give by giving it alive, and seeing another enjoy it. When I die, I should be ashamed to leave enough for a monument, if there was a wanting friend above ground."—POPE TO DEAN SWIFT.

HE lives long that lives well; and time misspent is not lived, but lost. Beside, God is better than his promise, if he take from him a long lease, and gives him a freehold on a better value.—FULLER.

IT is a fine thing, says the Country Parson, to ripen without shrivelling, to reach the calmness of age and yet keep the warm heart and ready sympathy of youth.

THE believer, is sitting in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, while the world lieth in the wicked one.

THE cloth of humility should always be worn on the back of Christianity.

CHRISTIANITY commands us to pass by injuries; policy, to let them pass by us.

PRIDE is a sinner's torment, but humility is a saint's ornament.

LUKEWARM Christians are nauseating to the Almighty.

THE desire for happiness is natural; the desire for holiness supernatural.

TRUE Christians do much good and make but little noise over it.

Poetry.

One Step More.

What though before me it is dark
  Too dark for me to see?
I ask for light for one step more,
  'Tis light enough for me.

Each little humble step I take
  The gloom clears from the next;
So, though 'tis very dark beyond,
  I never am perplexed.

And if sometimes the mist hangs close,
  So close I fear to stray,
Patient I wait a little while,
  And soon it clears away.

I would not see my further path,
  For mercy wills it so;
My present step might harder be,
  Did I my future know.

It may be that my path is rough,
  Thorny, hard and steep,
And knowing this, my strength might fail
  Through fear and terror deep.

It may be that it winds along
  A smooth and flowery way;
And seeing this, I might despise
  The journey of to-day.

Perhaps my path is very short,
  My journey nearly done,
And I might tremble at the thought
  Of ending it so soon.

Or if I knew a weary length
  Of road that I must tread,
Fainting, I'd think my feeble strength
  Will fail me ere the end.

And so I do not wish to see
  My journey, or its length;
Assured that through my Father's love
  Each step will bring its strength.

Thus step by step I onward go,
  Not looking far before,
Trusting that I shall always have
  Light for just one step more.

Children's Department.

A Mother's Voice.

Since the prevailing Indian troubles commenced an Indian camp was captured, together with a number of prisoners, including squaws, and some half dozen white captives, boys and girls, from five to twelve years of age. Word was sent throughout the country, inviting those who had lost children to come to the camp and identify, if possible, their children, as none of them could give any account of who their parents were, or where they were taken from, so young were they when they were taken captives by the Indians. Numbers went to the camp—many more than there were children—and, of course many of them returned with heavy hearts at being unable to find their lost ones.

Among the number who went hundreds of miles to the camp was a mother who had lost two children—a boy and a girl, one three and the other five years old—years ago. Efforts were made to persuade her not to go, and so long a time had elapsed it was certain she could not identify her children, even if they stood before her. But she could not rest; she must go, and go she did. On arriving at the encampment she found the captives ranged in line for inspection. She looked at them first from a distance, her anxious heart bounding in her bosom. But she did not see her children—at least, she saw nothing in the group that bore the slightest resemblance to her baby boy and girl as they looked when playing about her doorstep. She drew nearer and peered deep into the eyes of each, who only returned her look with a stony gaze, yet anxious one; they too, hoping to see something in her that would tell them she was their mother. She looked long and steadily at them, as her heart began to sink and grow heavy in her bosom. At last, with tears and sobs, she withdrew, and when some paces off she stopped and turned about quickly, as, apparently a thought had occurred to her. Drying her eyes, she broke forth in a sweet hymn she had been wont to sing to her children as a lullaby. Scarce a line had been uttered when two of the captives, a boy and a girl, rushed from the line, exclaiming, "Mamma! mamma!" The mother went home perfectly satisfied she had found her long lost children.

Loving Jesus Best.

"Mother," said little Hugh, coming in from an evening prayer-meeting, where he had met the Saviour, and held in his little heart sweet communion with him—"mother, would it hurt your feelings if I should love Christ more than I love you?"

"No, my son!" replied the trembling mother, as she hardly dared to think she had heard aright—"no! Jesus has done a great deal more for you than any mother has done, or can do for her dearest child."

Looking up into her face earnestly, Hugh said:

"I asked you first because I do, mother."

How many mothers would be willing to have their "feelings hurt" in this way? Then let them pray for the Spirit; for it is the Holy Spirit alone that can unlock the heart of even a little child, and open it to such love. We may instruct them in the most blessed truths; but the Spirit must "take of these truths, and show them unto them." The disciples, on their way to Emmaus, talked with Jesus himself: but until their eyes were opened, they "knew not that it was Jesus." The Spirit can open the eyes of the blind, unstop deaf ears, and make the dumb to sing; even more, it can call the dead to life. And this Spirit comes in answer to prayer. If you would have your child love Christ more than he loves you, pray that the Spirit may show Christ to him, not as a "root out of a dry ground," but as the "chiefest among ten thousand, the one altogether lovely."—Child at Home.

Calling Fish.

A pleasing incident occurred while at the house of a friend in Trimble county, Kentucky. The conversation turned on the subject of fish, when my friend remarked that he had been in the habit of calling and feeding his fish. I requested to see the novel operation. Taking some bread we walked to his pond, upon whose glassy surface not a ripple was to be seen. He began to whistle in a soft tone, and presently the water began to be agitated; and soon, here and there, all over the central part of the pond, the fishes were leaping up to the surface. He continued to whistle and to cast bread upon the water; and now the whole pond is "instinct with life," teeming with beautiful fish, swarming in dozens around a piece of bread, some nippling off little bits, othere carrying down whole pieces at a time. Nothing could be more beautiful and exciting than to see the rapid evolutions of these swimming troops, all eager in the pursuit of food. My friend informed me that when the water was high the fish would take bread from his hand. When he wished a dish, all he had to do was to call them up and feed them, when he could take as many as he wished without hook and line.—Religious Herald.

The Coming of Christ.

The coming of Christ, the resurrection of the holy dead, the setting up of his kingdom, and his universal and everlasting reign, are the main elements in the great Bible doctrine of the Millennium; around which all the teachings of Moses and the prophets, of Christ and his apostles, cluster. This doctrine is presented in various forms—in plain, simple language that a child could understand—in the most beautiful poetic figures and imagery, and in the most lofty and sublime symbolical representations. This doctrine underlies the whole system of revealed truth. It is the golden thread that binds all in one harmonious whole; and to the throne of God itself. The revelation of Jesus Christ and the restitution of all things, was the hope of Israel, and is the only hope of this sin-stricken and sin-oppressed world.

That the Lord Jesus, who once visited our earth, is to return to it again, must be perfectly obvious to every attentive reader of the sacred Scriptures. No unprejudiced mind can contemplate the numerous announcements of that grand and imposing scene, and remain in doubt. Enoch before the flood, saw him in the mighty distance of ages descending from heaven with myriads of his holy ones. Patriarchs and prophets saw him—conversed with him—wrote of him—and affirm in the most positive terms, that he is to stand in the latter day upon the earth. The apostles and martyrs take up the story of his coming, and glory in the prospect; and the Lord Jesus himself adds the sanction of his own name in the declaration, "Behold I come." But for what purpose is he to come?

Some maintain that he will not come till the end of all things and of time itself: and then simply to judge the world, and award its destinies. Others affirm his coming to be premillennial, for the renovation of the earth, the resurrection of the holy dead, the introduction of the latter-day glory, and the setting up of his kingdom.

Here I cannot forbear the remark, that every argument and every objection that can be raised and urged against the coming of Christ before the Millennium, lies with equal weight against his coming at the end of it to judge the world. This can as easily be done without his personal presence and supervision, as the things to be done at the beginning of that long period. If the glowing representations of his coming to set up his kingdom, and his reign, as King in Zion and over all nations, are to be turned into figures of speech, into fable and allegory—if an ethereal sense is to be assigned to them, and they are to be taken spiritually—why not carry out the principle? Why not apply this rule to the interpretation of those Scriptures which describe the process of the last judgment? If his reign is to be purely spiritual, why is not his judgment to be spiritual? If what is said of his coming before the Millennium is to be taken figuratively, why is not what is said of his coming at the end of it to be taken in the same sense? Accordingly the bold step has been made by a late writer, who maintains that "the second coming of Christ, with its associate events, the end of the world, the resurrection of the dead, and the general judgment, must already have taken place, and all expectation of these events as still future, are forbidden by the Scriptures." The whole argument is based on the commonly-received notion of a spiritual reign.

How then is the grand problem to be solved? Let us see, The high-priesthood of Christ was established on his first coming. He executed that office in the one offering and sacrifice of himself. That coming was a real personal coming. His life and death were a visible reality. And the shedding of his blood, the great atonement for sin, a most wonderful reality. How then comes it to pass, that his second coming to execute his kingly office, is to be any less real, visible, and personal? How significant the title, "The Prince of the kings of the earth." When revealed from heaven He is to take to himself his great power and reign. Then will be fully answered the prayer, so oft and earnestly repeated, "Thy kingdom come." And this is the declared purpose of his coming.

Christ told his sorrowing disciples, that when the Son of Man should come in his glory, they who had followed him, in the regeneration should sit on the twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. They are to be princes in his future kingdom. And the establishment of this kingdom is the hope of Israel; and the only hope of this sin-oppressed world. When I say the only hope, I do not mean that no others are indulged. Many are sanguine in the expectation that present means and instrumentalities are to convert and save the race. But I mean that the coming and reign of Christ, is the only hope presented in the Gospel. Any and every other is doomed to bitter disappointment.—Selected.

The Roman Question.

The Confederacy.

The Roman question is well worthy our most attentive study. It invites consideration as one of the most perplexing problems in politics, which our own or any age has ever been called to deal with. But especially does it invite attention as one of the most solemn lessons which Providence has ever read to the world. Why should that question be so difficult of solution? Why should it bring with it dangers so tremendous to the whole condition of Europe? Why should a few square miles of barren territory so disquiet the nations, and imperil their peace? Why should it be so exceedingly hazardous to decree an end to what looks the most insignificant and obsolete sovereignty in the world? Only last Summer we beheld some dozen of small potentates and sovereignties abolished—literally snuffed out. The world never missed them; not a battalion marched to defend their petty thrones. But here is what seems a pettier throne than any of them, and yet, the moment any one lifts a finger against his prerogative, or ventures to place his crown in jeopardy, all Europe is thrown into commotion and alarm; cabinets exchange angry notes; iron-clads get up their steam; armies begin their march; panic seizes upon all the exchanges of the world; torrents of blood are poured out; other thrones begin to totter, and it becomes evident that if this potentate, insignificant as he seems, must be put down, a great many more potentates shall descend into the same gulf with him. How evident it is that there is more here than meets the eye! In short, is not Providence proclaiming to all who have ears to hear or eyes to see, by making the Papal Power the great centre of alarm, retribution and punishment to nations and kings of Europe, that in the past ages it has been in connection with the Papal Power that they have most grievously sinned, and that here, where they now find the centre of their punishment, was in past ages the centre of their transgression and iniquity. The Scripture is being fulfilled before our eyes, which said, that the kings of the earth who lived deliciously with the harlot, should be made to share in her last plagues, and should cry, alas! alas! when they saw the smoke of her burning ascending unto heaven.

Let us mark how all the three parties who prominently figure in the Roman question have come to their wits' end, and have been manifestly ensnared and taken in their own trap. The three parties are Louis Napoleon, Victor Emmanuel and the Pope. Since the year 800 these three parties—the king of France, the king of Savoy, and the Pope, have generally been the most conspicuous actors in the business of the Papacy. They have commonly been found leagued together to force Propery upon the nations of Europe, and to persuade with fire and sword all who dissented from the Roman Church. Their league is not quite so firm at this day, nor their fellowship quite so cordial. God has divided their tongues, and he threatens to turn their swords against one another. But surely it is very significant that those same three parties, who have all along been so prominent in this bad business, are equally prominent at this hour, and that having had the chief hand in the bloody deeds of the past, they should now appear destined to become the first and greatest sufferers in the awful but righteous vengeance which the world was warned these deeds most surely draw down.

Let us mark the attitude of the three. Let us mark, too, now that attitude they can neither retain nor change. Not one of the three can move a foot, or advance a step, but at the imminent risk of destroying himself or of destroying his neighbor. Peril is before, behind, and all around them.

Behind Louis Napoleon is the priesthood of France. When Louis Napoleon was a poor, uninfluential, unbefriended adventurer, with no reputation among politicians, but that of possessing a genius for Quixotic and hair-brained schemes, and with just such an amount of fatalism or superstition in his constitution as pointed him out as a fitting tool for the priests to work with, he was received by them, and, despite the indifference or opposition of parties in the National Assembly, they put him at the head of the French Republic. In this capacity Louis Napoleon brought back the Pope, and set him up once more in Rome, and received his wages in being made emperor. So much for the past; but the priests of France are as powerful at this hour over the masses of the French peasantry as they were in 1851. As regards the population of the towns they are even more powerful now than they were then. And no one knows better than the Emperor of the French, that his masters, the priests, have not forgotten their old bargain, and have still the power of keeping him to it, and that he retains his throne not a day longer than he upholds the temporal power at Rome.

Louis Napoleon cannot help himself. Those who are his masters are not much in the habit of relenting, or of abating aught of the full tale of service, which those who are so unhappy as to have fallen under their power have engaged to render. Louis Napoleon has put his hand to the priests' plough, and he may not withdraw it. He must plough on till the furrow reaches its long dreary and terrible close.

Beside, Louis Napoleon has made the priestly influence supreme in France by giving it the whole field to itself. He has put down the press, he has put down the public meeting, he has put down free parliaments. France is quite as much a popish country, and rather more so, than it was eighteen years ago, when he first assumed its direction. The consequence is that the Emperor is as much the slave of the priests as ever, and must stand champion to a cause which, we believe, he at heart abhors.

As regards Victor Emmanuel, the second party in this evil confederacy, he is somewhat differently situated. He has the Revolution behind him, or rather beneath him. Every time he pauses or falters, or attempts to turn back, he hears its subterranean bellowings, and feels a quaking of the soil under him. Voices from the darkness cry to him, "To Rome, to Rome." To Rome he must go; for neither peace nor security can Italy know so long as she has another king seated in her very centre, and directing a vast scheme of intrigue and treason, ramifying over the whole country. But if the revolution in the rear urges him onward, Napoleon with the whole power of France menaces him in front.

Unhappy man. He is between two terrible evils. If he says I will disregard the September convention and go to Rome, there is the sword of France. If he says, I will obey the September Convention, and respect the "temporal power," there is the revolution. Providence has put two things in his choice—whether to die by the sword that hangs suspended by a single thread above his head, or to be swallowed up by the revolution, which is digging under his feet, every hour he delays, the grave of himself and of his house. Verily "the way of transgressors is hard."

But what of the third party, the Pope? How easily, say some, might the Pope extricate himself and all concerned from this dire dilemma. In truth it is at Rome, and in connection with the Pope, that we encounter the greatest difficulty of all.

Behind the Pope is the "Non-possumus." So recently as 1864 the Pope promulgated in the most public and solemn manner the decree that the temporal power is an essential part of Christianity, that is, of Roman Catholicism, and that it never can be given up. This decree was passed with the concurrence of the bishops of the whole Catholic world, and is, moreover, in full harmony with the whole traditions of the Papacy. To expect that the Pope will reverse his own recently promulgated decree, and violate all the traditions of the Papacy, is to expect what assuredly will never happen. The whole priesthood of the Roman Church would feel humiliated by such a proceeding, and rather than consent to it, or permit it to take place, they will brave every risk, even though it were to the extent of provoking a revolution which might place their church as well as the monarchies of Europe in peril of extinction?

Thus the question has come into a dead-lock. Each of the three main actors in it is at a standstill. Behind Louis Napoleon is the Priesthood. Behind Victor Emmanuel is the Revolution. Behind Pio Nono is the Non-possumus. These parties cannot remain where they are; and yet how can they advance without precipitating themselves, and their kingdoms upon destruction?

How visible is the hand of God in these complications and entanglements. The kings of France and Italy entered into the September Convention for the purpose of conserving the Papacy, and frustrating the just expectations of Italy. "Now they are snared in the work of their own hands: in the net which they hid is their own foot taken." The day appears to be drawing nigh when God will execute a more terrible vengeance on past iniquities than he has ever yet done: and that is neither an intelligent nor a healthy piety which does not see the wisdom of God in snaring the sinner in the work of his own hands, and approve his justice in avenging the blood of "the saints and martyrs of Jesus" on the heads of its shedders. "Behold," it is written of the wicked man, "he travaileth with iniquity, and hath conceived mischief, and brought forth falsehood. He made a pit and digged it, and is fallen into the ditch which he made. His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down upon his own pate." "The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance." "So that a man shall say, Verily, there is a reward for the righteous: verily he is a God that judgeth in the earth."—Selected

Do It Heartily.

Divine art of turning pain into pleasure! all labor into joy! of bringing rest out of weariness, and hope of reward out of deep dejection!

"Whatever ye do." It may not be that which you would like to do. Desire must yield to duty. The entertaining book must be laid aside; the calm retreat forsaken; choice spirits, among whom the soul would "sit and sing herself away," resigned for less congenial intercourse. The plough waits for you in the furrow. In the sweat of thy brow, must thou eat bread. Fresh wants rise up and cry, "Give! Give!" Nature will not yield thee her good fruits: no, nor grace either, spontaneously. The hand of the diligent maketh rich—and thou must "sow in tears," ere thou "reap in joy." You would like to sit at noonday, under the shadow of your vine: but lo! it needs the pruning knife! The fragrance of early morning invites you, and you would fain linger among the flowers; but see! thorns and briers are fast springing up, to choke the good grain. You must work, work! Go not to thy labor with a heavy heart. Say not in bitterness, "I rise up early—I sit up late—I eat the bread of carefulness—I waste the day in labor, in prayer, in tears, and what am I the better? The same scene of toil returns to-morrow and to-morrow, to the end of life. I spend my strength for naught—for who thanks me?"

Now, the apostle shows us a mode of turning all this drudgery into joy—"Whatsoever you do"—planting or pruning; ploughing or reaping—"do it heartily." But how take any interest in such dull work as mine? how work heartily, when nobody will ever thank me? It is not so difficult after all. "Do it heartily—as unto the Lord, and not unto men."

Ah! that makes a difference! "As unto the Lord." How simple and reasonable! He is my Master. He gave me my work. It is not for man I labor. He may, indeed, turn my labors to the account of man, then I shall receive a present, earthly reward. But if not, it is no business of mine. I faithfully serve my employer. He faithfully rewards me. That was the bargain.

What then have I to do with the praise of men? What if they do not appreciate my labors? What if they have no sympathy in my toils? What if I spend my pains on a barren soil that gives me back no fruit or flower?

Still I will not faint. I will not fly the noonday heat. Sometimes my Lord will invite me to rest beneath the banner of his love. For that I will be grateful, and return to my task more cheerfully. I will not grumble at the kind of work allotted to me. I will not repine, if my brother's task is lighter than mine. I will not stop to abuse the world, because it takes no notice of me: satisfied that his approval is sure; and that the rest is near: for the day is far spent—the night is at hand—and the sweet refreshment of our Father's house is already prepared!—Selected.

Richard Watson in a Hurry.

The following interesting incident is sent us by Mr. James Noon, of Ballardvale, Mass. He vouches for the distance over which Mr. Watson made this John Gilpin ride one Sabbath morning, as he says he has often travelled it, night and day. He has frequently heard the story told in England. Methodist preachers used to be famous for their fast horses, if not fast riding. They will find a good example in their great theologian, who beat the railroad, before it was built, in his race to the pulpit.

"About sixty years since, Richard Watson had agreed to preach two occasional sermons at Leicester. He was in London at the time, and the mail from London did not arrive in Leicester until half-past eleven, while the service began at half-past ten, so that he would be one hour too late. He, therefore, took the Coventry mail on Saturday afternoon. Coventry is twenty-six miles from Leicester. He could thus be in time. But the coach broke down, so that he did not arrive in Coventry until after nine o'clock on Sunday morning. He went to the inn-keeper, whom he knew well, and told him he must be in Leicester by half-past ten, and wanted a saddled horse. He said that he had a horse which he thought would do it, but he dare not let him have it, for he was sure to run away with him. Mr. Watson told him that was just the horse he wanted. It was brought, and he started at half-past nine o'clock. When he got on the Leicester road, the horse ran away with him. Mr. Watson said to him: 'If you are in a hurry, I am in a hurry too; you may go ahead.' And he did go, never stopping until he got within a mile of Leicester. There is a very steep hill going into Leicester. Here the horse slackened his pace. Mr. Watson reminded him that he was in a hurry, and he started him up again, so that he got to the chapel just in time. The owner of the horse was much obliged to Mr. Watson, for the horse never ran away after that."—The Methodist.

Underground River in Ohio.

It is not generally known that there exists, about a mile west of Fremont, a remarkable underground stream, with a swift current, and no outlet above the surface of the ground this side of Lake Erie. It was discovered several years ago by a man who was returning from a day's chopping in the woods. In walking over a slightly sunken place he noticed a hollow sound, and turning, struck the ground with his axe. The axe broke through and disappeared and never has been heard from since. Further investigation showed a rock about six feet below the surface, with a crevice a foot or more wide, in which water could be seen for several feet below. By tracing its course further down and breaking through the crust, the same phenomenon appeared again, and by dropping a piece of wood or other floating substance in the upper aperture, it was soon seen to pass the lower one, showing a strong current. A lead and line let down to the depth of seventy feet found no bottom. The supply of water is only slightly affected by drouth, and a pump set up in one of the places above mentioned has furnished the purest water to the whole neighborhood during the late dry season. It is certainly quite a remarkable stream.—Fremont (O.) Journal.

How to Cure a Felon.—As we often see friends suffer with these troublesome things, we publish the following cure for them, which we have heard highly recommended: As soon as the parts begin to swell, get the tincture of lobelia, and wrap the part affected with the cloth saturated thoroughly with the tincture, and the felon is dead. An old physician says he has known it to cure in scores of cases, and it never fails if applied in season.—Journal of Medicine.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the Inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged, as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents, Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

BY THE EDITOR.

It may be proper for me to state at the outset that I do not stand here, and have not stood here at any part of this discussion to plead that every word in the Bible was given by inspiration. No such ground have I taken. I take the Bible to be a record, by faithful and trustworthy witnesses, of revelations that have been made by God to men, and of transactions connected with these revelations, and that the record of these transactions is not a matter of inspiration. The persons who recorded it, recorded it in their own language, according to their understanding of it. Now, sir, in regard to the general charge, I, at the outset of this discussion, called for the law by which the Bible was to be judged, and so far at least as it related to my friend Wright and myself, it was settled that natural religion, the religion of nature, or the God of nature, was the law by which the Bible was to be tried. Though we might have pressed that point further, we chose to stop at that point, and to meet our friend on that ground—his own ground—and to test the God of the Bible by the God of nature. Even supposing the God of the Bible sanctioned those dreadful things which he (friend Wright) spoke of—which may be a question of itself—we have, in comparing the God of nature with the God of the Bible, shown, at any rate, that the God of the Bible is no worse than the God of nature, and therefore the God of the Bible cannot be brought in guilty under the law by which he was to be tried. If it is pleaded that the God of the Bible sometimes acted one way and sometimes another, we say that the God of nature has acted in the same way. The God of nature sometimes gives rain, waters the earth, refreshes it with cheering showers, and causes it to vegetate and bring forth; and at other times the God of nature withholds the rain, and the earth parches up, and man and beast suffer and languish for the lack of the necessaries of life. Then the God of nature is equally as deficient in this respect as the God of the Bible, and is equally charged with acting two separate ways at different times.

We might enlarge upon that contrast, but lest we should be charged with travelling over the ground again, we do not enlarge. It has been insinuated, and something more than insinuated, that God—I suppose, of course, meaning the God of the Bible—had no right to take away man's life except to transform him, as the caterpillar is transformed into a butterfly. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have heard of the caterpillar transformation till, to me, it is worn threadbare. Sir, the caterpillar never did die, the life never was extinct; enter into that caterpillar's bed, where he has wound himself for repose; put into that bed something that extinguishes life, and see if a butterfly will ever come out. Never. But, sir, our friend should have followed the butterfly a little further, and then the beautiful butterfly, after fluttering in the sun, and from flower to flower, dies; and where is it now? Look at it lying in the street! where is he? emerged into some higher life? If it has emerged into some higher life, the God of nature has failed to reveal it. Yes, sir, and the God of nature has failed to reveal that a son or daughter of the human family emerges into a higher life when once they die. We call upon you to bring a revelation of nature that when a man dies he emerges into a higher state. Let us see the testimony if you have it. Let it be forthcoming. The pagan philosophers, about whom so much has been said, only speculated upon the subject. They never satisfied even their own minds by their own confessions, only while they were in argument. They thought it expedient to teach the doctrine to the vulgar multitude, because they could hold an influence over them by it, while they themselves did not believe in this immortality; and Bishop Whately has abundantly shown this in his work on the "Future States."

Why, sir, if the God of nature has revealed the certainty that man lives after he is dead, I ask why it is that these recent developments which are called "Rapping spirits," have made their appearance? Is that the God of nature, sir? This very resort to rapping spirits is an acknowledgment that the God of nature reveals nothing in regard to man's future life.

I shall now proceed to notice some few of the criticisms which have been made upon the Bible, or the teachings of the Bible, and which have been urged upon the attention with great pathos, as showing that the Bible was as bad as the resolution says. Perhaps I may as well begin in relation to the attempt to prove from this Bible that the God of nature has revealed the moral perfections of God. I have taken the ground that nature or natural religion goes no further in regard to the doctrines of God than that there is a God, or that there are gods, one or many, possessed of great power and intelligence; that the God of nature does not reveal, with any certainty to man's mind, the moral perfections or character of that being or of those beings. An appeal has been made to our Bible which gives us to understand that if our Bible is true, my position is not true; and if the Bible has taught a doctrine of that character, we are to conclude that nature does teach the moral perfections of God. We are referred to Paul's Epistle to the Romans, chapter i.: "Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them," or to them; "for God had showed it unto them, for the invisible things of him, from the creation of the world, are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made." What invisible things are clearly seen? The moral perfections of God? Are they clearly seen? Paul, what do you mean? "Even his eternal power and Godhead." That is just what I said. His being, his existence, his power and intelligence, it is clear, are manifested by natural religion, but beyond that the apostle does not affirm that it goes, and he specified the very points to which we referred.

Next, sir, we have a criticism on the expression of our Lord in Mark xvi., 16, and if I am not mistaken, that verse has been quoted uniformly alone, without regard to its context—without regard to anything that is said in connection with it. The text, as quoted, is this: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved: he that believeth not shall be damned." This is brought as a charge against the Bible, as threatening the most terrible penalty for unbelief, when it is affirmed a man can not believe without evidence. Well, I shall not disagree with any on that point. I do not believe a man can believe without evidence; nor did the blessed Jesus require that any one should believe without evidence. He expressly declares as a principle of his religion that if he had not come and spoken unto them they had not had sin. Just look at the connection: "And he said unto them, go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned," or condemned. Why condemned? Because they did not believe arbitrarily, without evidence? No, sir. He directed his disciples to preach the gospel—good news—glad tidings—the gospel that the God of nature never preached, and never can—the gospel of a future life by a resurrection from the dead. He told them to go and preach, and the apostles did go and preach that gospel.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is the proclamation, the glad tidings to a benighted world that the God of nature has failed to enlighten, that there is another life, which may be obtained by the dying children of men, and that that life is God's appointment through the Lord Jesus Christ, and by him and through him alone. These were the tidings to a dark world, speculating, unable to find out what was beyond the dark clouds of death. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. The God of nature teaches no such principle of self-revival. It remains for the good news of God to bring to view the possibility of obtaining immortality and eternal life.

To talk, then, about an arbitrary command to believe without evidence, is talking wrongfully against the Bible. No, sir, I am free to admit that the God of the Bible does appeal to man's reason; and I am willing even to go a step further, if my friends on the other side will like it better, and so far as to say that whatever may profess to be a revelation that contradicts palpably, plainly, true reason, is not a subject of belief.

I notice another criticism we have had on this occasion, which is in chapter xxiii. of Matthew: "Then spake Jesus to the multitude, and to his disciples, saying, The Scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat; all, therefore, whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works, for they say and do not." It is said here that our Lord Jesus Christ requires that whatever the Pharisees bid them observe and do, they were to do. Where did they sit? In Moses' seat. Then "to the law and to the testimony, if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." If the Scribes and Pharisees did not speak according to the law and to the testimony, Jesus never commanded them to obey them—never. There has been something said in the course of these remarks by our friends on the opposite side about the Mosaic priesthood, about the corruptions of the Jewish priesthood, as if that were an argument against the religious institutions of Moses. I beg, right at this point, to be indulged with the privilege of reading a remark of Dr. McCulloh, in his work to which I have before referred. In 1st volume of his work, page 209, he says:

"Though the prophets always urged the nation in the most earnest manner to a strict observance of the institutions of Moses, it is abundantly evident that they could not have formed any party with the priesthood; for not only have they entirely abstained from commending the order, but their writings are full of censures and denunciations against them for transgressing the laws of Jehovah, and for failing in their moral duties toward the nation at large. It is hardly necessary to remark that Jeremiah and Ezekiel, the only two prophets taken from the priestly tribe, are as express in their censures of the priesthood as other prophets." He adds, in a note: "Collins, the Deist, was so much struck with the amount of censure cast by the prophets upon the priesthood, that he terms them"—these prophets—"free-thinkers, not discerning that though the prophets censured the irreligion or the immorality of the priests when they had thus transgressed, yet they universally sustained the institutions of Moses in the most urgent manner, as being constitutions of Jehovah. However, the observation of this writer is important, for even his superficial examination of the prophetical writings was sufficient to show him that there could be no collusion between the prophets and the priesthood."

These prophets, then, do denounce the corruption and wickedness of the priesthood, and denounce it so severely that even this intelligent Deist was constrained to acknowledge there could be no collusion between them. But, sir, it has been said here, on this stand, that the Mosaic priesthood was a "contemptible foolery." If I were disposed to retaliate—but I am not—I would say that another criticism that I am about to notice is a most "contemptible" criticism, but I will not use the word only as borrowed.

The remark I am about to read, you will find extracted from Dr. McCulloh, in his work, page 240. Dr. McCulloh says:

Lord Bolingbroke, however inimical to the theory of the divine constitution of Christianity, has not hesitated to render the clearest testimony to its excellent morality, as the following extracts from his writings will abundantly show. And his observations on the subject of theological teaching not only is creditable to his discernment, but does justice to the actual merits of Christianity, which most other Deists have endeavored to confound with the false teaching of men.

That is just what is being attempted here. Lord Bolingbroke says in his fourth essay, section 5th:

The gospel teaches universal benevolence, recommends the precepts of it, and commends the observance of it in particular instances occasionally, always supposes them, always enforces them, and makes the law of right reason a law in every possible definition of the word beyond all cavil—I say beyond all cavil, because a great deal of silly cavil has been employed to perplex the plainest things in nature, and the best determined signification of words according to the different occasions on which they were used.

He makes the law of right reason a law in the definition of the word, "beyond all cavil." There, sir, I believe is Lord Bolingbroke's right-reason observation. That is a noble sentiment; I take delight in praising it, coming from a man called a Deist. He was a man that rejected the Bible as a revelation, but was a believer in God. I will read another extract from the same author. He says:

Is such the testimony we have heard in this place from the followers of Lord Bolingbroke? I hardly dare say followers. No, sir. The Bible has been attacked by "silly cavil." It has been attempted by such a cavil to show that the Lord Jesus condemned even the desire of marriage.

We come now to that text as recorded in chapter v. of Matthew, on which the cavil or criticism was made: "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery; but I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart." It was said here (by Mr. Wright), that Jesus declared that whosoever looketh on a woman to desire her for his wife was an adulterer. I call that a "silly cavil." We will not call it "a contemptible foolery." It is a perversion of the words of Jesus as palpable as the shining of the noon-day sun. Turn with me, then, to chapter xix. and 3d verse: "The Pharisees also came unto Jesus, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause? And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read, that he who made them at the beginning, made them male and female? For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife, and they twain shall be one flesh; wherefore they are no more twain but one flesh; what God hath joined together let not man put asunder." I ask any intelligent man or woman in this congregation if we are not right in applying Lord Bolingbroke's expression, "silly cavil," to such an interpretation of these words of Jesus as was given by persons on the opposite side of the question?

If I were defending a cause that needed such a cavil, I should certainly be led to believe that it was a doubtful one. (Applause).

CONFLICT OF FAITH.—"If satan and I ever did strive for any word of God in all my life, it was for this good word of Christ, 'Him that cometh unto me will I in no wise cast out;' he at one end and I at the other. Oh, what work we made! It was for this that we did so tug and strive; he pulled and pulled; but, God be praised, I overcame him, and got sweetness from it."—BUNYAN.

DEVIL: OR EVIL.

BY HON. O. S. HALSTED.

WE now give from Gesenius, whose Hebrew Lexicon is admitted to be emphatically the Lexicon, to which no other is to be compared, the definitions of nhsh, the Heb. word before given, and used in Gen. iii., where the Douay and E. V. have serpent. It is, says he, "an onomatopoietic word [that is, a word indicating its meaning by the sounds of it] equivalent to lhsh." He defines lhsh, "to whisper; Arabic (giving the Arabic), whisperers, that is, serpents." He refers to 2 Sam. xii., 19. The participle of this verb is there used—whispering; Lat., and Douay, whispering; Ital. and E. V., whispered. And to Psa. xli., 7, the same verb is there used. The Gr., Lat., and Douay there have, whispered; the Ital. and E. V., whisper. He then gives the noun lhsh, and defines it a whispering, and refers to Isa. xxvi., 16. The Heb. there has lhsh, a whispering; the Douay has, murmuring; the Ital., a lamentation; the E. V., a prayer. He further defines this noun, "incantation, magic," referring to Isa. iii., 3. The Heb. the wise artificer, and the skilful of lhsh—magic; Gr., the wise architect, and the intelligent pupil; Lat., (the) wise of master-builders, and (the) wise of mystical speech; Ital., the artificer industrious, and (the man) understanding in the secret words. [It seems that architecture was considered a kind of magic, and the speech of the workmen in it as mystical: much of their speech is mystical to the unskilled in it, to this day]. The Douay gives the architect, and the skilful in eloquent speech; E. V., the coming artificer, and the eloquent orator. And for lhsh—"incantation, magic." Ges. further cites Jer. viii., 17. The Heb. there is, I will send b, among, you nhshim, [plural of nhsh], whisperers, tsphonim, vipers which nothing to them (an) incantation, charm; Gr., serpents killing, to which not there is to charm; Lat., serpents, princes, to whom is not enchantment; Ital., de', of the, serpents, degli, of the, asps, against which not (there is) any enchantment: Douay, among you serpents basilisks, against which there is no charm; E. V., serpents, cockatrices among you, which (will) not (be) charmed. And for lhsh, "incantation, magic," he further cites Eccl. x., 11. The Heb. there is, If, or, though, sting that nhsh, whisperer, in not whispering, n, even, not is he preeminent to bol he lhsun (the) master of that tongue; Gr., If, or, though, sting (a) serpent in not whispering kai, even, not is he superior to the enchanting; Lat., though bite (a) serpent in silence, nothing to him less hath who privately detracts; Douay, If a serpent bite in silence, he is nothing better that backbiteth secretly; Ital., If, or, though, the serpent bite, not being enchanted, nothing better is worth the slanderous; E. V., surely the serpent will bite without enchantment; and a babbler is no better. [The Ital. misses the sense in the first branch of the verse, and the E. V. follows the mistake; the latter branch of the Ital. is better than the E. V. gives].

Gesenius further defines the verb nhsh, "to hiss, to whisper, specially used of the whispering of soothsayers;" and, "to practice enchantment;" for which last he refers to Lev. xix., 26; Deut. xviii., 10; 2 Kings xvii., 17, xxi., 6; in each of which this verb nhsh is used. In 2 Kings xvii., 17, after, used enchantments, the Heb. adds, and sold themselves to do he ro, that which bad, wicked; Gr., to do to poneron, that which bad wicked; Lat., malum, wickedness; Ital., and sold themselves to do that which displeased the signore; Douay, ... to do evil; E. V., and sold themselves to do evil. [We remember that in our youth we heard, "sold himself to the devil"]. In 2 Kings xxi., 6, also the Heb. adds, . . . to do he ro; Gr., to do to poneron; Lat., malum; Ital., he did to the extreme that which displeased the signore; Douay, evil; E. V., he wrought much wickedness.

The Heb. nhsh as a noun, is defined by Ges., enchantment, referring to Numb. xxiii., 23. The Heb. there is, For not (a, or, any) whispering b, in Jacob, and not divination b, in, Israel; Gr., For not (there is) augury, or, an augury, en, in Jacob, nor interrogation of an oracle en, in, Israel; Lat., not is augury, or, an augury, in Jacob, nor divination in Israel; Douay, there is no soothsaying in Jacob, nor divination in Israel; Ital., For not (there is) enchantment in, in, or, upon Jacob, neither divination, in, in, or, upon, Israel; E. V., surely (there is) no enchantment against Jacob, neither (is there) divination against Israel.

And Ges. further defines nhsh as a noun, "a serpent, so called from its hissing," and refers to Gen. iii., 1, and verses following; Exod. iv., 3, vii., 15; 2 Kings xviii., 4; in each of which the noun nhsh is used. He further says this noun is "used of the constellation of the serpent in the northern part of the sky," citing Job. xxvi., 13.

To show further that evil is often used where the word should be wickedness, we cite Deut. xxii., 21, 22, 24; in each of which the Heb. is, thou shalt remove, take away, exterminate, he ro, that, or, this, wickedness from midst of you; in v. 22, from Israel; Gr., ton poneron, that, or, this, wicked [thing]; Lat., the malum, vice, wickedness: Ital., and (so) take away the male; Douay thou shalt take away the evil. E. V., So shalt thou put away the evil. [We have seen that for the Gr. words ton poneron used in these verses, the Rheims and E. V., in 1 John ii., 13, give, the wicked one; and for ho poneros in Matt. xiii., 19, give, the wicked one.]

In Deut. xxii., 26, the Heb. is, u, but, to (the) girl thou shalt not do (a) thing; not in (the) girl (a) sin, fault, of death; for like as riseth man upon neighbor of him and killeth caphsh, breath—soul—of him, so this thing; Gr., . . . and kill the psuche, breath—soul—of him; Lat., . . . and kills the anima, breath—soul—of him; Douay, the damsel shall suffer nothing, neither is she guilty of death, ... and taketh away his life [for the Heb., Gr., and Lat., breath—soul]; Ital., ... and him slayeth; E. V., ... and slayeth him. [We thus have the authority of the Ital., and of the E. V., that to kill the breath—soul—of a man is to kill him; and e converso, that to kill a man is to kill (stop) the breath—soul—of him. And this is the plain testimony of all Scripture.]

Mark, chap. i., 13, has, Gr., pierazomenos [from the same verb used in Matt. iv., 37, tempted, solicited [to sin], by the satan, adversary. And Mark, who wrote the same Gospel the other three evangelists did, never uses diabolos, but always satan. The devils and devil we find in Mark are always daimons; Lat., daemons (the Gr. word); Ital., demons (the Gr. word). Devil in Mark is never diabolos in the Greek—the original—nor diabolus in the Lat. version. This is conclusive that the diabolos and the satan mean the same thing. Mark proves the same that is proved by the two verses before given from Rev., that diabolos and satan are but different appellations for the serpent, symbolizing the breath of evil; and that the devil in the orthodox sense is a Romish invention, adopted by so-called Protestantism.

We now give, from Gesenius, the definition of stn. He defines it, an adversary, an enemy, citing 1 Kings xi., 14, 23, 25; 1 Sam. xxix., 4; Ps. cix., 6; Zach. iii., 1, 2; 2 Sam. xix., 22; Numb. xxii., 22. In each of these verses the Heb. is stn. In the first four, the Douay has, an adversary. In Ps. cix., 6, it has, the devil. In Zach. iii., 1 and 2 it has, satan. In 2 Sam. xix., 22 it has, a satan. In Numb. xxii., 22 it has, against. In the first four the E. V. has, an adversary. In Ps. cix., 6, and Zach. iii., 1 and 2, it has Satan. In 2 Sam. xix., 22, it has adversaries. In Numb. xxii., 22, it has, an adversary. In Ps. cix., 6, the Heb. stn an adversary, Douay, the devil, E. V., Satan, in the second clause of the verse, means a wicked man, in the first clause: the clauses are connected by the Heb. u—even, or, yea. I add Ps. cix., 4, where the Heb. is, they became, or, are become stns to me; Ital., to me they are been adversaries; E. V., they are my adversaries.

Gesenius then says, stn with he before it, he stn, means adversary kat' exochen [by way of eminence—that adversary]; and he says, it here "assumes the nature of a proper noun," [orthodoxy would have it that it actually gives personal being, and makes stn the orthodox personal devil], "and is satan, the devil, the evil genius [the genius of evil] in the later theology of the Jews, who seduces men," (citing 1 Chron. xxi., 1., and saying, compare 2 Sam. xxiv., 1) "and then accuses and calumniates them before God," [that is, which seduces men to sin, and then, after actual sin, the sin accuses them. Does orthodoxy's devil accuse men of sin? The breath of evil, "the evil genius in the later theology of the Jews," seduces men into sin, and the sin committed accuses them to their conscience—the divine monitor, and so, before God,] citing Zach. iii., 1, 2; Job. i., 7, ii., 2, and verses following; and he says, "compare Rev. xii., 10." The Gr. there is ho kategoros—that accuser. [Gesenius uses who—who seduces, because he has said that stn with he before it "assumes the nature of a proper noun." He does not make he stn a person. But here is the key, the secret of the Romish versions making their personal devil. And the E. V. followed their lead.

To show that Ges. had no idea of making orthodoxy's personal devil by his word who, we now compare the verses he cites to be compared: 1 Chron. xxi., 1. The Heb. there is, And iomd, arose, or was caused to stand, stn, (an) adversary ol, in, upon, or, against, Israel, and instigated David to number Israel. (This verb omd is used, says Ges., not only of men, but of inanimate things, citing for the latter use of it, Deut. xxxi., 15; Josh. iii., 16; xi., 13.) The Gr. is, And este [from istemi] arose, or, was caused to stand (said of persons or things, says Donnegan) diabolos (a) tempter, seducer, deceiver, en, in, upon, or, as to, Israel. Lat., But consurrexit, arose (said of inanimate things, says Ainsworth) (a) satan against Israel, and stirred up David, etc. Douay, And Satan rose up against Israel: and moved David, etc. Ital., Now Satan was raised up against Israel, etc. E. V., And Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel.

The verse to be compared with 1 Chron. xxi., 1, is 2 Sam. xxiv., 1. The Heb. there is, And was increased (the) nostril of Jehovah to kindling upon Israel, and he instigated David b, in, or, among, them, to say, go number Israel; (Ges. says, the nostril is used for anger, which shows itself in hard breathing;) the Gr. uses the word anger in the verse; the Lat. uses its word furor, (the) fury, madness of (the) Dominus; Douay, And the anger of the Lord was again kindled against Israel, and stirred up David among them saying, Go, etc.; Ital., And the anger of the signore was kindled anew against Israel, and he incited David against them, saying: Go, etc. E. V., And again the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he moved David against them, etc.

Now, on comparison of these two verses, 1 Chron. xxi., 1 and 2 Sam. xxiv., 1, was it orthodoxy's Satan—its Devil—in 1 Chron. xxi., 1, that instigated David? or was it something adverse, an adversary, Gr., (a) diabolos, tempter, seducer, deceiver—a tempting, seducing, deceiving, suggestion? Will D. make orthodoxy's Devil out of the Gr. diabolos in 1 Chron. xxi., 1?

THE DRAMA.

A NEW YORK city morning journal, speaking of the prospect of the establishment of dramatic colleges in the States of Ohio and New York, expatiates at length upon an assumed necessity for such institutions and mourns over the intellectual shortcomings of theatrical performers. It remarks, that the play is often marred by awkwardness, stupidity, and misconception; the text is torn to pieces, and then badly mended by stammering tongues; tragedy is smothered in rant, and the most delicate conceptions of comedy hopelessly vulgarized; for the gentlemen all strut like blackguards, and the ladies all simper like waiting-maids, until the stage, which should be the mirror of politeness, the school of good manners, and the examplar of refined demeanor, degenerates into a blundering coarsness which is far below the decency of private life."

God-fearing people, who engage in constant watchfulness of themselves lest through weakness of the flesh they are led into anything which by influence of word or precept may encourage iniquity, and thus work injury to others, sometimes well-nigh enjoy the almost perfect freedom from care and perplexities displayed by self-serving worldlings; but it is a universally-attested truth that the many and varied habits of life have each their difficulties and trials. Even that class of pleasure-seekers who so much frequent our gilded, bewitching, and brilliantly-lighted theatres are annoyed by the "awkwardness" and "stupidity" of their entertainers, who rant, stammer, and "hopelessly vulgarize" (speak the words softly) "the most delicate conceptions of comedy." "The gentlemen," it says, "all strut like blackguards, and the ladies all simper." Many plays are of such character that a faithful presentation of them requires the practice of a degree of intimacy between male and female actors which too frequently developes into crime; and still more of them partake so largely of obscenity that they are fruitful schools of licentiousness.

Does then, the T—e believe that any condition of refinement in manners to which young men and young women might be brought in colleges of the sort it so earnestly recommends woud not gradually and surely give way under the demoralizing influences of the stage, and its corrupting associations? Does it expect graduates in this school of vice to be free from a "coarseness which is far below the decency of private life?" Does it think people who boldly disregard the most sacred social relations; who defiantly outrage the wisest usages of civilization, can put on true politeness and gentility at pleasure as they would a garment, and so far misrepresent themselves as to act other than as blackguards and simperers? Would it place refined people in positions where the peculiar exposure to evil influences render corruption of morals and manners inevitable, and suppose they will make their actions in those positions "the mirror of politeness, the school of good manners, and the examplar of refined demeanor?" If so, it will surely be disappointed, for such expectations can never be realized. "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" Very many men theatre-goers would be utterly unwilling to entertain at their own homes those they pay so liberally to be entertained by, and their objections to doing so would be based, largely, upon considerations of morality. Is it less an encouragement of vice to support it by contributions of funds, and countenance it by voluntary presence, than to admit into social intercourse those who practice it? It is true some plays (they are very few, comparatively) are not unchaste, or improper: but many contain more or less that is impure, while such as are notably indecent are far more favorably received by the public, as instanced in one recently withdrawn after having been performed several hundred consecutive nights, and always before immense audiences. Encouraged by its success, the proprietor of another theatre soon afterward, as might have been expected, commenced the presentation of one still more offensive to purity and decency. Still, as such exhibitions are demanded by the people, they will continue to increase and flourish; but it becomes the duty of all, who name the name of Christ, to discountenance them at all times and in all reasonable ways.

Between the followers of Jesus and those who care for nothing beyond this temporary, fleeting existence, the line of distinction should be plainly drawn in this, as in all other respects. We would on no account advise gloominess of countenance, or moroseness of manner on the part of Christians, as, to our mind, such demonstrations indicate a lack of spiritual-mindedness, and close communion with God, rather than an abundance; for when inward peace and joy abound, they will radiate and be seen and felt by others; but professors of religion should engage in nothing upon which they cannot, in all confidence, ask God's blessing. Let all indulgence in anything calculated in any degree, to check spiritual growth, or operate as a stumblingblock to others, be monopolized by such as cannot bring reproach upon the cause of truth and righteousness. If people will seek to be entertained by women who "simper," and by men who "strut like blackguards," they should be afforded no opportunity to point to any professed lover of Jesus as one who in any way sympathizes with them in their reckless chase after the miserable phantom of earthly pleasures. They who acknowledge the Lord as their God should serve him and render no homage to Baal.

Kindness Most Effective.

When Isaac T. Hopper lived in Philadelphia, his attention was drawn to a colored waiter, called Cain, who was remarkable for profanity. Neither persuasion nor rebuke had any effect to change this bad habit. One day Hopper encountered him in the street quarrelling and pouring volleys of oaths that made one shudder. Having faith in fines and constables, Hopper took him before a magistrate, who fined him for blasphemy. Twenty years after, Isaac met Cain, whom he had not seen for a very long time. His outward appearance was much changed for the worse; his garments were tattered, and his person emaciated. This touched the Friend's heart. He stepped up, spoke kindly, and shook hands with the forlorn being. "Dost not thou remember me," said the Quaker, "how I had thee fined for swearing?" "Yes, indeed I do; I remember what I paid as well as yesterday." "Well, did it do thee any good?" "No, never a bit; it made me mad to have my money taken from me."

Hopper invited Cain to reckon up the interest on the fine, and paid him principal and interest. "I meant it for thy good, Cain, and I am sorry I did thee any harm." Cain's countenance changed; the tears rolled down his cheeks; he took the money with many thanks; became a quiet man, and was not heard to swear again.—Selected.

Peace Preserved by Prayer.

Mr. Johnston, of West Africa, in one of his journals, relates the following of a very poor but pious native of that benighted country. Well, indeed, would it be if more enlightened and more favorably-circumstanced Christians would learn a lesson from this godly member of a despised race, and all do likewise. Such a practice faithfully observed would certainly lessen the number of family difficulties which are such fruitful sources of reproach and dishonor to the church. He says:

In visiting a sick communicant, his wife, who was formerly in our school, was present. I asked several questions, viz., if they prayed together, read the scriptures (the woman can read), constantly attended public worship, and lived in peace with their neighbors? All these questions were answered in the affirmative. I then asked if they lived in peace together. The man answered, "Sometimes I say a word my wife no like, or my wife talk or do what I no like; but when we want to quarrel, we shake hands together, shut the door, and go to prayer, and so we get peace again.

This method of "keeping peace," writes Mr. Johnston, "quite delighted me."

"If Thou Knewest the Gift of God."

Perhaps there is no cry more striking than that of the Eastern water-carrier. "The gift of God," he says, as he goes along with his water-skin on his shoulder. It is impossible to hear this cry without thinking of our Lord's words to the woman of Samaria: "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith unto thee, Give me to drink, thou wouldst have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water."

It is very likely that water, so valuable and so often scarce in hot countries, was, in those days, as now, spoken of as "the gift of God," to denote its preciousness;" if so, the expression would be exceedingly forcible to the woman, as well as full of meaning.

The water-carrier's cry in Egypt must always rouse a thoughtful mind to the recollection of the deep necessities of the people, of the thirst which they yet know not of, and the living water, which few, if any, have offered to the poor Moslems in that great city, and makes him wish and pray for the time when the sonorous cry of "ye aatee Allah" shall be the type of the cry of one bringing the living water of the gospel, and saying, "Behold the gift of God."—Selected by L. THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW-YORK, FEBRUARY 26, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Questions and Questioning.

We are often questioned on various subjects and answers asked through the Herald. Sometimes these questions are anonymous; at other times with the person's name. Anonymous communications, as a general rule, receive no attention by us. Others contain questions we have repeatedly answered, and do not choose to do so again just now. Beside, answers may be found in some of our printed works, named in our Catalogue.

Some questions are such that we cannot see the propriety of opening our columns to their discussion, because we regard them as not in the range of the objects for which the Herald of Life was established.

The following communication, with questions, is an interesting one; but some of the questions we cannot discuss, for the reason already assigned. It is from an unknown friend in Iowa, but accompanied by his name. We publish it, withholding his name, to let our readers see how minds abroad are exercised. We shall follow it with some remarks.

Geo. Storrs: Dear Sir: I would like to know the ordinances of your church. I belonged to the German Baptists, but was expelled for believing that the dead are unconscious between death and the resurrection. I have read a great many of your pamphlets. I am convinced that man is mortal, and that Christ will establish his kingdom on earth. There are quite a number here who believe as I do, and we are everywhere evil spoken of. I am determined to know the truth. I want you to answer the following questions.

1. When was your church first organized and by whom?

2. Why do you baptize by single immersion? did not the apostles baptize by trine immersion? does not history teach us so, and the commission Christ gave, Matt. xxviii., "Go into all the world," etc? If I was certain about the mode of baptism I would not care what they would call me. This is something that puzzles me.

3. Do you practice feet washing?

4. Do you observe the holy kiss?

5. Do you believe in going to war, voting?

Let me hear from you by letter if it is not too much trouble. Give me all the information that will be edifying to me. Yours in love.

1. On "Church Organizations," we have sent you our printed views; but will add, as a body of people we have no organization; i. e., according to the common idea of that matter. Believers in different places are left to adopt such measures, for the management of their local affairs, as they judge most for the good of the cause of truth among themselves. "Our church" acknowledges no other test of fellowship than that the person gives evidence that Christ has received him; and it makes no demand for attention to any outward "ordinances" for recognition of membership; they are at liberty to attend to such as they believe are required of them; but we expect them to do so in charity; not making their practice a rule for others, nor substitute outward observances for the inward life of God.

"Our church," then, was organized by its Head, Christ Jesus; and "the Lord added to it," and still adds to it, "such as are alive" by the power of his truth and spirit. Our work is not to organize a church or churches; but to "show men the way of life," and to urge them to accept Christ as the Life-giver; He takes care to organize them, in his own way, by "baptizing them by one Spirit into one body." No outward ordinance or organism can do this.

2. Personally, we do not baptize any one, in any way; not believing in the "commission" to any man, since the apostles, to do that thing. They had power to baptize with the Holy Spirit, by laying on their hands. No other men ever had that power: they were Christ's Legates; but had no power to communicate this prerogative to other men. Hence all Gospel baptism, since the apostles ceased their labors, has been by a direct communication of the Spirit by Christ himself, without human aid. No substitution of some outward ordinance will profit those who overlook or disregard this gospel baptism of the Spirit, by the Head of the church. For further remarks on this 2d question we refer you to our tract on the "Essential Baptism," which we have sent you.

3. Each one is left to act in that matter as he pleases, provided he acts in charity, not making his practice a rule for others.

4. The same answer as to question 3.

5. None among us that we know of, are in favor of war. As to voting: each one acts according to his own conviction of duty, answerable only to God.

We have answered you through the Herald, because we have no time to spend on private correspondence on matters of the character here presented.

A mistake.—By some means, in making up our paper last week, a short article got into the columns of "Letters and Extracts," which belonged somewhere else. This intruder follows a letter from J. P. Lamb: It should be stricken out.

Notice to Subscribers.—On account of the scarcity of money, we have to some extent departed from our rule of discontinuing the paper when the time to which the subscriber had paid arrived. We have in this volume, taken into account the difficulty of their raising funds and continued to send the paper to a considerable number who had paid nothing on this volume. Quite a number of these have responded, thanking us for the favor, and forwarding their subscription for the volume. Three numbers more will complete the first half of the present volume. Such as have not responded to this time, are urgently requested to renew their subscriptions at once, as we must take some action on such cases, soon. Let us hear from you as early as possible.

A New Proposition.

It is proposed to publish one thousand of the pamphlet, "Life from the Dead: or the Righteous only will live again," in a cheap form, for gratuitous circulation. The cost will be about $50; or, five cents per copy, counting nothing for the use of the stereotype plates of the Editor. The work to be printed by donations. Who will help in the matter? Please let us know immediately. The person furnishing funds can have the full amount returned in the work, if he chooses; or he may designate who he will have them sent to for distribution. When sent by mail, the postage will be added to the cost.

PLEDGES FOR THIS PURPOSE.

E. Wolcott, Oceanport, N. J.—Paid $2.
Edwin Haynes, " " " " $2.

To Samuel L. Walter: Will you please give us the name and post-office address of each person, and the amount to be applied to each out of the post-office order ($13) you sent us from Carlinville, Ill.? It is impossible for us to give the proper credits to subscribers without it; or, to tell how your account stands with this office. Also, please tell us where we shall send books, pamphlets, and tracts: as we wish to send some to you as a donation.

"Samuel T. Spear, D. D."

There have been some pretty severe criticisms in our paper on some of the sentiments promulgated by this gentleman. We are happy now to be able to speak of other matter from his pen which we highly approve. We had much rather speak in praise of any man's production than in condemnation, if we can do so in truth; and in the present case it gives us great pleasure to record the following sentiments from Dr. Spear. Thus he speaks:

"The independence of the pulpit is an essential element of its power. The minister whose great idea is to preach what, as he supposes, will be agreeable to the people, is too much concerned about his position, and perhaps his salary, to be a man of real power with the people. Acting upon this theory, he is quite sure to lose the vital inspiration of his work, often not knowing what to say, never saying anything with force, inviting attacks in all directions, and, if he be a man of any proper sensibility, thoroughly disgusted with himself. The independent and positive man, who honors his own convictions and has convictions to honor, if gifted with a fair amount of common sense, is, after all, the man whom the people are most likely to trust and respect. Every preacher will succeed on this basis."

A Delicate Subject.

Some weeks since we received a work entitled "Abuses of the Sexual Functions." We read it carefully through, and finally concluded to leave the work to be made public by advertising sheets, so we have passed it till now; but seeing some of our religious exchanges notice and advertise it without a note of dissent as to any of its contents, we feel constrained to say what we think of the work. We say, then,

1. The book is full of valuable information, such as all young persons, especially, ought to have in possession, and make a practical use thereof, thereby saving themselves untold sorrow, disease and sin.

2. The book must be read as the production of a man who has overstepped his calling in relation to the intercourse of men and their wives. He may be a "eunuch," for aught we know, of necessity or from principle; but that can give him no authority to set aside the advice and injunction of one who knew the mind of the Creator as well as the author of this book. We think any man or woman may as well learn of Paul the obligations and rights of married life as to look to the book of which we are speaking, for such information. We trust we shall not be considered indelicate if we quote the apostle's counsel in this matter; and those who are living in violation of this counsel will not take it amiss that we call attention to it in this connection. Here it is:

"It is good for a man not to touch a woman: nevertheless, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband. Let the husband render unto the wife due benevolence; and likewise also the wife unto the husband. The wife hath not power over her own body, but the husband: and likewise also the husband hath not power of his own body, but the wife. Defraud ye not one the other, except it be with consent, for a time, that ye may give yourselves to fasting and prayer; and come together again, that satan tempt you not for your incontinency." 1 Corth. vii., 1 to 5, and onward.

The book referred to sets at naught this apostolic counsel, most clearly. By not following this advice of Paul, thousands of families have been utterly overthrown, as to peace and harmony, and one or the other or both parties led to commit the very sin "in heart," if not in fact, that the apostle said every man should have his own wife, and every woman her own husband, "to avoid." We need not enlarge on the apostle's language; it is too plain to need comment. The man or woman that does not mean to follow it, let them remain single. But if married, neither party has the right to refuse to practice "due benevolence," nor to separate him or herself from the other "except it be with consent," and then only "for a time," etc. Let the motto in this matter, as in all others, be, "Temperate in all things."

With these remarks, or protest, we advise all who can get the book to read it; for, as we said, it has a vast amount of important information that ought to be in possession of all young people. Published by Dr. E. P. Miller, 15 Laight St., New York. Price $1.

Brief Items.

My preaching labors since my return from the West, in addition to the Springfield discussion, have been as follows: January 12th and evening of 13th, in Springfield Mass.; 19th in Salem; 26th, at the residence of our sisters, the Misses Hobbs, in Cambridgeport, Mass.; February 2d and evening of 5th, in Springfield; evening of the 6th, before the Conference in Westfield, Mass.; 9th in Salem; 16th, in New Haven, Conn. (Day's Hall); 23d, in Paterson, N. J. On Friday evening; February 21st, I took part, in Paterson, in a public discussion on Spiritualism. This evening I am to preach in that city on "the tendencies of Bible Materialism contrasted with those of the Immaterialism of modern orthodoxy, with notices of the recent utterances of Rev. Dr. Hornblower on the subject." I am also to speak in P. on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, and on next Sunday.

In Springfield the prosperity of the cause we love seems to have been greatly promoted by the erection of their commodious "Bethel Chapel." A similar undertaking began to be talked of in New Haven when I was there, and some of the brethren are strongly desirous that it shall succeed. A recent letter from Br. Aaron G. Hudson, of Minnesota, informs me that our Lake City friends are hoping before long to be able to have a house of worship. Br. H. also writes some very agreeable things about my paying them another visit, and making Lake City my home; but these matters we will not agitate seriously just now.

A letter received within a few days from Br. Stewart Carlisle renders it probable that Br. McClary and he will at an early day arrange for a course of lectures on the Life views in their city—Wilmington, Del. I shall endeavor to be ready to serve them whenever they say the word.

My Western friends, who have been expecting to hear from me by letter, will very soon have tangible proof that I have not forgotten them.

Sister Emeline T. Hobbs has written me an account of a lecture she heard by Ralph Waldo Emerson on the immortality of the soul. I shall offer her letter for publication in next week's paper. B. W.

A Fearful Responsibility.

Whenever a professed teacher of the way of salvation divinely appointed, assumes a position that is directly calculated to so mislead his fellow men as to peril their eternal all; we may well exclaim, fearful indeed is the responsibility such an one is taking on himself. The manner in which water baptism is taught and administered by some leading Advent preachers, is, in our opinion, ruinous to the eternal interests of a multitude of people. I saw in the World's Crisis not long since an appeal coming from the pen of a "revival" Advent preacher, the main gist of which amounted to this, "be baptized." I am, to some extent, at least, acquainted with the manner of labor adopted by the above named preacher, and am fully satisfied that the one great object with him is, to get those who come under the influence of his ministrations, "into the water." I do not object to baptism as an ordinance; so far from that I believe it to be an ordinance in the gospel church. But when you convey an idea, and impress that idea on the minds of those who come under your influence that merely being immersed in water seals their passport to eternal life, you are practicing on them a damning deception. And what short of this is it to tell people that water baptism will "wash away their sins?" That water baptism is "the law of remission." In the first place, if merely being immersed in water will, or can wash away our sins, what need of a Christ? In the second place, this sentiment reduces Christianity to a mere system of works. In the third place, its direct tendency is to destroy in the church of Christ the last vestige of spirituality remaining. In the fourth place, it undermines from the foundation all experimental, or vital, personal religion. And lastly it is a perfect system of consummate dogmatism; opposed alike to the tender sympathies that always animate the Christian heart, and the entire genius of the Christian system. Mark you, if it is by being plunged in water our sins are washed away—if this is God's plan, then of course none will ever get rid of their sins unless they are immersed in water. Again, if baptism is "the law of remission," it follows as a matter of course that all who neglect to comply with that condition must remain in their sins, and lose eternal life. Away with such monstrous absurdities. The Bible tells us plainly, that we are sanctified, justified, purified and saved, not by water, but by faith. If there is anything dear to the real Christian, it is the evidence through the indwelling of the Spirit of God, that he has been "renewed by the Holy Ghost;" "sealed by the holy Spirit of God." received "the earnest of the Spirit in his heart;" been "made partaker of the Holy Ghost;" that the same Spirit that "brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great Shepherd of the sheep," abides in him as a divine principle of resurrection power, a beginning in embryo, of that future life of immortality in glory, promised to all the good. But this water system comes in and offers a substitute for all things. And what is it? Simply being dipped in water! "Surely your turning of things upside down shall be esteemed as the potter's clay."

"What is our Hope?"

BY JAMES L. BOYD.

Br. Storrs: We often now-a-days, hear it alleged against those who believe in and advocate the view of Life future only for those who believe in and through him who is "The Way, the Truth, and the Life," that they ride this hobby to the exclusion of all other doctrines and views of the Scriptures, and that its advocates have entirely (or nearly so) lost sight of the immediate coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. But we would here say, that if any gainsayer or caviller of the blessed hope only knew, by experience, how greatly the lovers of Life only in Christ are rooted and grounded in this fundamental truth that maketh its possessors stand as it were in the "forefront" of truth's primary thought, they would probably learn a new wrinkle in their own experience; and that is that they would more intelligently see that the Life believer daily and hourly, in every eventuation of earthly history, and in every manifestation of his fellow man's doings, as natural man, a yet stronger incentive to "look unto Jesus," the "Author and Finisher of his faith;" and that because his life is "hid with Christ in God," and "that of all the members of the church of the First Born both of the quick and the dead, are waiting for, and hastening to the day of the "manifestation of the sons of God," when Jesus our Life-giver shall be revealed, "the second time," without a sin offering unto salvation. For truly, "Christ our life" is the one only hope of his church, and of the world (to come). They would thus know that Life believers are, of all others, the most clearly interested, in truthfully believing and looking for the "coming and kingdom of our (blessed) Lord Jesus Christ." And why? Because in and through him only have they any expectation of a future life and a residence in the new world, "wherein dwelleth righteousness." And, for one, I can aver, that never; in my twenty-five years' experience of looking for Jesus Christ's second advent, has my faith been more keenly alive to the proposition or more ardently desired the fruition of the Christian's hope than for the past nine years, since my mind became finally and without a doubt settled in a conviction that had exercised me several years previous to 1859, that believers in Christ only will rise again from the dead, and that those only in the quick who are looking for him can have a hope of partaking with him and his risen church in establishing and ordering his kingdom in the "world (or age) to come."

Another sneering objection is often repeated in my hearing and in that of others who are of like faith that we, as a people, are prayerless, or less given to prayer than are those who believe that the wicked must rise from the dead, to be "rewarded according to their works," that is to say, must be tormented in the "lake of fire" ere they are permitted to be consumed, destroyed, annihilated. I would remark as to that, it becometh not that any child of God should boast of the amount, length and breadth of his individual prayers or that of the "prayers of saints," of those who profess to "put on Christ;" but my experience has certainly not been to refrain from praying, "Thy kingdom come, our Father; and thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." And that, I apprehend is the gist and essence of all prayer, acceptable unto God, our Father. And to our Lord Jesus Christ those who have the earnest of the blessed hope and life in them, do know that their heart's great aspiration is, daily, and as they "see the day approaching," "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Let "the wickedness of the wicked be no more." "Take to thyself thy great power," etc.

In conclusion, Br. Storrs, we would say, that the beauty and excellence of Christ is best realized and apprehended by the lovers of Life only in him; for they feel that their "justification, sanctification and redemption" is bound up in him who is their only and chief glory; that in looking unto him for all that they have now, and expect to receive in the future, they do best accord unto "him, the glory due unto his holy name;" that "Life and immortality" shall alone come through him, because God, his Father and our Father, hath raised him (Christ), who is our Forerunner, from the dead, and given him the privilege to collect his "flock of sheep," his "friends," "who are called chosen and faithful," to him, being "the Way, the Truth, and the Life."

Cause and Effect.

BY ELD. J. PARRY.

Our orthodox Millennarian brethren, who believe in the immortality of the soul, and the partial reward of the righteous at death, have considerable trouble to account for the admitted fact that the Scripture doctrines of the resurrection of the dead, and the personal reign of Christ on the earth, are so little regarded by professing Christians in the present day. They seem at a loss to account for this indifference and neglect of doctrines so clearly revealed in the Bible. They have discovered a great many "fungi". [See Prophetic Times, Feb.] that have from time to time hindered the growth of the doctrines in question, and, as they think, well nigh destroyed their vitality in the church.

Have these estimable brethren never thought or conjectured that there may be other "fungi" nearer home than those they have mentioned, that have, for ages, proved still more fatal in their malignant influence on these doctrines than any they have yet discovered? The popular dogma of the immortality of the soul, and that death is the gate to endless joy in heaven—these are, without doubt, the deadly parasites that draw the life blood from the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, and render the second advent of Christ a useless incumbrance in modern theology; and, in consequence, these sacred truths are ignored or lost by the great majority of the so-styled Christian teachers in our day.

"A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," and a reward near at hand will naturally take precedence of one at an unknown distance.

What other "fungi" there may be to sap the truth of the gospel of the kingdom—and no doubt there are many—the one that, above and beyond all others, is accomplishing this diabolical purpose is that first lie of the serpent—"Ye shall not surely die." So long as this is believed and cherished in opposition to the sure word of prophecy, that "the soul that sinneth it shall die;" and the righteous will be recompensed in the earth, and not in heaven, at the resurrection of the just, and not before—so long as these traditions of men make the word of God of none effect, we cease to wonder at the present state of doubt and unbelief in the churches on these precious truths. As sure as effect follows cause, our orthodox friends must revise their theology from its very foundation before they can expect to see the full fruit of their labors in winning souls to love and long for the coming of Christ as their best and only hope for a future life.

This will be no easy task, as some of us have experienced in embracing these Scriptural views; they may lose their popularity; and friends and kindred may cast out their name as evil, but in these last days, when the love of many waxes cold, and men will not endure sound doctrine, it is no time to confer with flesh and blood; the day of the Lord is at hand, and we may yet be required to give up all for Christ, if we would be his disciples indeed. With some who love the praise of men more than the praise of God, the sacrifice of worldly gain and popularity may be to them the one thing needful that God requires to test their love and obedience to him. Cost what it will, let us remove every impediment out of the way that would retard the knowledge and belief of that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

A Negro Bishop.

In the third volume of Steven's History of the M. E. Church occurs the following narrative, illustrating the spirit and usefulness of the distinguished Bishop Asbury. It is beautifully suggestive of the good each Christian might do, by always being as ready as he and his black disciple to hand the Gospel torch to others. "Let him that heareth say come."

An affecting instance of not only his sympathy, but his usefulness in this respect, is related by a Southern itinerant, a fact which is historic in its character, as giving origin to a society of a hundred members. As he was journeying on the highway in South Carolina, he saw a slave called "Punch," fishing on the bank of a stream. The bishop stopped his horse and asked:

"Do you ever pray?"

"No, sir," replied the negro respectfully.

Asbury alighted, sat down by his side, and instructed and exhorted him. The poor man wept; the bishop sung a hymn, knelt with the astonished slave in prayer, and left him.

Twenty years passed, when the bishop was surprised by a visit from the negro, who had come over sixty miles to see him and thank him, for his well-directed instructions had been successful in his conversion. Forty-eight years after the first interview, the Methodist itinerant who relates the story was appointed to a plantation mission, where it had been reported, there were many colored but unrecognized Methodists. He found there "between two and three hundred members in society." "I met a herdsman" he writes, "and asked him if there was any preacher on the plantation."

"Is he a good preacher?"

"O yes," was the reply; "he word burn my heart!"

He showed me the house. I knocked at the door, and saw before me, leaning on a staff, a hoary headed-black man, with palsied limbs, but a smiling face. He looked at me a moment in silence; then raising his hands and eyes to heaven he said, "Now, Lord, lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation!" He asked me to take a seat. "I have," he said, "many children in this place. I have felt for some time past that my end was nigh. I have looked around to see who might take my place when I am gone. I could find none. I felt unwilling to die and leave them so, and have been praying to God to send some one to take care of them. The Lord sent you, my child; I am ready to go." Tears coursed freely down his time-shrivelled face.

It was "Punch." The bishop's passing word had raised up an apostle, who had, through all these years, been ministering to this neglected people.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM THOMAS R. CROCKER.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Feb. 20, 1868.

BR. STORRS: As you have seen fit to publish a letter of mine in your issue of 19th inst., headed "The World Upside down," I think that I ought to let you and your numerous readers know the result of the second interview.

I sent word to the beloved brother, who said so much about my teaching error, that I would meet him on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 16, at the church (House) where I had previously spoken, and, before his good people, discuss the question more fully (just what I wanted), and see if he or the Bible was in error; as I was very anxious to know how he could prove the Bible in error, and a false teacher, and not upset his own creed, which he pretends to prove is right by the same Bible.

At the appointed time, I was there, with my witnesses (the Bible), ready for trial; when, lo, and behold, the opposing council did not make his appearance; but I found another brother there in his place, who is now at school laboring for the D. D.ship. (Hope he may get it.) He wanted to preach and I wanted to hear; so we were both satisfied.

He selected for his text, "My departure is at hand;" and such a sermon you never heard: and when he had finished I do not believe there was a single man or woman in the congregation but what was ready to take him by the hand and bid him "good-by," and rejoice that the time of his "departure was at hand." (It is a pity that more of them are not "ready to depart" at least from the desk.)

After he had finished I asked permission to make a few remarks. I alluded to my former discourse; told them what I had heard had been said about it, etc. I requested the deacons of the church to ask the brother absent to take my discourse (I left it with them to give him), carefully study it, and make a note of every error; and when he had done so let me know, and I would come and defend the same or else be man enough to acknowledge that I was wrong.

I then took up the text the brother had spoken from and showed why Paul was ready for his departure, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." 2 Tim. iv., 7. The result of which was, "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." Verse 8. Who would give it to him? "The Lord, the righteous judge." Verse 8. When would he receive it? "At that day" when he shall appear. Verse 8. Also Luke i., 32 and 33. "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Why, Paul, do you believe he will come again? "For the Lord himself (personal) shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." 1 Thess. iv., 16.

How the second coming of Christ would benefit Paul. He had believed on the Son; and Christ had promised to give him everlasting life, and raise him up at the last day. John vi., 23.

The benefit of the resurrection. "They that are accounted worthy to obtain that world (not heaven, as some teach) and the resurrection from the dead, cannot die any more, ... and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke xx., 35, 36.

Well now, Paul, you have got immortality and eternal life. Where is your heaven? Why, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. v., 5.

After making a few remarks on each of the above quotations, I sat down; the meeting was closed; after which the deacons got together and decided that they would not allow their D. D. to make any more assertions that what had been said was false, until he had taken up the previous passages and proved them wrong. As I left the cry came, "Come over and help us." And so the work goes on. Give God the glory.

FROM CHARLES E. PHILLIPS.

NORTH HERMON, ME., Feb. 23, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Although a stranger to you in person, yet I feel that we are not strangers in the Lord, for the truth unites Christians wherever they are. It has been about one year since I embraced the truth of "No Life out of Christ." And I can say that never, until then, did I see the harmony of the Bible. Oh how blessed! What a loving God we have. I see beauty, love, blessedness, and glory in him now, as never before.

But again, when I see those who profess to love him, and look for his appearing soon, fight such plain, heavenly, Bible truths, I am led to inquire, Lord do they love thee as well as they do the traditions of men?

Here in Hermon there is quite a large body of Adventists; but out of them all there are but our or five who dare belive with all their hearts. It has been but a short time since I sent for the HERALD OF LIFE; but I can say, it is the most welcome visitor that I ever saw. I wish there were three a week. There are such heavenly truths with such a spirit of love, that no one can fail to see that it is meant to do good and spread the truth. Oh, how glad I am that I, poor and unworthy as I am, ever gave my heart to God, and feel willing to suffer with Jesus here so as to reign with him in the new earth when he comes. Thank Heaven for the light that we have down here. There always is a truth for the church to live on, and that will keep them when nothing else will. We see this even in the Advent body. Those who have rejected the "No Life out of Christ" have gone back, and got married to the governments of earth, and so got proud and lifted up. But I will dare to be true, knowing I have a work no other can do.

I would request the prayers of all the saints that I may live humbly, obey my heavenly Master, and meet all the pilgrims in that world of glory where death and sorrow never can come. Yours, in love.

FROM REUBEN CADWELL.

CORTLAND, N. Y., Feb. 10, 1868.

BR. STORRS: As Luke xx., 36 has been used to teach, by implication and contrast, a "second death," after a resurrection—and may perplex some, as it did me, I here suggest the thought that removed the difficulty from my mind, and may perhaps from some others.

The expression—"neither can they die any more," has been taken to teach that there are some in that state who would die more, or again. Now, to me it is very evident that the contrast is not with others in that state of being, but with those in this life. The text itself shuts out the possibility of any obtaining "that world, and the resurrection from the dead," but the "worthy;" and this would seem to contradict the above inference.

But to the question: Where was the dying continued and repeated, or dying "more?" It was where "they marry and are given in marriage." So that the first of seven brethren unto the last died, and afterward the woman of the seven husbands, also. But not only these but others continued to die. But those who obtain that state "are not given in marriage," "neither can they die any more," as here, where both continue to take place. Thus the text assuredly teaches, not the different condition of persons in "the resurrection," but between that state and the present.

Rev. xx., 6, has been used in a similar manner. "On such"—the resurrection saints—"the second death hath no power." Between whom is the contrast here? Between these saints and other persons raised, or to be raised, to life? I think not, for we have no account of any made alive from the dead being destroyed by it (unless the 15th verse is an exception) nor of any "cast" therein ever dying but once; and of death and hell not at all, unless ceasing to exist be dying.

That the verse referred to would be more in harmony with others, in the punishment of the wicked of that age (see xxi., 8; xxii., 15), than to suppose it designed to teach the utter destruction of all the living wicked and dead not found written in the book of life, without the possibility of a revival to life. And this was made manifest by the things written in the book. Whether "the lake of fire" is literal or a symbol, and used to represent destruction, or the instrument of destruction, by being cast therein, is not material to my purpose, since it is only liable to "hurt" those, or have "power" over none, except men in the flesh, or who are not overcomers. For on the resurrected the "second death hath no power."

FROM ELD. SAMUEL L. WALTER.

BUNKER HILL, ILL., Feb. 12, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I preached in Lebanon on the 25th and 26th of January, had a good time; the Lord was with us, and one brother gave in a good testimony, at the close in favor of Life only in Christ. It did me good. I hope the brethren will see the importance of committing themselves for the truth and sustaining it, let it cost what it will. To do so it is important that they should have "faith in God" which shall exclude doubt from the heart, and give assurance that God, who hung the sun, moon, and stars in their orbits, can remove mountains, as the Saviour has said; or, whatsoever is embraced in the prayer of faith; for the Saviour said to one, "Be it according to your faith." I believe we ask in accordance with the will of our Father, when we do not doubt in our heart, and believe we have the things we ask." God's will is to give us just what we want, and believe for. "Thy faith hath made thee whole." We cannot fail when we "Trust in the Lord forever; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength."

We have no room for doubt; because, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him freely give us all things?" I want to cease from dishonoring God by my doubts; and have the faith that rests on God's word; and shall be reckoned for righteousness. I pray the Lord to help me, and the host of God to be strong in faith "in him that raiseth up Jesus our Lord from the dead."

I started the 27th on foot (it was snowing, and the roads very rough) to go twenty miles. I found it very hard to make my way. I became wet with perspiration. My clothes and boots were wet also. After travelling about sixteen miles I was quite exhausted. I got a chance to ride four miles. I became cold; my boots froze and my feet were frost bitten, so that when I got out of the wagon I could hardly walk. It was near an hour before I could get my boots off. I found a resting place with a Methodist brother's family, by the name of Lewis. They were very kind. May the Lord bless them. On the 28th I started again to go 18 miles. I was unable to perform the journey. I travelled over twelve miles by one o'clock. I stopped to warm and rest me at a house in Ridgly. They gave me a good warm dinner. The Lord bless them for their kindness. When I started again, I found that I could not walk, so a gentleman took me to the railroad station, where I had to wait till nine o'clock, P. M., to go five miles, to Bunker Hill, where I rested for a day, and then went to Br. R. Gibbs', where I have ever found a good home and kind friends; and Mrs. Walter was with them. I expect to meet this family in the kingdom. After recruiting a while, I went to Clyde. I found the Baptists holding a protracted meeting. I hope good will be done. I did not attempt to hold meeting, but went to theirs. Sabbath morning Eld. Brown gave me some attention. His text was, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness," etc. He said his text proved the immortality of the soul, because mortal could not hunger and thirst after righteousness; and that mortal could never be immortal; and the Scriptures taught the soul was immortal and deathless." All this, when Paul says, "This mortal shall put on immortality." But, thank God, the truth had got such hold on the minds of many, that they said to me, as I passed them, "This mortal shall put on immortality." I tell you the leaven of God's word is at work. I next went to Carlinville, and there found the Adventists holding meeting. The Baptists had kindly let them use their house. They had a good hearing. Br. Calkins came out square on the doctrine of Life only in Christ; and immortality put on when raised from the dead, and the near approach of God's kingdom. I gave away a large number of tracts "No 1. Questions on Immortality." I saw that the doctrine was agitated among the Baptists on Sunday evening, before their meeting commenced. Sabbath morning I went out three miles and spoke on, "When Christ who is our Life shall appear," etc. One brother said while I was speaking, he saw that, No Christ, no life and no resurrection. I think the truth is working like leaven hid in meal. I expect, when I go there again to do all that I can to show that if men are not in Christ they cannot get life. God's penalty is death; not torment. May the Lord speed the right, and let his truth triumph. I am on my way to Lebanon and Centralia.

I am anxious to settle down in some place which I can call home. I do not like being houseless. I dare not rent a house without a prospect of paying for it; so we have lived, for the last eight months, wherever we found a place; but so far the Lord has provided. Yours in hope of life.

FROM T. W. WRIGHT.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, Feb. 15, 1868.

DEAR BR. WENDELL: I redeem my promise to write to you; your visit to us, and preaching of the truths we love, will always be remembered with pleasure, yet we thirst for more. Would that, each Lord's day, we could meet and talk together of things that accompany salvation.

Your preaching has, I feel assured, not been in vain. I have talked with some who manifest a better spirit as I try to tell them of our blessed hope, while, on the other hand, bigots are more contentious—a good sign, showing that you must have hit the mark. Said one to me, "Your Elder is a disturber of the peace of the church." I remarked that if the peace he spoke of was of that kind we find coupled with "safety," it had better be disturbed.

Onward in hope shall be our watchword. Clouds of error shut out the light of our dear Master's return. Be it our aim to clear them away, that the sun of righteousness may shine in on the church.

I commend you to the grace of our precious Life-giver. "Be not weary in well doing," said my wife. "I have such excellent yeast; it does not operate very soon, but when it does, I have to hasten and bake it, and see what fine bread is the result." A cheering thought here, my Brother. The leaven of life in Christ we are infusing in the mass will yet work with a power that truth alone possesses. God is leading the heralds of his pure truth "in paths they know not, in a way they have not known." He will yet "make darkness light before them," and crooked places straight. Peace be with you. Greeting in the Lord, to your family, and all that love our Lord in sincerity. Write to me. In brotherly love, yours.

NATHAN CALL, Durham, Province of Quebec, writes: My paper has failed to reach me for four weeks. We get no gospel preaching here only what we glean from your paper, and it seems a long time to wait for one encouraging word to cheer our heart. We have a plenty of fire-and-brimstone preaching. I sent your book, "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST," to our preacher. He read a little and tossed it aside. It was enough for him to know it was "turning the world upside down."

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We have taken all the care possible that your paper should be properly directed, and we have placed it in the Post Office, here, with our own hands, every week. Where the fault is we cannot tell. We have remailed you the four missing papers, and prepaid the postage.

DANIEL M. MILLER, Adell, Wisconsin, writes: I take much comfort in reading the HERALD OF LIFE; especially your sermons, and some other matters, much more than I do in hearing such preaching as we generally have, spiced strongly with endless torments. I had begun to disbelieve such doctrine, and to think it could not be consistent with the love of God to his creatures. I thank him, and give glory to his name, that my eyes have been opened by a brother's putting into my hands some of your works on the subject. I hope you may have a long life, and prosper in spreading the light through the world, and that it may be the means of opening blind eyes and leading men in the right path to worship God, and to cease charging him with being a demon. Do you have your paper printed in German? I want some German tracts on the subject. I am now in my 68th year, and if I understand you right, your church is the first I have found that I could unite with—Life only in Jesus.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We regret exceedingly that, as yet, we have no German tracts or papers on the Life theme. We hope some remedy will be found for this lack of service, among that people, soon.

As to our "church," our brother is, doubtless, laboring under the impression that we are doing as all sects do, i. e., organize churches on our peculiar faith. Personally, we have nothing to do with any such business, and never have had, since we openly espoused the glorious truth of ONE HEAD, ONE LIFE-GIVER, and "NO LIFE OUT OF CHRIST." Our object is not to organize a church, or churches, but to spread the truth everywhere, and in all places. Our church is the one church, "the body of Christ;" into which Christ alone can induct any man, by imparting to him the Holy Spirit of God, which is the baptism by Christ, and the only method whereby a perishing child of Adam can become a true member of "the church of God." All such persons, who are of this church, by this means, are of the "one body of Christ;" and, collectively, constitute the only church known of God or of the Bible. All others are sectarian machines. Yet, many in those establishments are of the true church, but are in bondage through the unavoidable circumstances in which they have had their birth and education. Such we pity and pray for, and strive to cause the light to shine on their pathway, that they may be delivered from the grievous slavery wherein they are held, knowing by our own experience in years past, that their subjection to such views of the character and government of God, is as near being in a theological hell as any false position can place a living man. May the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, the LIFE-GIVER, soon shine on their darkness and bring them into the freedom which Jesus gives to such as accept him as their only hope of life, future and eternal.

A SELECTION.

THE following glimpse of Christian experience, from the pen of "B. S.," in the Watchman and Reflector, will be appreciated by those who are endeavoring to walk by faith, not by sight. L. J. B.

MY PATH.

I have long been a child of Providence, led by an invisible hand in a way not of my own choosing, and dependent at every step for guidance. Often it has been sinuous, and its curves and angles and zigzags have been perplexing to a mind intent on progress. Much of it has been up-hill and as much down-hill, scarcely any part of it over a plain. It has ever been narrow, skirted on either side with a thorny hedge, wounding me when I have deviated. It never has been light far in advance of my movements. Seldom have I been able to see farther than just enough to take one step more; but, generally, as I have taken that step, I have found the gloom clear away for another. If at any time the darkness has not immediately retired, and the next step has seemed impossible, then, by waiting a little and praying for light, the way has opened for that step; occasionally, however, I have not been permitted to wait, for there has been a pressure from behind urging me onward, and a voice before me has bidden, "Go forward," and then, by raising my foot and setting it down in the direction of the pressure and the voice, I have found it resting on something that would bear me. Thus have I moved, slowly but safely, along my pilgrimage, never able to do more than present duty, and compelled to leave the future to my Guide and Provider.

And what more do we need in our journey heavenward than a knowledge of what to do next? Who of us could use more? The only question for practical life pertains to the next step. Let that be taken as God directs; what more or better can any man do?

Many disadvantages would have accrued from knowing more in my path than the next step. Had I foreseen some of the rough and thorny ground I have actually trodden, I should have been dismayed and my courage would have failed. Could I now see what may be fact, that after a few more steps my journey would be abruptly terminated, I might be unfitted to take them. Were I to foreknow that my path is to be greatly extended, might I not faint in weariness and discouragement?

To the Christian pilgrim, who has heaven in prospect, a knowledge of the temporal future would be an embarrassment.

> Thus step by step I onward go,
> Not looking far before;
> Trusting that I shall always have
> Light for just one step more.

A MINISTER once prayed in the pulpit, that "the Lord would bless the congregation assembled, and that portion of it which was on the way to church, and those who were at home getting ready to come, and that in his infinite patience he would grant the benefit of the benediction to those who reached the house of God just in time for that." The clergyman suceeded in breaking up a bad habit which had resisted all legitimate appeals.

DR. LATHROP was a man of generous piety, but much opposed to the noisy zeal that seeketh the praise of man. A young divine who was much given to enthusiastic cant, one day said to him—"Do you suppose you have any real religion?" "None to speak of," was the excellent reply.

A MAN'S true prosperity often begins when he is said to be ruined, and he is ruined when he is said to be prospering.

AN austere sanctimoniousness in a minister or layman of the church, is as repulsive to people as a ghost is frightful.

THOUGH charity may make your purse lighter one day, yet it will make it heavier another.

LET every minister, while he is preaching, remember that God is one of his hearers.

LIBERALITY does not consist in good words, but in good works.

OBITUARY.

FELL ASLEEP in Jesus, Jan. 21, 1868, ADDIE P., eldest daughter of Brother and Sister J. H. MORGAN, of Sutton, N. H. Aged twenty-five years and five months.

Over ten years of close intimacy with the deceased and her family, coupled with her dying request that I perform this last sad service for my friend, induces me to pen a few lines in memory of one, whom to know, and to be capable of appreciating, was to love.

Nature had endowed Addie with more than average mental capacities, but while yet in her youth, ere they were fully developed, consumption with a sly and stealthy step began to "hunt for the precious life."

But it was not her mental endowments which formed her chief excellence. Mere wealth of intellect can never so endear its possessor to the hearts of friends. A fine sense of honor, a clear intuitive perception of right, and a heart full of tenderest sympathy for every form of suffering, these were the qualities which left her with few equals, and certainly without a superior, in the wide circle of my acquaintance. In vain the sophist spun his misty web, thinking thereby to obscure the path of justice or of right. Thinner than gossamer it seemed to her clear moral vision; and her penetrating glance dispersed at once its thousand bewildering subtleties.

Addie was an uncompromising friend of right. The stern old maxim, "Let justice be done though the heavens fall," would have found an answering chord in her heart, and as it seems to be a law of mind that our abhorrence of evil is in exact proportion to our appreciation of the good, she became the sworn foe of wrong and oppression, in all its forms and phases, as a matter of necessity.

Seldom, or never, did she commit the grave mistake, so common in our day, that of judging of the character of an action, by the social position of the actor; consequently she had no honeyed words with which to gloss over vice in high places. She judged by a purer standard, and the higher the station occupied, the more sternly was its occupant held to that standard; on the principle that our responsibilities always keep pace with our facilities for knowing the good and right way. But while these noble traits of character commanded our admiration, it was her outgushing sympathy for the miseries of suffering humanity which the most effectually won our hearts. Such sympathy the poorest beggar, old, ragged, and forlorn, shared equally with the less revolting forms of woe: and never did she appear more lovely, than when, with moistened eye, she strove to wipe the tear from sorrow's cheek, or pluck the cruel thorns from misfortune's pillow.

With a mind and heart thus constituted, it is not strange that the great truths which distinguish us as a people, should have early engaged her attention. Her father, in his letter announcing her death, says: "Addie embraced Christ at twelve years of age, when she thought as a child, and understood as a child; but the knowledge and judgment of riper years imparted strength and symmetry to her faith and hope." To be once rationally convinced of a truth, amounted with her to a life-long conviction. For nearly eight years (if my memory serves me) the disease which terminated her frail existence was slowly, but surely, draging her to the tomb. The tender assiduous care of parents and sister, though it doubtless, delayed, could not prevent the final result. Many times during those long years of wasting and decay, it was my privilege to be with her; but for an account of the closing scene I am indebted to the letter referred to. From it I learn that her last hours were full of suffering, and also of consolation. With pressed and difficult breathing, swollen feet, sore mouth, and a raging thirst, for five consecutive days her emaciated form had to be supported in the arms of her friends; but her trust in God was firm and abiding; and amid her sufferings she would bless the Lord, and triumphantly exclaim, "The blood of Jesus Christ has washed me clean; bless his holy name!" "Her countenance (writes her stricken parent) continually bore the expression of suffering, appearing almost unnatural until about the last half-hour, when we laid her back on the pillow. The rest was as calm and peaceful as an infant going to sleep. Her distorted countenance changed to a sweet smile, which sat serene upon her lovely face, and told us Judah's Lion had wrenched the prey from the monster's grasp, and committed it to angels' keeping." By her request, Elder J. Couch preached the funeral discourse, to a large assembly, from 1 Thess. iv., 13–19, a text of her own selection. Thus pass the good and beautiful away.

> We saw her slowly wasting day by day,
> Our Addie:
> And knew ere long she'd pass from earth away,
> Our darling Addie!
> We knew it—yet our hearts bled none the less,
> O, Addie!
> We only felt the more thy preciousness,
> Our darling Addie!
> Farewell! a crown of life is waiting thee,
> Dear Addie;
> We'll meet again in immortality,
> Our darling Addie!

The Guests.

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in unto him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Rev. iii. 20.

Speechless sorrow sat with me,
I was sighing wearily;
Lamp and fire were out; the rain
Wildly beat the window pane.
In the dark we heard a knock,
And a hand was on the lock;
One in waiting spake to me,
Saying sweetly,
"I am come to sup with thee."

All my room was dark and damp,
"Sorrow," said I, "trim the lamp,
Light the fire and cheer thy face,
Set the guest-chair in its place."
And again I heard the knock;
In the dark I found the lock—
"Enter, I have turned the key,
Enter, stranger,
Who art come to sup with me!"

Opening wide the door, he came,
But I could not speak his name;
In the guest-chair took his place,
But I could not see his face:
When my cheerful eye was beaming,
When my little lamp was gleaming,
And the feast was spread for thee,
Lo! my Master
Was the guest that supped with me.

A Story for Boys.

Many years ago a celebrated Italian artist was walking along the streets of his native city, perplexed and desponding in consequence of some irritating circumstance of misfortune, when he beheld a little boy of such surprising and surpassing beauty that he forgot his own trouble and gloom in looking upon the almost angel face before him.

"That face I must have," said the artist, "for my studio. Will you come to my room and sit for your picture, my little man?"

The little boy was glad to go and see the pictures and curious things in the artist's room; and he was still more pleased when he saw what seemed to be another boy that looked just like himself smiling from the artist's canvas.

The artist took great pleasure in looking at that sweet face. When he was troubled, irritated, or perplexed, he lifted his eyes to that lovely image on the wall, and its beautiful features and expression calmed his heart and made him happy again. Many a visitor to his studio wished to purchase that lovely face; but, though poor, and often in want of money to buy food and clothes, he would not sell his good angel, as he called this portrait.

So the year went on. Oftentimes as he looked at the face on the glowing canvas, he wondered what had become of that boy.

"How I should like to see how he looks now! I wonder if I should know him? Is he a good man and true, or wicked and abandoned? Or has he died and gone to a better land?"

One day the artist was strolling down one of the five walks of the city, when he beheld a man whose face and mien were so vicious, so almost fiend-like, that he involuntarily stopped and gazed at him.

"What a spectacle! I should like to paint that figure, and hang it in my studio opposite the angel boy," said the artist to himself.

The young man asked the painter for alms, for he was a beggar as well as a thief.

"Come to my room and let me paint your portrait and I will give you all you ask," said the artist.

The young man followed the painter, and sat for a sketch. When it was finished, and he had received a few coins for his trouble, he turned to go; but his eye rested upon the picture of the boy; he looked at it, turned pale, and then burst into tears.

"What troubles you, young man?" said the painter. It was long before the young man could speak; he sobbed aloud, and seemed pierced with agony.

At last he pointed up to the picture on the wall, and in broken tones, which seemed to come from a broken heart, said:

"Twenty years ago you asked me to sit for a picture, and that angel face is the portrait. Behold me now, a ruined man; so bloated, so hideous, that women and children turn away their faces from me; so fiend-like that you want my picture to show how ugly a man can look. Ah! I see now what vice and crime have done for me."

The artist was amazed. He could scarcely believe his own eyes and ears.

"How did this happen?" he asked.

The young man told his sad and dreadful story; how, being an only son and very beautiful, his parents petted and spoiled him; how he went with bad boys and learned all of their bad habits and vices and came to love them; how, having plenty of money, he was enticed to wicked places until all was lost, and then, unable to work and ashamed to beg, he began to steal and was caught and imprisoned with the worst criminals; came out still more depraved to commit worse crimes than before; how every bad deed he performed seemed to drive him to commit a worse one, till it seemed to him that he could not stop till brought to the gallows.

It was a fearful tale, and brought tears into the artist's eyes. He besought the young man to stop, offered to help him, and tried his best to save him. But, alas! it was too late. Disease contracted by dissipation, soon prostrated the young man, and he died before he could reform. The painter hung his portrait opposite that of the beautiful boy; and when visitors asked him why he allowed such a hideous-looking face to be there, he told them the story, saying, as he closed, "Between the angel and the demon there is only twenty years of vice."

The lesson of this tale is the tale itself. You who read it can tell what it is. Think of it often, and heed it always.

Photographic Pictures of God. Or, God as Set Forth by Three Classes.

The First; or, Orthodox Picture.

Mr. Benson, an eminent English minister, in a sermon on "The Future Misery of the Wicked," says, "God is present in hell, in his infinite justice and almighty wrath, as an unfathomable sea of liquid fire, where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture . . . . the presence of God in his vengeance scatters darkness and wo through the dreary regions of misery. As heaven would be no heaven if God did not there manifest his love, so hell would be no hell, if God did not there display his wrath. It is the presence and agency of God, which gives everything virtue and efficacy; without which there can be no life, no sensibility, no power. God is therefore himself present in hell, to see the punishment of these rebels against his government, that it may be adequate to the infinity of their guilt; his fiery indignation kindles, and his incensed fury feeds the flame of their torment, while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being, and render all their powers most acutely sensible; thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep. He will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity of their nature will admit." ("How long, O Lord, how long?") Mr. Benson, answers: "So far from the justice of God making any approach toward satisfying itself, the sinner outstrips justice in the race." He says: "They must be perpetually swelling their enormous sum of guilt, and still running deeper, immensely deeper in debt to divine and infinite justice. Hence, after the longest imaginable period, they will be so far from having discharged their debt . . . . they will find more due than when they first began to suffer." Henry, in his commentary, says: "By the damnation of the wicked the justice of God will be eternally satisfying, but never satisfied." God is love. God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish.

The Second; or, Mortal Resurrection Picture.

The Mortal Resurrectionists say, Man is an animal by nature, and of himself has no immortality; and although in death he is like the beasts that perish; and, as the wise man says, "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth the beasts, even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; so that man (in death) hath no preeminence above the beast, for all is vanity; all go unto one place: all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Eccl. iii., 19, 20. Here man is said to be vanity and dies like the beast; and as the wicked have no life-giving power in them, to quicken them into life eternal, God, in order to disply his wrath, and amuse and satisfy the righteous that he has done right, and also to let these poor wretches see what they have lost, gathers up their dust and makes them mortals again; re-creates our fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, and children, in order that we, who may be so fortunate as to attain unto eternal life, may have the satisfaction of seeing these relatives and friends suffer the anguish that God is pleased to visit on them; for, does not Paul say, "But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness; indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil: of the Jew first, and also upon the Gentile?"

"Where is the retribution," they ask, "the Bible speaks of, unless you bring these sinners back again? How will you have weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth? And how will you reward every man according to his deeds? God," say they "is a just God, and his justice demands that they shall be brought forth to suffer for their sins. Death," they say "is no punishment at all: the righteous die as well as the sinner; and when the sinner is dead, he will not feel the punishment! No, no; they must be brought forth to the day of wrath! Is not our God better than the orthodox God? Their God is never satisfied, but always tormenting. Whereas our God only wants to be satisfied; and when he has held them over the fire long enough to let all the redeemed see that his justice is satisfied, then he will let them drop into the fire, and so end their misery. Verily, our God is love."

The Third; or, Bible Picture.

The first instance we have of God's display of love to man, was that to Adam. God said to Adam, when giving him the law, Thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou shalt eat of it, thou shalt surely die. And God to make good his word, and carry out his love to the man whom he had placed on trial, after he had eaten of the forbidden fruit, displayed his goodness and love to the man. But how? "And now, lest he put forth his hand, and take of the tree of life, and eat and live forever: therefore, Jehovah God sent him forth from the garden;" away from the Tree of Life. Jehovah was not willing that this man should suffer one day longer than the penalty required, which was during his natural life.

The second instance of the display of Jehovah's love was that to Cain, after he had killed his brother. The Lord said unto him, Where is thy brother? Cain denied the crime; thereby making himself a liar as well as a murderer. The Lord said unto him, "And now art thou cursed from the ground, which hath opened its mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hands. When thou tillest the ground it shall not henceforth yield to thee its strength: a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth." Surely, all this could be accomplished this side of a resurrection. And Cain said to Jehovah "My iniquity is greater than that it may be forgiven." (Bernard's Bible.) "Behold," says Cain, "thou hast driven me out from the face of the earth; and from thy face shall I be hidden" (that is, I shall have no protector in thee) "and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth . . . . and every one that findeth me will slay me." And Jehovah said to him . . . . "Whoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him seven fold." God did not want any help to carry out his own punishment, and therefore gives Cain the assurance that he should suffer no more than the penalty. "God is love."

We find a little further on in the history of our world, when the whole human family were becoming wicked in the sight of God, he makes this declaration, "And every living thing that I have made will I destroy" (blot out) "from off the face of the earth, and every living thing: all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was upon the dry land died."

Here God displayed his mercy and love to a wicked world when they neglected the preaching of Noah, and would not listen to the offer of mercy that God saw proper to make them. He blotted them out of existence. And now, in this our age, when the world has become corrupt before God, and is about to perish, God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. "He that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day."

Man is mortal, and like the beasts that perish; yea, "like sheep they are laid in the grave, and death shall feed upon them." But thanks be unto our God, there is a way of escape. "I," saith Jesus, "am the resurrection and the life." "Your fathers ate manna in the desert, and are dead." They went down into sheol, God's resting place for the wicked. "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him . . . . And as I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, shall live by me." But as the wicked have no Christ to dwell in, they dwell in the grave. Our God is a God of love. Look on these pictures and choose ye which of them ye will have.

Jacob Grim.

Remarks on Isaiah XXVI., 19.

By Reuben Cadwell.

I have thought it might be for my benefit, and for some others, to present some evidences that Isaiah xxvi., 19, teaches the "raising up of the tribes of Jacob, and restoring the preserved of Israel." If any have something better to show that this is said of all the righteous dead, of whom "God is their God," it would gratify me to see it in the Herald.

The prophet had been speaking in the 16th, 17th, 18th verses of a time of trouble in which Israel had been brought to a painful sense of their helpless state, and unprofitable service to God, in fulfilling their mission to the nations of the earth, in their salvation, and in the overthrow of those wicked nations, which they had been formerly ordered to destroy, lest they should bring them into bondage, lead them into idolatry, cause them to adopt the customs of the heathen, and therefore forsake the God of Israel. "Neither have the inhabitants of the world fallen," I take to be an acknowledgment of their failure in carrying out this heaven-ordained mission in order to bless the nations of the earth. Psa. cvi. 34–43. In this state of discouragement from want of power, and spiritual and national life, the prophet, by the spirit, assures them in the language of the text, "Thy dead men (Israel dead) shall live; together with my dead body (Judah's dead dody, of which the prophet was a member, and associates himself) shall arise."

Let us now consider the language and beautiful metaphors brought forward in the latter part of this verse, showing who are most probably meant. "Awake ye that dwell in dust." This is quite as applicable, if not more so, to the condition of Israel, before described, as to the literally dead awaking, that "dwell in dust." That to these there may be some things which in part agree, and with the remainder of the verse, but in other respects the agreement is very doubtful. 1. The reason given for awaking, "for thy dew is as the dew of herbs;" or as dew to herbs of the earth, so shall, etc. "And the earth shall cast out her dead." The fruitfulness of the seed of Jacob is brought to view in verse 15, and is here represented by thy dew, which causes to grow, bring forth, and manifest vegetation out of the earth. So their fruitfulness being intimately connected with the earth and "in blessings of heaven above, and of the depth beneath," should cause it to cast out from obscurity a multitude of people united in one great and flourishing nation in the midst of the earth." That "thy dew" should be taken for fruitfulness and literal offspring (Hosea xiv., 5) rather than the spiritual children or those who sleep in Christ, looks to me most probable. Although Psa. cx., 3, in the marginal reading, conveys the idea of Christ, that "more than the womb of the morning, thou hast the dew of thy youth," or, "thy people"—the offspring of thy youth, are more in number than the dew drops from the womb of the morning. But why should this thought, joyful as it is, be made the main reason, or cause of their awaking?" and especially the earth be represented as casting them out, and as "her dead," which can only harmonize with the ideas before suggested. Verses 20 and 21 seem to confirm the idea that the prophet had been speaking of the two houses of Israel as having been dead, but now as living; or to be made alive, but not as yet out of the reach of trouble. For he says, "Come, my people, enter into thy chambers . . . . for the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; the earth also shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her slain." This language, to me, is inapplicable to immortal saints, caught up to meet the Lord in the air. For they are incapable of being hurt And if it is applied to living saints, who may escape the things that shall come on the earth, yet these are not all of God's people; and if they are his people, they have not much to do, as it appears to me, about entering their chambers and shutting their doors about them; for the hope of the quiet that would follow after the "indignation" should be past.

Allusion, I think, is here made to the children of Israel's entering their blood-consecrated chambers as a token of faith in the covenant of life, when the destroying angel smote all the first born of Egypt. It is likely the text refers to their living in similar circumstances in the future, and will be saved by similar means.

Perhaps they may enter these "chambers" when they "flee to the valley of the mountain," and shall find him who shall be to them a "covert from the wind and tempest," and the "blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall." If I am not mistaken, the "dead," and the "slain" in the last clause are the same people, a "people" formerly "trodden down" and "slain" by their enemies; of which enemies, when "the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth," he will require the blood of that people. And hence the earth will disclose (their, or) her blood, and no more cover her slain," but "cast out her dead." Isa. xviii., 2; xxvii., 7. May the Spirit lead us into all truth, that we may be sanctified by it, through the Lord Jesus. Amen.

A Spiritual Body.

The apostle Paul in discoursing on the resurrection says with reference to the body of the believer, "It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body," 1 Cor. xv., 44, from which some have been led to deny the corporiety of the redeemed in glory—confounding "spiritual" with "spirit." The impropriety of this is seen, however, when we turn to other passages where the same word occurs. Thus, speaking of men in the flesh, the apostle says: "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; . . . . but he that is spiritual judgeth [or discerneth] all things." 1 Cor. ii., 14, 15. "If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord." 1 Cor. xiv., 37. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness." Gal. vi., 1. In these texts the ones addressed, or spoken of, were not spirits, but persons actuated, "or led by the Spirit of God." See Rom. viii., 4, 6, 14. The same term is also used among ourselves, as when we say of a devout Christian, "he is very spiritual." A "spiritual body" is not therefore a spirit, but a "body" made alive, actuated and controlled by the spirit of God: as it is written. "Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. . . . And shall put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live; and I shall place you in your own land." Ezek. xxxvii. 12, 14. "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii. 11. "Who shall change our vile body [literally, our body of humiliation, or humbled body], that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Philip. iii., 21. We are waiting, therefore, not for the destruction, but, "for the redemption of our body." Rom. viii., 23.

The probability is, that the spiritual body will be composed of matter similar to that which composes our bodies now, but greatly and wonderfully changed, purified and beautified. The wonderful and beautiful transformations that matter is capable of, are truly amazing. I have before me, say, the unsightly slime or ooze from a swamp or morass—also a beautiful, full-blown rose. What a contrast! But let each be analyzed and it will be found that precisely the same elements are in both; farther, by planting a tiny seed in the first, you may occasion its transformation into the second.

I hold in one hand a piece of pure charcoal, in the other a diamond. One is soft, black, crumbling, little worth. The other hard, beautiful, glistening, the most valuable and coveted thing of earth. And yet, chemical analysis shows the two to be of precisely the same materials, but differently arranged.

As God fashions the most exquisitely beautiful things from shapeless, unsightly dust—the rose, the lily, or the diamond—so from dust, even like that in our own bodies now, he can fashion bodies like the glorious form of our Saviour—bodies fit for the beautiful heaven of bliss, love, and purity where he dwells. "It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory."

As long as the sea was calm his disciples suffered Christ to sleep; but when they were like to be drowned, they awoke him with a "Master, save us; we perish."

From Samuel S. Call.

Elliotta, Minn., Feb. 11, 1868.

Br. Storrs, and all the Dear Brethren scattered abroad: As our conferences and social meetings (with most of us) are through the Herald of Life, I take this method to let you know my whereabouts; and that I still live, by the spirit of God that dwelleth in me.

I arrived here Jan. 26th, very tired with my journey, and nearly sick. By a short rest I have improved in this healthy country. There is a beautiful, clear, and healthy air here.

Since I have become able to travel, I have visited most of the neighbors, preached four times, held one public discussion with Elder Rathburn, he affirming that the wicked dead must be made alive, by Christ, and suffer the second death; in order to receive the due reward for their sins; as their first death was to atone for (or, in consequence of) Adam's transgression. I took the negative, as I was the challenged party. I showed the different judgments God had executed from time to time upon the children of men: commencing with Adam, following down to the destruction of the Jews. I then showed them what Paul said in 1 Corth. x., how they suffered these judgments on account of their own sins, and they were set forth as ensamples (or, examples) on whom the ends of the world are come. We spoke thirty minutes each, and three times each.

I showed them, in the second place, what Christ came into the world for; that he came to seek and to save that which was lost; that he came not to destroy men's lives but to save them; and that God gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life: and that if they did not believe on the Son, they shall not see life.

I showed the testimony of the prophets, Christ and his apostles, establishing the non-resurrection of the wicked dead by unimpeachable witnesses; and that Christ said, those that were raised were equal to the angels, and were the children of God, being the children of the resurrection; and that he also said, Luke xx., 36, "Neither can they die any more;" and that "the world seeth me (Christ) no more." But to his disciples, "Ye see me," or shall see me, "because I live, ye shall live also." Why? Because, "As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself;" and "whomsoever he will, he quickeneth." Whom will he quicken? Whomsoever the Father willeth; for he came down from heaven, not to do his own will, but the will of the Father which sent him. John v., 30, and John vi., 38. "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting Life; and I will raise him up at the last day." "And this is the will of him that sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." Here we find to whom he will give life, and when he gives it; and the reason is, that he should lose nothing. This agrees with Paul, 1 Corth. xv., 23, "Every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits; afterward, they that are Christ's at his coming," which is the only order given.

I feel to thank God, that the light has been presented (although done by one of his weak searvants) and the true teaching of the word presented for the consideration of the people. It has already begotten an inquiry into the word, to see if these things are so; and they are daily calling on me to ask questions concerning this new doctrine; yet there are some who have heard of the doctrine of Life only in Christ; that are not yet fully acquainted with it.

I feel to thank God, that when prejudice and the traditons of the elders are laid aside, the task is very easily accomplished. The hardest part is to make men see that they are following traditions, thereby making the word of God of none effect. But the servants of God must be patient and continue in well-doing, and they will reap in due season, if they faint not.

As the result of my labors here, my brother-in-law and sister have embraced the doctrine of Life only in Christ; which fills my heart with joy and thanksgiving to him who doeth all things well. I also send you two new subscribers. My post-office address, for the present is, Burr Oak, Iowa.

A person had better have a full-fanged and wide-awake adder in his bosom than a downright worldly and persistent ambition in his heart. The victim of it may not see it to be so, and may claim that his life proceeds rather comfortably and safely: but men whose hearts are stayed on the right things, and who by a daily religious experience know what real joys are, and how contented and happy, and well anchored, in the midst of all storms, God would have his earthly creatures be, they understand that the over ambitious man's life is an every day failure, and that he is pushing on to a crowning failure—a failure, that is, to meet the Lord and Judge of men in peace.

So the libertine, the man in hot quest of money, the man whose law, joy, and morning noon and evening stand-by is liquor, the groundling politician who goes upon his belly (his knees, at any rate), all the days of his life, and eats dirt, and has small offices or big ones—these and a thousand more of various names, belonging to the same family, do all come short of the full felicity and success of life, because they take it up and live it on an undivine theory—forgetting it was meant to be a mere preface to greater things, the porch to a more commanding and blessed career, and that time separated from eternity is a pitiful fragment and futility.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE.

[THE following is our last speech in the Deists' Convention at Hartford, Conn., in 1853. It had been preceded by denunciations of the Bible because it taught the doctrine of eternal torments.—ED. OF HER. OF LIFE.]

I need not again state the position I occupy. It is possible that some of my friends on the opposite side may think that I grant them all they contend for. I have not contended that every word in the Bible is inspired: I have only contended that it contains a history of revelations in certain ages, made by certain instruments, which God has employed; and a history of certain facts and transactions which were connected with those ages in which the revelations were made. I shall go perhaps a step further—that no man is called upon to receive as a revelation that which plainly and palpably contradicts right reason. If, therefore, I was convinced that there were doctrines in this Bible claiming to be inspired of God, that contradicted my sense of what was right, when weighed in the balance of right reason, I would not feel myself bound to receive them as a revelationfrom God, because the God of the same Bible says, "Come, now, let us reason together." He appeals to our reason, and that very appeal imports that he has nothing to say that will shock right reason. I feel for the position, condition and situation of many intelligent friends on the other side, who, loving and appreciating virtue, reject the Bible, as they suppose, though in fact they reject the traditions of men and the corruptions of theologians. They suppose, indeed, that the Bible teaches certain doctrines which shock their reason; and they reject the Bible, supposing that these doctrines are contained in it, and if they really think so I cannot blame them for rejecting it. I do not know how they could feel otherwise than they do while they suppose that book contains some of the doctrines attributed to it by theologians.

The most horrible and shocking of all doctrines the last speaker on this stand referred to, and therefore I feel called upon to refer to it myself in my remarks this evening. That speaker came forward with the declaration that the Bible taught the doctrine of eternal misery. With that assumption I take issue. I deny it. The Bible teaches no such doctrine, either in the Old or New Testament. I admit that theologians, professing to understand what the Bible teaches, have taught such doctrines; and she may have supposed that theologians ought to know whether the Bible taught it or not. But theologians may, in these last days, be as mistaken in regard to these things as other men. I take the position that there is not a solitary expression in the Bible that countenances the theological notions of hell. What is the theological hell? I will sum it up from the catechism? It is, that there is a dark, bottomless pit, full of fire and brimstone, where the wicked drink in eternal, unmitigated torture—torture continually increasing, and without end. That is the theological notion of hell; and if the last speaker really supposes that the Bible teaches such a doctrine, I cannot blame her for rejecting the Bible. She says that the Bible does teach it; and what text does she quote to prove it? She could not tell us exactly; but I will tell you that the first text referred to by her is found in Mark ix., 43, and it relates to the expression of our Lord, "If thy hand offend thee, cut it off; it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than, having two hands, to go into hell, into the fire that shall never be quenched," etc.

This was the text mainly relied on in proof that the Bible teaches a hell of endless torments. I mantain that no such doctrine is taught by this declaration as has been assumed. To settle this point we want to get a clear and Scriptural explanation of the term "hell;" and I wish the congregation to mark distinctly that the text says, "It is better to enter into life halt, or maimed, than to be cast into hell." The very expression tells you that life is what is to be lost if the person does not pursue a certain course, and not endless torment to be endured. Now, there are in the New Testament three words that are translated in our language "hell;" gehenna, hades, and tartarus; the latter occuring but once, and that in 2 Peter ii., 4. The term "gehenna" occurs twelve times in the New Testament. The term "hades" occurs eleven times, and ten times out of the eleven is translated "hell," and once in 1 Cor. xv., 55, is translated "grave." The term "gehenna" and the term "hades," in the original, have entirely different significations, as every one knows who knows anything about the original. But we are not, on this account, to throw any blame on the Bible; the blame lies on the translators. The translation is not inspiration. It is the work of fallible, erring men, and in no place erring more than in translating hades "hell."

In the Old Testament (Hebrew), the only term that is translated "hell" is sheol, which occurs sixty times, and thirty-one times out of sixty it is translated "hell." It has precisely the meaning of hades in the New Testament; and yet thirty-one times in the Old Testament it has been translated "hell," and at other times "grave," etc., according to the judgment of the translators.

My time is so limited, of course, that I have to take but a mere glance at this subject. The term hades does not occur in the text quoted this afternoon, but the term gehenna. The translators might better have left it untranslated. We will give you an explanation of it, as given in "The Polymicrian Greek Lexicon," by Greenfield. "Gehenna, properly the valley of Hinnom, south of Jerusalem, once celebrated for the horrid worship of Moloch, and afterward polluted with every species of filth, as well as the carcases of animals, and dead bodies of malefactors, to consume which, in order to avert the pestilence which such a mass of corruption would occasion, constant fires were kept burning."

The term gehenna is composed of the words Ge, a valley, and Hinnom, a man's name. Dr. George Campbell, an eminent divine—and orthodox, by the way—tells you that the term gehenna never occurs in the Greek translation of the Old Testament, nor in any classic author in the world. Then we are shut up to the use of the term among the Jews. What did it mean among the Jews? Place yourself one moment in Jerusalem, where Jesus stood; look outside of that city and see the Valley of Hinnom, gehenna. That valley, in the days of the ministration of Jesus, was the receptacle of the filth of the city, carcases of dead animals, and the bodies of malefactors. What purpose did it serve? Was it designed to preserve and keep in existence everything cast into it? Every one knows that whatever was cast into that gehenna was cast in there to be made an end of. When the Saviour says, "It is better to enter into life maimed than to be cast into hell" (gehenna) he only uses an expression equivalent to saying, "It is better for you to possess life, to continue in being, by losing one hand or one eye in the present time, than to be totally destroyed at last for your sins." The term, then, in the text, imports a total or entire destruction, and not preservation under any circumstances. It has no such signification as theologians put upon it.

The idea that the term unquenchable fire imports a fire "never to go out," or that shall "burn eternally," it is easy to show, by its use among the Jewish prophets, has no such meaning, but simply imports utter destruction that cannot be resisted. And such is its common-sense meaning always. A gentleman's house is on fire, and the firemen hasten to his assistance; he says, "Effort is useless, it is unquenchable." Does he mean the fire will burn eternally, or simply that the house will be totally destroyed? If the fire could be quenched, some part of the house might be preserved; but it is unquenchable, and therefore total destruction is certain. Any schoolboy knows that is the common-sense meaning of the term, however theologians may pervert it. The text, then, gives no support to the notion of the "theological hell," or endless torments.

If the term hades, so often translated "hell," had been uniformly translated, we never would have reason and common sense shocked by the doctrine of endless torture. No, never. Why do the translators sometimes translate, in the Old Testament, the term sheol "hell," and sometimes "grave?" I will compare two texts—one found in the Old Testament, where the term sheol occurs, and one in the New Testament, where the term hades is used as the proper correspondent of the term sheol. In Psalm xvi., 10, it is said of the Messiah, "For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell," (the original is sheol), "neither wilt thou suffer thy Holy One to see corruption." In Acts ii., 31, Peter, speaking of David, says, "He seeing this before, spoke of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell"—hades, not gehenna, an entirely different word, and having an entirely different meaning, and yet our translators have translated it the same as though it were gehenna. We have shown that the terms sheol and hades are precisely of the same import. Now, when the word sheol is so often translated "the grave," why should they not translate the term hades in the same manner? They did not do so, because they believed in the natural immortality of the soul; and if they had translated, "thou wilt not leave my soul in the grave," they would say that Christ's soul died, as it did. "What, Christ's soul die!" Yes, Christ's soul died. "You mean Christ's body?" No; whatever constituted Christ [which means the anointed one] went into the grave and died; and had the translators been faithful in translating here, we should never have heard of Christ's going to the theological hell. Rather than give up the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, they would send Christ to hell! Yes, to a hell of endless torments! But, unfortunately for their theory, he got out of it, and so others may. The fact is, sheol and hades never mean a place of suffering. The terms signify, "covered," "out of sight," and are used in the Scriptures almost uniformly to signify the state of the dead—a state which is hidden from our view—and this the testimony of the Bible clearly confirms. It says, Eccl. ix., 10, that "in sheol there is no knowledge," and, consequently, no suffering.

I must charge our translators with being warped by the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul. In the passage 1 Cor. xv., 55, wherein it says, "O, grave, where is thy victory?" the original term is hades. Why not translate it "hell" here as in every other instance where the term occurs? Because if it had been it would have proved that there is to be a victory over hell. In Hosea xiii., 14, it says, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave, I will redeem them from death; O, death, I will be thy plague; O, grave, I will be thy destruction." Why not translate the word sheol in this passage "hell" instead of "grave?" Because it would have conveyed the idea that a soul could be delivered from hell. The term used here is sheol. "I will redeem them from death; O grave—O sheol—I will be thy destruction." Had it been translated hell instead of grave, it would have proved that hell is to be destroyed, and consequently all the wicked in it delivered or destroyed with it. The fact is, sheol nor hades has never any such sense as theologians attach to the term hell. The doctrine of eternal torments, or the theological hell, then, is not a doctrine of the Bible.

BY HON. O. S. HALSTED.

[Concluded from last week.]

FOR instances of the use of the Heb. verb nsha, to deceive, we give several passages: Ps. lv., 15, Heb., Let death deceive upon them, [a personification of death; the meaning is, come unexpectedly upon them] let them go down to shaul (the grave) alive, [that is, so suddenly that it shall seem as if they went down alive] for roul (plural) wickednesses—indwellings of them, in qrb, entrails of them. Ges., citing this verse under nsha, gives, "let death deceive on them." The Gr., Lat., and Douay give, Let death come upon them, ... Gr., into hades living; Lat., into infernus living; Douay, alive into hell. The Ital. is, Let the death put to them the hand upon the back, let them go down soterra, under ground, all alive. E. V., Let death seize upon them, (and, inserted, why?) let them go down quick into hell; for wickedness, etc., [For the Heb. qrb used in this verse the Gr., Lat., Douay, and Ital., have, entrails in other places; see p. 2 of Index to "The Theology of the Bible." And in Exod. xxix. 13, for qrb, the Gr., Lat., Douay, and Ital., give, entrails; E. V., inwards.

In Jer. xxx., 9, the Heb. uses the same verb, thus: deceive not (the) enphsht (plural of enphsh)—breaths—souls—of you; the Gr., uses the plural of psuche; Lat., deceive not your animas—breaths—souls; Douay, deceive not your souls; Ital., and E. V., deceive not yourselves.

In Jer. xlix., 16, the Heb. is, Fears, or terrors, of thee [that is, which thou hast inspired in others] have deceived thee, the pride of heart of thee [hath deceived thee].

In Gen. iii., 13, the Heb. is, And said that woman, that nhsh, whisperer, deceived, me; Gr., hepatese; deceived me; Lat., and Douay, deceived me; Ital., misled me; E. V., beguiled [that is, deceived] me.

In 1 Tim. ii., 14, the Gr. is, And Adam not hepatethe, [the passive of the same verb used in the Gr. of Gen. iii., 13,] not was deceived; but the woman apatetheisa, [participle of the same verb,] being deceived, enparabasei gegone, in, or, through, (a) going beyond, (a) mistake, (an) oversight, happened, or, became; Lat., And Adam was not led aside; (the) woman, but, being led aside, in prævaricatione fuit, in prevarication was, or, with prevarication was alive. Ital., And Adam not was misled, but the woman, having been misled, was in (cagion di), in, for, or, upon (cause, reason, motive, excuse, of) transgression. Rheims, And Adam was not seduced, but the woman being seduced, was in (the) transgression; E. V., And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in (the) transgression. The Rheims and E. V. of the verse does not give the sense of Paul's language. It may be that the Ital., by the words it inserts, gets nearer to it. In justice to the woman it should be stated that the word was, in the Rheims and E. V.—the woman being deceived, was in etc., would be expressed in the Gr., and often is, by een, from eimi, to be; whereas the Gr. word used is gegone, became, happened, from gignomai; and this seems to be the sense which best accords with her being deceived.

This verse, 1 Tim. ii., 14, suggests thoughts on the question which has for ages vexed ecclesiastics, and still vexes them—the question of "the origin of evil"—of the breath (principle) of evil—the liability to err. But we will only ask a few questions, and make a few remarks.

What was it that deceived, misled, Eve? Was not Adam then with her? It is plain from Gen. iii., 6 that he was. He was not deceived. Not deceived by what? By orthodoxy's Devil? Was it not something in the woman that deceived, misled, her? Gen. iii., 6, gives the answer: E. V., she saw that the tree was good for food, pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make (one) wise. What was it that overcame Adam? He was not deceived by any thing from without, nor by anything within himself. It is easy to see what overcame him, if we are to read the narrative of the temptation literally. What man in his situation would not have done just as he did—yield to the temptation, allurement, of his beautiful and lovely female, toward whom was his desire? Is the narrative of the temptation, or is it not, an allegory?

The question of the origin of evil is the question of the origin of moral agency. Did not God intend that men should be moral agents having to pneuma to hagion—the breath the holy, and to pneuma to poneron—the breath the evil—bad—the breath of holiness, and the breath of evil? Had not God a right to introduce, in his own way, moral agency; to make moral agents?

I have very recently seen it stated, that the late Professor Stuart of Andover was accustomed to remark, "Only show me God's right to create a moral being, and the rest is clear." The Professor's trouble as to God's right to create a moral being was due to the system of so-called theology he had embraced—starting with the dogma, the immortal soul, immortal spirit, and ending with the consequent immortal orthodox hell. His trouble was, and certainly a very trying one, to understand how God, foreknowing the consequences, could impose immortality on beings he himself constituted moral agents, liable to err, and foreseeing that they would err. How he could introduce a system which would result in eternal misery to beings of his own creation. If the Professor had struck out of his theology the root-error—orthodoxy's immortal soul—his trouble would have ceased at once. Who will question God's right to give men this life as moral agents—having the breath of holiness and the breath of evil, as a state of probation for immortality, or the non-attainment of it? By giving this life and not a life eternal he does no wrong to any one.

This controversy about the introduction "of moral evil" has been among orthodox theologians. Their efforts have been, to relieve God of the responsibility of introducing "moral evil;" and they have resorted to different hallucinations—erroneous imaginings—to do so; but the question is still as far as ever from being settled among them; and it will so remain until they abandon their cherished dogma. Strike that out, and all difficulty vanishes.

Without intending to go so far, we find that we have cut the Gordian knot which orthodox D. D.'s have so long tried in vain to untie. Mountains sink into plains when approached with the true light of Scripture. Tracing the word deceive has led us into this digression. We have seen that death is said, or invoked, to deceive; and that pride of heart is said to deceive. What was it that deceived the woman but an epithumia—an eager desire, longing for, stronger in her than in Adam, for Paul tells Timothy that Adam was not deceived.

MISSION TO THE FREEDMEN.

WE have been much interested in the accounts given by Eld. J. V. Himes, in the Voice of the West, of his visits among that people at Memphis, Tennessee, and other places. It seems several of the colored men thereabouts have embraced the Advent and Life doctrines, so far as they have heard them. We the give following extract, dated at Memphis, Tennessee, giving some account of one of these colored preachers, and some connecting circumstances;

WEDNESDAY, Jan. 29.—Br. Jackson preached last evening to a crowded house. All hearts were stirred. It struck deep. God is with this young man. Brn. Leslie and Reed, and Sr. Northup, were surprised and delighted. I hope he will prove true and faithful. He says this subject is in his heart and in his bones, and he must go all about among the freedmen, or, as he says, to his race, and tell them that Jesus is soon coming.

This morning had an interview with Br. Jackson, when he told Br. Reed and others his experience, and how he came into the truth. "Why," said he, "I was a member with you in de second coming before I ever heard of you. Now I got in the light I see where I stood in de Spirit—just with you. Why, we stand in de shoes of John de Baptist—just as he did about de first coming. We must now proclaim de second coming, and prepare de way of de Lord."

This evening Br. Jackson preached again. It thrilled all hearts. It astonished me, for I did not know as he had so full an understanding of the word of God. Brn. Leslie and Reed were overjoyed at hearing and seeing another one to help in the good work. The church here were also edified. It has given us all new courage to see help coming from the freedmen for the freedmen. And this is only the beginning. More are coming.

To-day several barrels of clothing were received; two through Sr. Stoddard, from the church in Worcester, Mass. They were just the articles needed, and the barrels were well filled, Scripture measure, and not an article but what was good, and fit for use. God bless Sr. S. and her associates, and help her in this good work. Another barrel was received from Lake Village, New Hampshire, as we suppose, in which Br. Knowles, no doubt, had a hand. And like those from Worcester, it was filled with all sorts of good things, for which they have the thanks of all.

It would have done you good, brethren and sisters, to have seen Brn. Leslie, Reed, and Jackson, with Sr. Northup and myself, at the opening. There was joy, gratitude and love. Joy at the reception of so many good things, gratitude to the kind friends who sent them, with an increase of love to dear ones who had remembered us, and the suffering ones of our charge.

Br. Jackson looked on as he saw the articles taken out, one after another, with astonishment. Finally he said: "What kind of people do ye have to de North? Dis do look like apostolic church. I never did see it so afore. They used to tell me you Northern people be bad people. But I did not b'lieve 'em. Now I knows you loves us."

Br. Jackson worked all last season for one that was called "a Reb," and lost all his labor and had no remedy. He is poor, and very poorly clad, and no means to clothe himself; and had no means even to come to us, and so I met his expenses. And, now, said we all to him, Br. Jackson, the Lord has sent some of these things for you. And then we looked out a suit and fitted him out complete, both for comfort and decency. If he knew whom to thank he would send his gratitude. But said he, "I never did see such people as you be. God bless 'em."

THURSDAY, Jan. 30.—In conversation with Br. Jackson this afternoon, speaking of the condition of saints immediately after death, he said he had been taught that each saint was rewarded at death. "But," said he, "this did not seem true to me. It seems to me dat dey all take an even start, and all unite to crown him Lord of all at de second coming. It so seem to me, but I did not see de light clear as I does now."

He said: "If de day of de Lord is not coming on his people as de thief, den it follows dat he must give 'em warning before he do come. And I b'lieve dis light your church is giving now is dat warning."

At night Br. Jackson spoke again. First he read the second chapter of Matthew, and made some general remarks on the first coming of Christ. He then took Colossians iii., 1–4, and preached a close and faithful sermon on the second coming, and the glorification of God's people.

THE PRESENT YEAR.

POLITICALLY speaking, there is every indication that the year upon which we have entered will be fraught with results of the greatest import to every waiting disciple of Christ. We are no alarmist, nor would we wish to beget false expectations in the breast of any one, yet we feel safe in saying that it is our opinion that the student of prophecy will witness this year the working out of events that will cast much light on the prophetic word. When was there a time so pregnant with evil forebodings, among all nations as the present? When such agitation and preparation as now? Look everywhere and we see the passions of men aroused, and their minds agitated in their endeavors to solve the political difficulties that vex them. Witness the conflict in England between Fenianism and Reform with Aristocracy, or the constant agitation in Germany in their efforts to bring about a unity between the Northern and Southern districts. See the great concessions Austria is compelled to make in order to conciliate, for the time being, her thousands of dissatisfied subjects. Or take a look at Italy with her millions of impulsive people, all afire with a desire for the abolition of Papal rule and the establishment of Rome as their capital. See the state of affairs in the dominions of Turkey—her bloody deeds among her Cretan subjects, and their indomitable resistance to all efforts at subjugation. Look at Russia or France, and what mighty preparations we behold for the issues of war. Money is poured out with lavish hand for implements of death, and the ingenuity of man is taxed for the invention of some new weapon which shall prove still more destructive than any yet known. Other countries of Europe are all alive with preparation, and some are at their wit's end how to suppress threatened revolution in their midst. China is still engaged with her internal war; South America, with unabated zeal, carries on the long and bloody conflict that has raged so long, while Mexico, with her hands red with the blood of her terrible struggle, is far from being at rest. In this country it is impossible to tell what an hour may bring forth. Although the great bone of contention, slavery, has been removed, yet we see a spirit of bitterness rankling in the breasts of the vanquished, and a constant agitation of the public mind which is fraught with anything but good. It is in keeping, however, with the general strife now going on in political circles, everywhere.

Do not we see, as it were, an answer being given to the proclamation of the Spirit as sent through Joel, saying, "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles, prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near, let them come up. Beat your ploughshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears. Let the weak say, I am strong!"

The war element is rampant. The ambition of men for greater power and fame is leading them on step by step toward the pit of destruction, for it is the inevitable destiny of all such aspirants to be overthrown with a mighty overthrow by the coming king. God has granted him "the nations as an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth as a possession;" Psa. ii., consequently, it is only a question of time as to the accomplishment of his will concerning them. When the time comes for the assumption, the Spirit says he will "break them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." What a humiliating spectacle that will be for those kings whose imaginations have become lifted up on account of the many victories that are inscribed on their blood-stained banners. But come it will, as truly as God hath spoken it. But what are the signs that shall precede this victory of victories? "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth, distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken, and then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass then look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." Matt. xxiv., 25–28

In view of the mighty preparations which are now being made for the coming struggle amongst the nations of the earth, what is our duty as enlightened saints of God? Is it to sit down in idleness and watch carelessly the progress of events? Is it to mix up in the strife of worldly men for the political preferences of the age? Is it to gratify the lusts of the flesh and trample out every spark of spirit life that exists in us? No, no! Far be it from any one of us, brethren, to act thus in view of the sore troubles that are hanging like a thick cloud over the nations. Let us rather heed our Lord's words, who says, "take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares, for as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." Matt. xxiv., 34. If we mix up in the affairs of the world, and harass our minds with the cares pertaining to it, we shall have our attention directed towards temporal things, and thus become like the world. But if we withdraw from this scene and retire into the Christian arena, there to do a Christian's work, "watching and praying that we may be accounted worthy to escape all those things that shall come to pass," then we shall "stand before the Son of Man" with confidence and not with shame.

Verily, "darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people," as Isaiah predicted, and it becomes our duty as those who have been enlightened by the Spirit's teachings to spare no pains in giving to others the glorious truths we have believed. Every chord of sympathy within us should be touched in view of the lamentable ignorance of those around us. Let us not become "weary in well doing," brethren, but "work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work." Gird on then the armor of God and go forth as valiant soldiers to fight his battles. Seize the weapons he has provided, and defend the cause you have espoused. A bright crown awaits the victor. Will you suffer another to take it? If not, arouse yourselves each one of you, and nerve yourselves afresh for the conflict. Let this year be one of successive victories in your efforts to subdue self as well as in your aggressive efforts on the enemies without. Let it be a year of consecration to the Lord's service. If it be true, as many expect, that our Redeemer will come this year, and enter upon the great work before him, we should all see to it that we are prepared to meet him with joy and not with shame. Remember the work he has in store for us to perform, if we are worthy of the calling to which he has called us. Let us inure ourselves to "hardness, as good soldiers of Jesus Christ," and not forget Paul's words to Timothy, that "no man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier."

If wars and desolations should sweep over the earth, brethren, let us take courage. Remember him in whom we trust, who is "a very present help in time of trouble." He is our "rock and our fortress," and we need fear nothing if we continue faithful in his service.

Anecdote of John Palmer.

Near fifty years ago died the Rev. John Palmer, for some thirty or forty years the successful pastor of the First Baptist Church at Shrewsbury, England. Perhaps very few men ever more fully discharged the duties of an evangelist than did he. Very often would he make his appointments, and have them published in North Wales, on the borders of which he resided, and, leaving home on Monday morning, on his little Welsh pony, he would pass from place to place, returning Saturday evening, having preached, during his absence, sixteen or eighteen sermons, to probably as many thousands of hearers. Into one locality, however, he was for many years unable to enter; the clergy had contrived to excite a most malignant prejudice against "John Palmer, the Baptist man at Shrewsbury," and the simple-hearted shepherds of the mountains were led to suppose that of all men he was one of the worst. Often did Palmer talk and pray over the spot; and at length determined, at whatever risk, to preach an out-of-door sermon there. It was a happy circumstance that he was personally known to one family only in the district, and he requested them to publish the time and place of his preaching, as well as to erect a temporary pulpit. The time came, and the shepherds and peasants assembled in many hundreds, armed with clubs and staves, determined that "John Palmer, the Baptist man from Shrewsbury," should not preach there. The preacher was met by his friends on the road, who entreated him to return, as his life was in danger. He requested them immediately to take care of his horse and carriage, and to permit him to take his own course, only stipulating that when he appeared on the ground, no one should seem to know him. In this manner, with a most commanding person, highly attractive manners, and dressed as a complete gentleman, he made his appearance, and began to inquire the cause of so large an assemblage of people. "Why, zur," said they, "John Palmer, the Baptist man from Shrewsbury, is coming here, and zays he'll preach, but he shanna." "Oh, oh!" said Palmer, "he's coming, is he?" "Does you know him, zur?" "Know him, to be sure I do. I knew him forty years ago, when he was an apprentice to a doctor, and a strange sort of man he is, too." He then went on telling them tales about John Palmer and others, till they all surrounded him, and became most intensely interested in his graphic and forcible sketches.

By and by the stranger asked, But where's John Palmer that you said was coming to preach? The answer was, he was not come, and nobody knew why. "Well," said he, "that's a pity, too, that there should be no preaching; it will soon be dark." Well, would he preach? "Why," said he, "I shall be taken for John Palmer, and be insulted." Oh, no; they would guard him. He was at length prevailed on to ascend the pulpit, when he proposed, as preaching was a solemn thing, they should take off their hats while he prayed; this concluded, he read his text, and for about an hour preached as few men beside himself could preach to such an audience. All for a while was silent as the grave, weeping, groaning, jumping, and all the other signs by which the Welsh show deep, intense feeling, followed, in the midst of which the preacher said, "Now, my lads, I am John Palmer, the Baptist man from Shrewsbury, what have you more to say to me?" "When will you come and preach again?" was the inquiry from all quarters. He often did preach there again, and that "not in word only, but also in power and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance;" nor was his ministry unattended with a blessing.

Thoughts worth Pondering.

"I can speak it from experience," says the celebrated Erasmus, "that there is little benefit derived from the Scriptures if they be read curiously or carelessly; but if a man exercise himself therein constantly and conscientiously, he will find such an efficacy in them as is not to be found in any other book whatsoever."

"The genuine philosophy of Christ," says the same author, "cannot be derived from any source so successfully as from the books of the gospels and apostolic epistles, in which if a man philosophize with a pious spirit, praying rather than arguing, he will find that there is nothing conducive to the happiness of man and the performance of any duty of human life which is not in some of the writings laid down, discussed and determined, in a complete and satisfactory manner."

"That which stamps upon the Scriptures the highest value," says Bishop Porteus, "that which renders them, strictly speaking, inestimable, and distinguishes them from all other books in the world, is this: that they, and they only, contain the words of Eternal Life. In this respect, every other book, even the noblest compositions of man, must fail, they cannot give us that which we most want, and what is of infinitely more importance to us than all other things put together—Eternal Life."

Maternal Instruction.—A good, sensible mother is the greatest treasure of life. Her precepts live after death and enable us to resist temptation. Many a man owes his greatness to the early instruction of his mother, and the instances are rare of a wise and worthy mother having a bad son. The eccentric John Randolph had a partiality for French politics, and was accused of French atheism. "Indeed," said he, "I should have been a French atheist, if it had not been for one recollection, and that was the time when my departed mother used to take my little hands in hers, and cause me on my knees to say—'Our Father who art in heaven.'"

We have now republished all our speeches in the Deists' Convention in Hartford, Conn., in 1853. To understand some remarks in the one we print this week, it is proper to state, the speaker that immediately followed us was Mrs. Rose, since known prominently in the "Woman's Rights" meetings. She had manifested a peculiar abhorrence of the Bible, and dwelt emphatically on the torment theory, which she affirmed the Bible taught. She was not alone, however, in taking advantage of that supposed doctrine of the Bible. She was exceeding restless while we were exposing the falsity of such a doctrine, and more than once interrupted us by calling our attention to texts which she could not tell where to find, nor exactly how they read, so that in these particulars we had to help her, but evidently not altogether to her liking.

The result of the discussion in that Convention was a triumph in favor of the God of the Bible. At the commencement of the Convention it was understood, and we think announced, that the adjournment, when it should occur, was to be to the first of January following [it was now June], to meet again in the same city. The finale was, an adjournment sine die.

The adjournment was followed by a meeting of the citizens of Hartford, in large numbers, presided over by Leonard B. Griffin, a Methodist minister, at which, among other resolutions, the following was passed:

Resolved, That the sincere and hearty thanks of Christendom are due to the Rev. Messrs. Storrs, of New York, and Turner, of this city, for their able, manly, fearless, laborious and triumphant defence of the Holy Scriptures during the recent Convention.

The president of that Convention was Joseph Barker. A few years previously he had been widely known in England as a champion against the opponents of the Bible, and had published a work there entitled "Christianity Triumphant." That, and other of his works, as a Reformer, published in England, we had read some years previous to this Convention. It was but a short time before this meeting that we learned Mr. Barker had come to this country and located in Ohio. There was a rumor that he had become a Deist. We could not credit it, but the Hartford Convention revealed to our astonished eyes on our arrival there the second day after its session commenced, that he was president of the Convention. We could scarcely believe our senses; but were compelled to yield to the evidence before us, and to behold the man whose writings we had read with admiration, now uniting with fellow Deists in the attempt to destroy the faith he once so triumphantly vindicated. We had never seen him before; and when we left New York to go to that Convention, had not the slightest thought that we were to meet one we had so much admired for his noble defence of Christianity in England, as an opponent in Hartford. We knew his ability as a debater in England too well to suppose it possible that we could encounter him with any calculation of success. Our heart was sad, and almost overwhelmed at the thought of the undertaking.

We had not been in the Convention long before a new power seemed to take possession of our mind; our fears abated, and a deep conviction that God had called us to the task pervaded our inmost being. The impious resolution offered by Henry C. Wright, which we gave, as preceding our first speech, aroused us as if a direct inspiration from heaven had taken possession of us. That thought, to demand of these Deists the law by which the Bible, or the God of the Bible, was to be tried, came upon us in an instant, and with a power that seemed to us to be a direct interposition of God himself. As such we accepted it; and the result settled us in the unwavering conviction that no power can shake the foundation of the Bible, as to its being from God, and as far superior to all other systems of religion as the heavens are higher than the earth.

It was but a short time after this Convention that Mr. Barker abandoned his deism and became an avowed atheist. He assured his friends that such a result was inevitable, as the God of nature could no more be defended than the God of the Bible. For a year or two he spent much of his time in Philadelphia, Pa., inculcating atheism. After that we lost sight of him for several years: then a rumor came from England that, having returned from America, he had renounced his atheism; it was little more than a rumor, however, and we were in doubt about the matter for several years more, but recently a correspondence has been published, in which a gentleman in Philadelphia makes certain inquiries of Mr. Barker in relation to the rumors of his renunciation of infidelity. The following response of Mr. Barker will sufficiently indicate the nature of the inquiries made of him and his present position.

Victor Place, William St., Southport,
Lancashire, England, Nov. 21, 1867.

Rev. C. Collins, Jr., Philadelphia—My Dear Sir: I am happy to be able to say that I have "entirely renounced the views I formerly held with regard to the divine authority of the sacred Scriptures," and that I have now for nearly five years been advocating "the gospel of Christ as the only antidote for sin, and the sovereign remedy for the healing of the nations."

The change did not take place suddenly; it was spread over several years: nor can I trace it to any one event, or man, or book. I believe it commenced while I was in Nebraska, and advanced somewhat irregularly from that time to its happy consummation in 1863.

A correspondence which commenced between me and the Rev. Dr. Cooke, of London, in 1862, was of great service in accelerating the change and bringing it to a happy issue.

But to give you an account of the process in a letter would be impossible. I am thinking of preparing a statement for the press, and when it is published I shall be glad, if you desire it, to forward a copy or two to your address. If the post-office regulations allow me, I will forward to you along with this letter copies of the pamphlets I have published since my return to Christ. I would send you one I published on the Bible, but it is out of print. I have often wished to write to Dr. Berg, but I was told he had left Philadelphia.

I expected to return to America before this, but the state of my wife's health has thus far rendered it impossible.

I desire very much to have an opportunity of making known to my former hearers and readers the change which has taken place in my views and feelings, and the considerations and influences by which, under God, it has been effected.

You are perfectly at liberty to publish this statement in any way you think well. So far from having any objection to its publication, you will greatly oblige me by giving it as extensive a circulation as possible. All I should ask is, that if my statement be accompanied with any remarks, they shall be such as shall have no tendency to exasperate my old unbelieving friends. Many of them were very kind to me; and in every case, meekness, and gentleness, and love, are best calculated to win sceptics and unbelievers to Christ and his cause.

I am in connection with the Episcopal Church, though my labors as a lecturer and preacher have been mostly in connection with the Primitive Methodists, and other dissenting denominations.

The accompanying remarks, made at the close of one of my lectures here, may render my answer to your kind letter somewhat more complete.

Lamenting that I should ever have erred, but rejoicing that I have been so happily restored, I am, my dear sir, Yours most Respectfully,

Joseph Barker.

Additional Remarks.

To you, young men, who are beginning to entertain sceptical views, let me offer a word of counsel and warning. I assure you, you know not what you are doing. The path on which you are entering may seem right to you in your present state of mind, but the end thereof is death. You are preparing for yourselves matter for bitter repentance.

I have trod the dreadful path from beginning to end. I know it all. It is a weary and dismal road, and it leads to wretchedness and ruin. I have seen the terrible effects which infidelity produces on men's characters. I have had proof of its deteriorating influence in my own experience. Its tendency is to utter debasement. I have studied both sides, and what is more, I have tried both, and the result is a full assurance that infidelity is madness, and that the religion of Christ is the perfection of wisdom and goodness.

I think of my wanderings in the dark shades of doubt and unbelief with unspeakable sorrow. I would give a world if I could have my time to live over again, that I might avoid the dreadful mistake I made in turning my back on Christ and his cause, and joining the ranks of his enemies. The only comfort I have is that I was permitted to return while in the fulness of my health and strength, and in the full vigor of my mental powers; that I am allowed to speak for Christ and Christianity once more—that my family are all happy in the love of God and in the faith of the gospel, and that my large and varied experience enables me to speak of the infinite excellency of religion with an assurance, and to substantiate what I say with a kind of evidence, which, without such an experience, might have been impossible.

I have no inducement to address you thus but regard to your welfare, and to the welfare of those over whom your influence may extend, and a sense of duty to that great good God who is the Father of us all. I owe it to you, I owe it to all, to make known the result of my life-long experience; and this is the reason why I speak. I know that virtue is necessary to happiness, and that religion is necessary to virtue, and that Christianity is religion, and virtue, and happiness, in their highest and divinest forms. I have proved its power, I have felt its worth, I have tasted its blessedness, I have seen its elevating and cheering power in others near and dear to me in the hour of grievous suffering. It is—as the best and dearest creature I know on earth said to me not long ago, when apparently drawing near to death—it is "the pearl of great price;" "the one thing needful."

I could say more; my heart is full, and would fain pour forth itself in prayers and entreaties to you to return to Christ. The man that leaves the religion of Christ for unbelief, or sinful pleasures, or worldly gains, makes a dreadful exchange. He leaves the fountains of living waters for cisterns that hold no water. Like the prodigal son, he leaves the home of his soul and the love of the Father for a far country, where, after his short delusive pleasures, he must encounter the horrors of friendlessness and starvation. The prodigal was beside himself, and so are they who imitate his example. When the prodigal came to himself he returned with shame and sadness to his father and his home again, and when you come to yourselves you will do the same.

God grant that it may be soon. God grant that you may be brought to see things in their true light, and to seek his mercy, and give yourselves to his service without delay.

Infidelity, and sin, and all that they can give, are but vanity and vexation of spirit; but a life of faith on the Son of God, and of obedience to his gospel, "is profitable unto all things, having promise both of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

Joseph Barker.

"John v., 28, 29."—Our friend in Ohio is informed that the article he speaks of, on this text has never reached us. We are of the opinion that enough has been said on it for the present. This has been our view of the matter for some time past. Differences of opinion will still exist as to its meaning or design; but one thing was long since settled—it cannot mean that wicked dead men will live again, when the text does not say it, and such a construction contradicts the general tenor of the Bible, and various declarations of a positive character to the contrary, too clear to be over-ridden. Here, it is our wish the matter might rest awhile, and let each one be fully persuaded in his own mind.

The New Proposition to publish a thousand copies of "Life from the Dead: or, the Righteous only will live again," seems to be well received. But we cannot venture on the work till the $50 is paid in. That amount is indispensable to commence with. To publish such a work, of 96 pages, at such a price, is a noble effort for scattering light at little cost. The design is to give them away and to do it by thousands. Not 1,000, merely; but to continue the stream, till, like the first issues of the "Six Sermons," a hundred thousand shall have been scattered. Can the friends of "No Life out of Christ" devise a less expensive way to get these views before the people? If not, shall we not try this? Let us hear from such as can help, as early as possible; and please answer the following questions:

1. How much will you give for this object?
2. What number of copies will you undertake to distribute?
3. How shall they be sent to you, by mail, or express?
4. Will you receive the full number your money pays for?
5. If not, will you designate how the remainder shall be disposed of? If sent by mail the postage must be added to the cost. That would be two cents on a single copy; but only four cents on three copies; and about twelve cents on ten copies.

"The Theology of the Bible."—Subscribers for the Herald of Life, who wish to procure this work should send $2 to the author direct; and not through us. Our part of the "offer" is discontinued; but Judge Halsted will still send the work to any of our subscribers for $2, postage free. All orders, therefore, should be addressed, "Hon. O. S. Halsted, 417 Broad Street, Newark, N. J." Be sure to write your own name and address plain. The price of the work to those not subscribers to the Herald is $3. We presume Judge Halsted will not restrict our subscribers to one copy, but send to such any number at $2 each.

This Number of the Herald.—It was suggested to print a few extra copies of it, and we have done so. If any wish to circulate it, they can have five copies sent them, to one address, for fifteen cents. Single copies five cents. We have only seventy-five copies extra. That is all we can supply. If money is sent after these are exhausted, we will send you, instead, any other works you shall name to the amount.

"Trine Immersion."

Last week we published some questions from a correspondent, in which he asks, "Did not the apostles baptize by trine immersion?" Nearly half our papers, unfortunately, had "time," instead of trine. We have been asked, "What is trine immersion?" It is immersing the person three times: once in the name of each—Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Some of the professed Christians, in the third century, immersed in water to "wash away their sins;" and among other things, "They were stripped entirely of their clothes, and being wholly naked, whether men or women, they were then dipped three times under the water, in the respective names of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost." See Bingham's Antiq. Christian Church, lib. 10—12; quoted by Dr. McCulloh in his "Recast of the Credibility of the Scriptures," v. ii., p. 356.

While on this article of last week, we may add our edition was half worked off when we discovered not only time put for trine, but the 3d, 4th, and 5th questions of said article lacked the three figures, designating the questions to which we responded in corresponding figures. It is essential, to understand our replies, that the reader supply them after question 2. See first article, editorial, inside, last week.

Responses in Meetings.

A brother writes us, complaining that some Advent believers needlessly and injuriously interrupt discourses, when truth is being presented, by saying aloud—"glory—amen—yes," etc., thereby calling attention from the discourse and argument to themselves. He thinks this an evil that ought not to exist. We must confess, we think persons should avoid it as much as possible. If the preacher has anything to say, worth the attention of the hearer, the attention of the latter should not be diverted by any needless noise or responses. Few cases can occur where these responses are of as much value as they do mischief. There will often be strangers present who are disturbed by them, and the effect of a good discouse is destroyed in their minds by such interruptions. Too often, it is only a habit that some have fallen into of making vocal responses; and they may be exceedingly inappropriate to the subject. We remember when we were a believer in the popular notion of hell, that on one occasion, when we were describing the horrors of that place, one cried out, "Glory to God." It came over us, as the saying is, "like a wet blanket." As a general rule, these responses can do no good, and may do much harm. It is an old saying, "Shallow waters make a noise; but deep waters run silent." We have often witnessed that noisy grief soon subsides, while silent grief endures. Let truth sink down into our hearts; be pondered well; and let it manifest itself in our lives and sober conversation. So shall we be lights in the world.

"The Sealed Book of Daniel Opened."

This is a work published by Wm. Thurman, a few years since, and we received a copy at the time. We never considered it reliable, and took little or no notice of it then or since; it was, however, brought into special notice in the West, by Eld. Himes, if we are not mistaken. We have just received a "Review" of it, by Eld. Apollos Hale, of Boston, "showing it to be totally unreliable." We must confess Eld. Hale has treated the work and its author with great severity; more so, it seems to us, than we should feel justified, absurd and baseless as the work is. We had been well acquainted with Eld. Hale in 1843–4, and we counted him as one of the most mild and kind-hearted men we were associated with. He certainly makes out a strong case against the work he "reviews;" and if he is correct in his statements, he may be justified in the following severe censure, pages 39, 40. Eld. Hale says:

Two things have filled me with surprise: (1.) That our time and country and the Advent people could produce a man to get up a book containing such pretensions, and which so utterly falsifies them all. As a 'reference book,' there is scarcely a material fact that is not placed in a false light; scarcely a question that is truly stated; nor a party brought to view that is not placed in a false position. God, his angels and prophets, interpreters, historians, and chronologists, are all worked by the same profane hand into the performance of the same profane service. (2.) That such a production could find endorsers in Adventists who have occupied positions of responsibility for years, and have had within their reach means and opportunities to qualify them to speak advisedly on works of that kind, is incomprehensible. 'Woe to the world because of offences.' (Gr., scandals.) 'It must needs be that scandals come, but woe to that man by whom the scandal cometh!' In behalf of the dishonored cause of God; . . . . . in the name of every intelligent, judicious, but reproached and afflicted old friend and disciple of the true Advent faith, I protest against this work of Thurman's as an unmitigated and unpardonable scandal!"

This seems a severe censure. We do not affirm whether it is, or is not deserved. We certainly regret that the work reviewed should ever have found so many admirers and followers. Sure we are, it can work little else than evil, whatever might have been the motives of its author.

Eld. Hale's Review is a pamphlet of 64 pages, printed by "Rockwell & Rollins, No. 122 Washington Street, Boston." In concluding it, he gives "A brief statement of the Argument of 1868:" that is, as the point of termination of some of the prophetic periods. He had said at the commencement, that he did "not disagree with the book [Thurman's] in one of its aspects, that which appears to indicate the end in A. D. 1868. He says "For twenty years I have been satisfied that the prophetic periods might extend to that date."

As for ourself, we took the ground more than twenty years ago, that some of those periods, if "days" in them, stood for years, would extend to the point between 1864–8. But, none of these periods marked the exact time of the second advent; though they brought us into the immediate vicinity of it. There we have stood for 23 years, so that we have not had the slightest faith in any termination of those periods fixed on by any class of Advent believers, up to this time; nor have we now any faith that those periods were ever given to determine the exact time of the advent, but only to show us when it would be "nigh, even at the door."

An Inquiry on Baptism.

BY WM. MONTGOMERY.

Did ever Paul receive water baptism?

Br. Storrs: I wish you, or some of the brethren would answer the above question in the Herald of Life. I have been examining the subject, and with my present light I have come to the conclusion that Paul never received water baptism.

I know great stress is laid on that passage in Romans vi., by a certain class; "being buried with Him by baptism." They say, that being put under the water prefigures Christ being put into the tomb, and that rising out of the water prefigures his resurrection, and they always add, "What a beautiful figure!" But for my part, I fail to see any connection, whatever. Indeed water is not named in the chapter.

The ninth chapter of the Acts contains an account of Paul's conversion: and if ever he received water baptism it was on that occasion. Let us now examine that account carefully. See him journeying from Jerusalem to Damascus, filled with rage against all that confessed Jesus Christ, and as he drew near the city a great light shines round him, and he falls to the ground. The light was so dazzling that he was struck blind, and no doubt would have remained so had not the Lord opened his eyes, as he had a great work for him to do. On the third day, Ananias was sent to him and when he came in, he put his hand on him and said, "Brother Saul, the Lord (even Jesus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest) has sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost." Now here were two distinct blessings that Paul was to receive as announced: and we see he did receive them without the least intervention of Ananias; for "immediately there fell from his (Paul's) eyes, as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose and was baptized," or in other words, was filled with the Holy Ghost. So we see that being baptized, is, in this case, literally being filled with the Holy Ghost. Paul must have been greatly exhausted, having had no food for three days. They gave him something to eat and he was strengthened. So if Ananias did baptize him, it must have been after this; and as we have no account of it, we may reasonably conclude, that he never received water baptism, having received that of the Holy Spirit.

Hoping to hear something more on the subject, I remain yours, expecting eternal life, through Jesus Christ.

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 25, 1868.

Remarks by the Editor.—We do not desire to press our views on any one on the question of water baptism. Our tract on the "Essential Baptism" contains all we wish to say upon it; and we prefer that each one act in the matter according to their own conviction of duty. But if they denounce us for our views, and tell us that we set aside "one of the plainest and most positive conditions of salvation—baptism for the remission of sins," and that we are "in gross error on the first principles of the gospel," because of our views in this matter, then we say to them, "Judge not that ye be not judged; for with what judgment ye judge ye shall be judged." Let all such beware lest they be condemned far their rash judgment when the Lord shall come.

A correction.—In Reuben Cadwell's letter, last week, in the last paragraph, fourth line, strike out the word "than." That word contradicts his meaning.

Can it be Done?

Br. Storrs: I have now read the articles just published in the Herald on the "Defence of the Bible," three times, and the last with as much interest as the first. The argument is one of the most cogent against deistical notions, so common among unthinking persons, and is, withal, most powerful in vindication of the reasonableness of God's divine government. What it is to me, I think it would be to others, and I would, therefore, like to see it got up in tract form. I think it would be just the thing not only for our immediate friends, but for all who are interested in the Christian religion, to have to send broadcast over the land. Can it be done?

New York, March 2d

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—When we commenced republishing our DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE we were in doubt if it would be thought advisable to go on with it, fearing it might be considered stale by such as had read it before. We certainly had not the most distant thought that any one would call for it in pamphlet. The foregoing communication from W. M. (Walter Macdonald) one of the "Union's DIRECTORS," was, therefore, unexpected. As to ourself, we shall act passively. We shall neither approve nor condemn the project. If the friends judge, as does "W. M.," they will act accordingly. We leave it entirely with them to decide the matter.

REVIVALS.—We learn that our friends in many places are enjoying a blessed revival of religion, and conversions are reported, and the lukewarm quickened. Salem and Springfield, Mass., and Eatontown, N. J., are among the places named. We cannot but rejoice at such good news, as will all who believe in the blessed Gospel of Jesus, which, being the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, only requires to be faithfully preached, with the Divine blessing, to have men turn from the error of their ways and accept eternal life. IMPORTANT QUESTIONS.

THE following questions were first published by WM. GLEN MONCRIEFF, in Scotland, and republished by us in a tract, in this country, over twenty years ago. We are requested to give them a place in the HERALD OF LIFE at this time.—ED. HERALD OF LIFE.

CAN YOU BELIEVE?

1. Can you believe that all men are immortal, when God positively declares that man is mortal? Job iv., 17.

2. Can you believe that all men are immortal, when Paul says "God only hath immortality?" 1 Tim. vi., 15, 16.

3. Can you believe that all men are immortal, when Paul tells us that we must seek for immortality? Rom. ii., 6 and 7. What need of seeking what we already possess? Rom. viii.

4. Can you believe that a heathen Socrates brought immortality to light, when God's word says it was brought to light by the gospel? 2 Tim. i., 10.

5. Can you believe that the soul will never die, when God declares "the soul that sinneth it shall die?" Ezek. xviii., 4.

6. Can you believe this to be simply a spiritual death to the soul, when God's word shows that souls were cut in pieces with the sword and UTTERLY DESTROYED. Josh. x., 35, 37, 39. Chap. xi., 11.

7. Can you believe that Samson believed in the undying nature of the soul, when he exclaimed, "Let my soul (margin) die with the Philistines?" Judges xvi., 20.

8. Can you believe that Balaam believed in the endless existence of the soul, when he said, "Let my soul die the death of the righteous?" (marginal reading, which is correct). Numb. xxiii., 10.

9. Can you believe that David taught the undying nature of the soul, when he says, "God spared not their (the people's) soul from death?" Ps. lxxviii., 50. And again when he said "none can keep alive his own soul?" Ps. xxii., 29.

10. Can you believe that the soul is immortal, when such an expression is not to be found in the whole Book of God, but teaches so positively that it dies?

11. Can you believe that God made the man's body and put a soul into it, when Paul says the first man was made a living soul? He did not make a soul and put it into him.

12. Can you believe that the dead know more than the living, when God's word plainly says "The dead know not anything?" Eccl., ix., 5, 6.

13. Can you believe that man's thoughts live on when the body dies and the breath goes forth, when David says, "They perish in that very day?" Ps. cxlvi., 3, 4.

14. Can you believe the dead are praising God in heaven, when David says, "The dead praise not the Lord?" Ps. cxv., 17.

15. Can you believe that dead folks know more about the Lord than the living, when the Psalmist says, "In death there is no remembrance of thee?" Ps. vi., 5.

16. Can you believe that David is now in heaven, when Peter says he is both dead and burried, and that he is NOT ascended to the heavens? Acts ii., 29, 34.

17. Can you believe that there is any necessity for a future judgment and resurrection, if men are now in heaven and hell receiving their rewards? If so, what is the use of bringing them out, judging them, and sending them back to the same place again?

18. Can you believe that Paul believed in and taught the doctrine that all the good of ages past are now in heaven, receiving their reward, when he said, "If the dead rise not, then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ, are perished? 1 Cor. xv., 18.

19. Can you believe that Paul esteemed the resurrection of as little worth as men now do, when he said, "What advantageth it me if the dead rise not, let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die?" 1 Cor. xv., 32.

20. Can you believe that "Death is the gate to endless joy," when Paul says it is an enemy? 1 Cor xv., 26.

21. Can you believe that Paul expected his crown at death, when he says the Lord will give it him at his coming? 2 Tim. iv., 8.

22. Can you believe that murderers will live forever, when John declares that "No murderer hath eternal life abiding in him?" John iii., 15.

23. Can you believe that the wicked will never cease to be, when God's word declares that "They shall be as though they had not been?" Obad. i., 16, 25.

24. Can you believe that the wicked will live forever and never die, when God positively declares that "All the wicked will he destroy?" Ps. cxlv., 20.

25. Can you believe that wicked men will suffer eternal pain, when God says "They shall be burned up root and branch," and be destroyed, shall perish, be consumed, die, lose life, and come to an end, and shall not live out half their days? These terms are applied to the punishment of the wicked in about two hundred texts: 1st, the wicked will be punished. 2d. This punishment will be eternal. 3d. And will consist in destruction. Matt. xxv., 46; 2 Thess. i., 7, 10.

26. Kind reader, can you believe that God will leave you uncondemned in the judgment, if you reject all the plain truths of his word? Eternal life is a gift through Christ, and not through our parents. Oh! fly to Jesus, and live forever. LIVE while the approving smiles of God shine upon your pathway. LIVE while onward rolls the countless ages that circle around the Throne of Jehovah. LIVE on the glory-crowned hill-tops of a purified earth, when the shadow of sin has rolled away. LIVE while the God of eternity holds the sceptre of the universe, and worlds obey his mandates.

"THE WORLD'S CONVERSION."

THE following is an extract from an article in the Johnstown Independent, a short time since. It is a letter sent that paper by Eld. WM. ROWORTH of this city.

To the Editor of the Johnstown Independent: DEAR SIR: Will you insert the following article in reply to Bishop Simpson, in your paper of January 17, 1868—headed "Jesus Conquering the World?"

I am a lover of Bible truth, and am satisfied that nothing but the truth will sanctify us, and prepare us for the kingdom of God. In the article referred to, Jesus conquering the world, I find one of the greatest fables taught in these last days, namely: the conversion of the world; nowhere taught in the Scriptures of truth; only in the tradition of men. And this doctrine is akin to many others taught in the popular theology of the day; such as going to heaven at death; the immortality of the soul; the eternal torment of the wicked; the consciousness of man in death; with other kindred doctrines nowhere taught in the word of God. Hear the Bishop, who says:

Since we were children, the world has been thrown open; the walls of China are crumbling, and almost gone; the ports of Japan are taken; the island of Madagascar is giving way; the dark land of Africa is opening up; the icy-bound shores of the North are being warmed by the gospel, and its cool breath is being breathed over the tropics. The gospel is spreading, for Christ has all power in heaven and earth; and what we have seen is a foretaste of the future. Tell me that India China, Africa, and the Cannibals cannot be converted. I tell you they can; for Jesus has all power. They belong to our Christ, and he sends us to preach the gospel to them. And I ask, for what purpose is the gospel preached to the Gentiles, but that he may, as the apostle Paul says in his epistle to the Romans, chapter xvi., verse 26, "make the gospel known to all nations for the obedience of faith;" or as Christ himself says, "it shall be preached to all nations for a witness." Matt. xxiv., 14.

This gospel, or good news, as Macknight translates it, of the kingdom, or reign of Christ, shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; then shall the end come. Not then shall the world be converted, for Christ says in the parable of the wheat and tares, in the 13th chapter of Matthew the wheat and the tares are to grow together until the harvest, and the harvest is the end of the world or age. Then the separation takes place by his sending his angels, who are the reapers, who will separate the one from the other; and Daniel says that the little horn power shall prosper and prevail until the Ancient of days shall come, and the time comes that the saints take the kingdom—not the kingdom beyond the bounds of time and space, nor a sky kingdom, but the kingdom as Daniel says in chap. vii., verse 27, under the whole heavens. And the apostle says, in the last days wicked men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. This answers to the time in which we live—admitted by all. And the apostle Paul, in his solemn charge to Timothy, in his second epistle chapter iv., the most solemn charge ever given to a Christian minister, says: Preach the word; for the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, but after own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears, and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. The doctrine of the conversion of the world is one of the greatest fables now preached. The Bishop says:

Christ Jesus is conquering the world. He says the iron, the steam and the lightning are his. He made them long before man found out their powers. God has placed them in the world. All power is his, and he has given them us that the earth may be converted to him.

The question is, Where is the promise in God's word that such an event will take place? Echo answers where? Let us have one text. I know some will refer us to the Psalm ii., verse 8: Ask of me and I shall give (thee) the heathen (for) thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth (for) thy possession. And for what they are given, the next verse informs us. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. This does not look like converting them in the sense the Bishop understands it, but as the Bible says, all the wicked will God destroy; burn them up root and branch; or, as one prophet says, They shall be as though they had not been; and the psalmist David says in the Psalm xxxvii, they shall consume away like the fat of lambs—into smoke shall they consume away. Amen. Yours, for the truth.

REFORMATION OF WM. WIRT.

THE distinguished Wm. Wirt, within a few months after his first marriage, became addicted to intemperance, the effect of which operated strongly on the mind and health of his wife, and in a few months more she was numbered with the dead. Her death led him to leave the county where he resided, and he moved to Richmond, where he soon rose to distinction. But his habits hung about him, and occasionally he was found with jolly and froliesome spirits, in bacchanalian revelry. His true friends expostulated with him, to convince him of the injury that he was doing himself. But he still persisted. His practice began to fall off, and many looked on him as on the sure road to ruin. He was advised to get married, with a view to correcting his habits. This he consented to do, if the right person was found. He accordingly paid his addresses to a Miss Gamble. After some months' attention, he asked her hand in marriage. She replied: "Mr. Wirt, I have been well aware of your intentions for some time back, and should have given you to understand that your visits and attentions were not acceptable, had I not reciprocated the affection which you evinced for me. But I cannot yield my assent until you make me a pledge never to taste, touch, or handle any intoxicating drinks." This reply to Mr. Wirt was as unexpected as it was novel. His reply was, that he regarded the proposition as a bar to all farther consideration of the subject, and left her. Her course to him was the same as ever—his, resentment and neglect. In the course of a few weeks he went again, and again solicited her hand. But her reply was, her mind was made up. He became indignant, and regarded the terms she proposed as insulting to his honor, and vowed it should be the last meeting they should ever have. He took to drinking worse and worse, and seemed to run headlong to ruin. One day, while lying in the outskirts of the city, near a little grocery or grog-shop, dead-drunk, a young lady, whom it is not necessary to name, was passing that way to her home, not far off, and beheld him with his face upturned to the rays of the scorching sun. She took her handkerchief, with her own name marked upon it, and placed it over his face. After he had remained in that way for some hours, he was awakened, and, his thirst being great, he went into the little grog-shop to get a drink, when he discovered the handkerchief, at which he looked, and the name that was on it. After pausing a few minutes, he exclaimed: "Good heavens! who left this with me? Who placed this on my face?" No one knew. He dropped the glass, exclaiming, "Enough! Enough!" He retired instantly from the store, forgetting his thirst, but not the debauch, the handkerchief, or the lady; vowing, if God gave him strength, never to touch, taste, or handle intoxicating drinks.

To meet Miss G. again was the hardest effort of his life. If he met her in her carriage, or on foot, he would dodge round the nearest corner. She at last addressed him a note, under her own hand, inviting him to her house, which he finally gathered courage to accept. He told her, if she still bore affection for him, he would agree to her own terms. Her reply was: "My conditions are now what they have ever been." "Then," said the disenthralled Wirt, "I accept them."

They were soon married; and from that day he kept his word, and his affairs brightened, while honors and glory gathered thick upon his brow. His name has been enrolled high in the temple of fame, while his deeds, his patriotism and renown live after him with imperishable lustre. How many noble minds might the young ladies save, if they would follow the example of the heroine-hearted Miss G., the friend of humanity, of her country, and the relation of Lafayette.—Selected by L. C. T.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM RUFUS WENDELL.

NEW YORK, March 2, 1868.

BR. EDITOR: Please give me room in this week's paper to say that I concluded my labors in Paterson yesterday afternoon, that I withdraw my Springfield appointments, that I leave for Salem at 8 o'clock this evening, and that I expect on next Saturday evening or Sunday morning to commence a series of discourses in Wilmington, Delaware.

Friends wishing to write me will direct their letters to Salem, Mass., whence they are always promptly forwarded to me when I am away from home.

My heart is gladdened by tidings of a precious revival going on in our church at Salem, in connection with the labors of Bro. Joseph W. White. Praise the Lord for the good news.

Yours in haste and love.

FROM MRS. M. A. FOGG.

MORRIS, CONN., Feb. 24, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Having become deeply interested and strongly in favor of your exposition of the Word, which teaches "Life only in Christ," I feel just like adding my word of testimony to this truth for the encouragement of others, praying that the God of all grace may enable me to so read, and so understand his revealed word that I may be prepared at any time to give a reason of the hope that is within me, with meakness and fear.

It is only about four weeks, since husband and self commenced an investigation of the subject, in the which we were greatly aided by your work entitled LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST. Although our theological waters had been stirred ever since we were at the Wilbraham camp-meeting; yet, until about that time, we knew no one in these parts that believed it or even taught it. But (if I may be allowed the expression) in fulness of time, Br. H. Rockwell came this way, and he told us of your works, and talked with us enough to show us that we had not got all the truth. Well, all we can say is, Praise the Lord for his unspeakable goodness to the children of men, in that he so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. And so here we are. Lord do with us what seemeth good in thy sight; may the little leaven leaven the whole lump. We are having just now a revival season. Sinners are interested in view of eternal salvation; but O, how I wish the Lord would send this way those of like precious faith, that are willing to endure hardness as good soldiers of the cross; I have no doubt but that they would receive many souls as wages for their hire.; and should these lines come to the notice of any of our brethren, of our acquaintance, I would say, Pray for us: for though we may number a score, or more, that profess to be looking for and loving the coming of the Lord, yet there is but a very few that will say to us, "God speed," in this direction.

FROM ELD. JOHN CRAIG.

DEAR HERALD: I still keep searching that good old book (the Bible), which comforts me very much in these dark hours of affliction. I find throughout the entire volume one universal testimony given, that all future life depends on our union with Christ. Our life must be hid with Christ in God to have a resurrection; and so Paul says, Col. iii., 3, 4; also, in Acts xxiv., 15, he pleads for the hope of the fathers.

I do thank the Lord for the increasing light that the blessed word sheds forth when we search it honestly and prayerfully, seeking for truth and truth alone. I can truly say the character and ways of our Father never looked so bright and clear to me before as since I have been confined to a sick bed-room, with my still suffering companion. I have improved all the time I could spare in searching and praying over the word, and as I have neither creed, sect, nor party to hold up, I come untrammelled to seek for light; and light I do receive. Thank the Lord; how good he is to all those who put their trust in him.

I have had a rich treat for some time past in reading the several articles in the HERALD OF LIFE on a personal devil; which, by the way, I think has no more place in the book than an immortal soul or endless misery. But happy for those who can take God's holy word, and believe that God alone reigns supreme. If such a being (devil) exists, he would seem to be far superior in power, as he inspires more with evil than our God does with good; and is in all places at one and the same time: then it seems he is an omnipresent being, as well as an omnipotent one; for he appears to rule with greater power in the earth than the God of the universe, if the theology of the day is correct.

The defence of the Bible is a rich feast to me. We have great reason to thank the Lord that we have such chosen vessels to defend the Word of Life in these last days of white-washed infidelity.

Perhaps I shall not be able to write again for some time, as my wife is so weak and helpless that she needs the most of my time now to help her to move: therefore, permit me to say to one and all of my dear brethren and sisters, so live in Christ that we may know daily the blessedness of the man whose sins are forgiven, and whose transgression is covered. To be in possession of such a prize will make even this life sweet, amidst all its trials and troubles. This I know, thank the Lord, by past and present experience; and it cheers me in the gloom and sadness of the afflictions of this present evil world. O, for more of inward, heart-felt purity, and less complaint of "O, my leanness, my leanness." Without holy hearts and holy lives we cannot have life through Christ, the Life-giver.

My wife is fast wasting away. She has strong hope, in the Giver of Life, for salvation.

S. S. CALL writes from Elliota, Minn., Feb. 22d: I feel to thank God that the truth of "No Life out of Christ" is steadily gaining ground. There are some who oppose the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead, and hold the belief of a spiritual, omnipotent, and omniscient devil, which they so reverence, that if you dispute the reality of them, and teach others so to do, they will tell you, if they did not believe in the resurrection of the wicked dead, they would not believe in any resurrection; and that if they did not believe there is a spirit devil they would not believe there is a God; and they say there is but one baptism, and that is water; administered by the Spirit operating through some person, the same as the Spirit preached through Noah; and if you cannot believe these things you are no Christian, and they will not go to hear you. Yet some will hear, and inquire, and confess that it is the most consistent doctrine they ever heard. The work is progressing slowly, but surely. It would be a good place to scatter tracts. Who will send some directed to S. S. Call, Burr Oak, Iowa?

Feb. 24—I have just returned from Lenora this eve; and feel that it does one good to go and see how we used to do when we were bound up by creeds and forms. The Methodists are holding a protracted meeting at Lenora; and they have the form of godliness, and what they call the power thereof; but from such, I turn away; and say, Can it be that I once was like that? God give us charity to bear and sympathize with them; for, we were once there; but God be thanked that we have obeyed that form of doctrine which, if a man follow he shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.

Opposition is rising. The craft is in danger; and the cry of "Infidel, false-teachers, and great is water baptism;" if by any means they may save some. Yet some will hear and understand. Blessed be God, he doeth all things well.

Yours in the gospel hope.

ELD. H. ROCKWELL writes from Morris, Conn.: Long and dreary have been the days since I met the fearless, outspoken little band of believers in life only in Christ, under the shade of that venerable old "chestnut tree," previous to our final farewell to its wide-spread branches and cooling shade. Thank the good Lord, there are a few left in the earth that retain feelings for their fellow-creatures. Bro. Ladd, of Springfield, Mass., cut a limb from that honored and ever-to-be-remembered tree, as a memento of our sacred and abiding truths, which, like a band of outcasts, we were permitted to advocate without the camp. This "limb" was divided into many parts and distributed among the dear children of like precious faith. As I considered myself one of the least of them all, I took a small leaf to place in my Bible. I thank God, from the warmest outgushings of my heart, that now, when I am asked if I ever knew a sinner converted by the preaching of No life out of Christ, I can say I have known many very kind-hearted seekers after truth converted from intolerant bigotry to a sound and comprehensive understanding of the pledge of eternal life through Jesus Christ. O, how good the Lord is! That little leaf in my Bible retains its freshness, and reminds us of the leaves that are for the healing of the nations. I find many opposers, but all their efforts to impede the truth cannot stop its onward course. Glory be to God most high, the angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him and delivereth them. I feel that the prayers of those looking for life in Christ, and who have faith in the promises of a future one, are round about me like a wall which the enemy cannot scale or demolish. Take courage, brother; there is hope for the future. Light and truth are spreading. O how I long to come to you and mingle our tears and joys together around the altar of thanksgiving and praise.

ELD. J. LEWIS writes from Ramsey, Ill., Feb. 18th: On my return trip to this place, I found the papers and pamphlets which had been sent me; also the tracts on Rich Man and Lazarus. We feel truly thankful. May the Lord bless the donors with a more excellent life. I wish to say a word about our labor here. We find it a difficult business, for sectarianism is strong. One minister broke in on us, while preaching, and asked me, what use there was in preaching if man had no immortal soul? We replied by saying, If man has immortality already, there would be no use in preaching; for the fires of hell could not harm them. A woman preacher said, she could prove that Paul said, the wicked dead would all be resurrected. But she failed to do it. Another brought up the rich man in hell. We proved he was not in hell but hades. Another said he had been sent for to come and debate with the old brother; but, said he, the doctrine is all new to me, and I am not going to expose my ignorance until I investigate. So the battle goes. We send you $4 from two new subscribers. We feel happy in God, our heavenly Father, and enjoy his smiles as evidence that our ways please him. Pray for me. We have had a very interest-time at Tower Hill, a village of priests; no less than three were present to listen to a discourse on the nature and destiny of man.

MARIA A. DUNBAR, Ashtabula, Ohio, writes: I have seen several numbers of your paper, which Bro. Z. Campbell calls the "Battering Ram." It is just the thing we need here. I have many dear relatives of the orthodox faith, who are walled in by human creeds, and I want something to shatter their walls. Besides, I wish something to strengthen my faith, and to lead me to the Christ, the only true LIFE-GIVER. I have the Bible, which is all-sufficient for that purpose; but in my weakness, I am not able to draw out all the glorious truths revealed in it. I thank God he has given us some strong minds to help the weaker. I have been much interested in the discussion on the personality of the devil. All that I can make of him is, a de evil; and a troublesome creature at that. Please send me the HERALD OF LIFE. Yours in Christ, waiting for the Kingdom.

D—— L——, ——, writes: Having been for some time a believer in the "non-immortal" doctrine, as a scriptural view, and as reconciling the many theologic difficulties that have for many years perplexed my mind, and having read some of the HERALD OF LIFE loaned me by a friend, I wish to become a subscriber, and herein send a year's subscription. I hope that you will continue to increase in believers. It is an awful blow to human pride; but it is true; and in mercy to the patient, a wise and honest surgeon will not spare the lance. Let us use it as the only hope of diseased humanity, and direct them to Christ as the only hope of immortality.

A TRUE CHRISTIAN SPIRIT.

THE great work belonging to one who has named upon him the name of the Anointed, is certainly that of the cultivation of a right spirit. There must be a manifest change in his actions, as compared with what they were when he was under no restraint. He is no longer free to exhibit an ungoverned temper, or a spirit of reviling, resentment or defamation. These are manifestations of that spirit which is not from above, but is from beneath. It is a spirit whose outworkings are from the flesh, and belong to the things which we left behind, when we stretched out to obtain the things which are before. Seeing then, it is not a part of the Christian order, but is of the world, and consequently leads to death, what inducements can there be for us to cling to it? None, whatever.

The Apostle Paul, although he had been possessed of a spirit of vengeance toward those who named upon them the name of Christ, so that he could stand by with indifference, and witness the cold-blooded murder of our loved brother Stephen; yet, when he had taken upon him the same Name how did he act? "Being reviled," he says, "we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it; being defamed, we entreat." How was it that he did not allow that spirit of vengeance which was in him before to exhibit itself now toward his enemies? Because he appreciated the truth of what he wrote to the Corinthians, saying: "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." Belonging to another, he was no longer free to act out the pleasure of one who was opposed to the will of him who had bought him. Seeing then that God could not be glorified by the exhibition of a spirit of reviling, or resentment, he quietly laid it aside and imitated him who said; "I am meek and lowly in heart," who, "when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously." Brethren, we have the same God for our Father. Cannot we trust our cause with him? He will judge as righteously for each one of us as he has for his Son Jesus. Cannot we afford to wait then for the day to reveal it? When the Lord comes, "He will bring to light the hidden things of darkness and make manifest the counsels of the hearts, and then shall every man have praise of God." Let us patiently await the issue, dearly beloved, and never undertake to prosecute our own case. "Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will repay," says God. Let us "roll our care upon him," and quietly discharge our obligations day by day, giving no heed to the defamations or curses of those opposed to us. It may be a source of gratification to us to give vent to our natural impulses, but when we consider that our great pattern, Jesus, controlled these impulses of the flesh, keeping them in subjection when it would almost seem impossible for them to be restrained, we are not at a loss to discover where our duty lies as imitators of him.—Selected.

AN EARTHQUAKE.—What event in the natural world more fit than an earthquake agitating the surface of vast regions, and dashing down the fabrics of art, can be found to symbolize a great political revolution in which the whole structure of society is shaken with passion, all ordinary law suspended, ancient institutions overthown, and an aspect of violence and disorder impressed on every scene.

LINES.

BY MARIA MATTHEWS WEAVER.

I HAVE wandered a pilgrim, been lonely and sad,
Been tempted and troubled, been hopeful and glad;
Had foes to molest me, had friends to sustain,
Had comfort and plenty, had poverty—pain.

Sometimes the high billows have caused me to fear,
But in every tempest has Jesus been near;
And in every trouble his Spirit has blest,
And in every sorrow my soul has found rest.

Long weary of earth, and its sin and its snares,
Its burdens and labors, its trials and cares,
The news of a better world sounded more sweet,
And I went forth, expecting my Saviour to meet.

Soon, soon, fainting heart, I shall see my blest King,
Each jewel howe'er much dust-covered he'll bring;
Forever they'll shine in the kingdom of light,
Where death cannot enter, nor sorrow nor night.

Not long I shall wander a pilgrim forlorn,
For faith now beholds the bright gleamings of morn;
Soon safe in my Father's house I shall sit down,
And through Jesus' blood wear a bright shining crown.

CHILDREN CAN UNDERSTAND JESUS.

FROM GEO. W. DENNY.

BR. STORRS: I have a Sunday-school scholar in my class, a bright, red headed boy, of about twelve years. He is a good boy, and for his years we think there is no little boy who tries harder to be like Jesus than he does.

Last Sunday the lesson was in John vi., and included the 39th verse, viz., "And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." I asked this boy to read the above verse. He did so. I then asked him, if he could tell me how many God wanted Jesus to raise up at the last day? He answered very promptly, "All the Father hath given him." And who are they? said I. "All the Christians;" he replied. "And do you think," said I, "that others may be raised up?"

"No," he promptly answered, "I do not think they will." Why? said I. "Because they do not belong to Jesus," he replied, "and it is not the will of the Father that any others should be raised."

I do not know that this child ever knew my sentiments on this question; but you see he can understand Jesus, and takes very kindly to learning of him. Now this little boy never misses a prayer-meeting; is always on hand, rain or shine. Whether his parents come or not he is always there; and he never lets a meeting pass without speaking for Jesus; and almost always you can see the tears starting in his eyes while speaking. He goes home alone nearly two miles in the evening after meeting. His father has quite lately come out of the first Baptist church and united with us. He says he hopes, should time continue, to see this boy preaching the blessed gospel. He also sends two dollars for the HERALD OF LIFE, and says, "Oh, how glad I am that I see the blessed hope;" and exclaims, "how can we live again except we be in Christ. Where have I been all my life time not to see these things before."

And so we go. Some are dying; others are falling into the ranks, as onward we press the battle; and it goes well.

LOVE FOR MOTHER AND JESUS.

A LITTLE boy once had a canary bird which he loved very much. His mother was taken ill, and the singing of the pretty bird gave her great annoyance in her weakness. The boy was told by the mother that his little bird gave her pain by its singing. He went at once and gave the bird away to his cousin, and then came home and told his mother that the canary would not disturb her any more, for he had given it to his cousin.

"But did you not love it very much?" said the mother to him; "how could you part with it?"

"It is true I loved the bird, mother," he replied, "but I love you much more. I could not really love anything that gave you pain."

"Now you must love God as this little boy loved his mother, more than you love anything else; and also everything that grieves him you must give up, however much you may like it.

"You love me," said a mother to her little child, as he leaned over her in bed, "don't you?" "Yes," said the half-sleeping child, but I love God much more."

So we are to love parents, brothers, sisters, friends, and everything that God has made; but we must love him much more, supremely—with all our hearts.

ONE WAY TO DO GOOD.

EMMA GRAY, on her way to school passed a little boy whose hand was through the railing of a gentleman's front yard, trying to pick off a beautiful Spring flower.

"O, little boy," said Emma kindly, "are you not taking that without leave?"

"Nobody sees me," answered the little boy, looking up.

"Somebody sees you from the blue sky, little boy," said Emma. "God says we must not take what does not belong to us without leave, and you will grieve him if you do so."

The little boy looked up into her face as she spoke. "Shall I?" said he, "then I won't."

He drew back his hand, and went away. Was it not thoughtful and kind in Emma? I think so.

One way of doing good is to prevent others from doing wrong. A gentle word of reproof or persuasion would save many a one from sin.

WHAT IS THE TONGUE FOR?

GOD made the tongue; and, since he never makes anything in vain, we may be sure he made this for some good purpose. "What is it, then?" asked a teacher one day of her class.

"He made it that we may pray with it," answered one boy.

"To sing with," said another.

"To talk to people with," said a third.

"To recite our lessons with," replied another.

"Yes; and I will tell you what he did not make it for. He did not make it for us to scold with, to lie with, or to swear with. He did not mean that we should say unkind, or foolish, or indecent or impatient words with it. Now, boys, think, every time you use your tongues, if you are using them in the way God means you to. Do good with your tongue and not evil. It is one of the most useful members of the whole body, although it is so small. Please God with it every day."

BE KIND.

SEVERAL years ago, when I was attending a school at Hartford, Conn., there were two young lads, members of the school, of opposite characters. One was remarkably amiable, and distinguished for his mild and kind disposition, and the other delighted in teasing, insulting and abusing him.

The young man endured all this abuse with patience and meekness, and the next day, after the other had spit in his face, he purchased some oranges, and gave one of the best of them to his persecutor, when, in an instant, his face was crimsoned with shame and mortification. After that he was never known to treat this young man, or any others unkindly; and from being the most quarrelsome he became one of the most peaceable members of the school.

WHO WAS RIGHT?

JAMES was a happy, playful, noisy boy. He delighted in that kind of sport which made the most stir, and resulted in some kind of demonstration. One day his mother lost all her patience, and cried out: "James, stop your noise, and sit down quietly for the next hour, or I will punish you."

"Why, mother," said he, "I can't keep still. I'd burst right open, I know I would, if I couldn't run and laugh, and get the noise out of me."

Be patient, good parents, and if you are blessed with boys that have a good deal of noise in them, let it come out. Such are the boys that will make a stir in the world, if you give them a chance.

HUMILITY.

A FARMER went with his son into a wheat-field to see if it was ready for the harvest.

"See, father!" exclaimed the boy: "how straight these stems hold up their heads! They must be the best ones. Those that hang their heads down, I am sure, are not good for much."

The father plucked a stalk of each kind, and said, "See here, foolish child! This stalk, that stood so straight and high, is light-headed and almost good for nothing; while this, that hung its head so modestly, is full of the most beautiful grain."

A QUESTION.

"WE are so happy, we don't say bad words any more; and we know that God is with us all the time," said a little boy in heathen lands.

Can you, my little boy, in your Christian home, say as much? Are you happy, because you "don't say bad words any more?" And does the thought that God is with you "all the time," watching you and seeing all you do, give you pleasure? If not, I sadly fear the little Hindoo boy will rise up in judgment and condemn you.

PERSECUTION.

BY C. I. PERCIVAL.

REV. xii. This portion of the Apocalyptic vision contains one unbroken scene in the great drama. The actors are the great red dragon, called, also, the devil, and the serpent; the sun-clothed woman, her son, Michael and his angels, and the dragon's angels. The woman undoubtedly symbolizes the true church. An effort has been made to show that she symbolizes the apostate church in some portions of this chapter, but the idea to my mind is perfectly absurd. There certainly is not the slightest intimation in the prophecy of any change in the character of this symbol. The dragon, or devil, appears, in this scene, as the persecutor or accuser of God's people. Now for the "performance." The dragon stands before the woman ready to devour her child as soon as it is born. The expected child appears and is named Jesus! The dragon, in the person of the Roman king, Herod, attempts to devour the child, but is defeated in his purpose. A period of about thirty-three years is passed over unnoticed in the prophecy, and the child is caught up to God and to his throne.

Again we pass over a period of five hundred years, and the woman flees into the wilderness before the dragon, or persecuting power of papal Rome. And now comes on the "war in heaven." On one side, "Michael, the archangel"—"one of the chief princes"—"the great prince that standeth for the children of thy people"—evidently the leader, or commander of the mighty host of angelic beings whose business it is "to minister to them that shall be heirs of salvation," and by whose assistance the visible combatants in the struggle, gained their victory over the dragon—overcoming him "by the blood of the Lamb, and the word of their testimony; not loving their lives unto the death."

The dragon is vanquished, and he and his angels are cast out of heaven into the earth. This event with the great rejoicings that follow, in heaven, end the second part in this scene.

The dragon, finding himself cast out into the earth, is terribly wrath, and, casting about for something on which to vent his fury, he discovers that the WOMAN is there too! and at once commences his old game of persecution against her. But help is at hand. To her are given two wings of a great eagle, and she flies into the wilderness again, where she is safe from the serpent's fury. The dragon endeavors to swallow up the woman by a flood, but the earth swallows it up, and, again foiled in his purpose, he turns and vents his wrath on the remnant of the woman's seed, who keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

In applying this prophecy, I believe I have never met with a speaker, or writer, who did not make one and the same great mistake; and that is, in making the two flights of the woman identical. I have never met with any exposition of Scripture that seemed so strangely inconsistent as this. Just look at a few facts. Her first flight takes place in heaven; the second, on earth! In the fulfilment, the location of the two places must be as widely separated as heaven and earth in the symbol! Her first flight was alone, unaided; the second time she is assisted by the wings of a great eagle! Her first abode in the wilderness was one thousand two hundred and sixty days; which, being symbolic, it seems to me can only mean literal years, and so it was fulfilled! Her second stay in the wilderness is for a time, times and a half, or three and a half literal years.

The striking difference in these three circumstances make it entirely out of the question to think of applying the 6th and 14th verses to the same event. They are as distinct as are heaven and earth, or light and darkness.

And now for the application. Heaven, or the location of the events of the first eleven verses of this prophecy, is the old Roman empire, including Western Asia, Northern Africa, and nearly all Europe. The time, is from A. D. 1, the birth of our Saviour, to about 1792, when the persecuting powers were crushed, or the devil "was cast out." Now, where is "the earth?" I answer it is wherever the "woman," the church is; and everybody knows that since the close of the great persecution, if there is a country on earth where, more than any other, the church could be said to be, it is the United States of America. Here is where the woman is now; and here is where the devil, the persecutor, will show himself in due time, and commence war on the woman again, and with great wrath, too, knowing that his time is short. And here, too, will she, with the help of the great American eagle's wings, take a rapid flight into the wilderness, to be nourished for a time and times and a half, or three and a half years, from the face of her deadly foe; while against the scattered remnant of her communion, the foe will vent his hellish spite, and "their fellow-servants also, and their brethren that should be killed as they were shall be fulfilled." Rev. vi., 2.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We give Br. Percival's article an insertion, but still are compelled to differ with him in his application; especially in making the "man-child" Christ. This prophecy was written some sixty years after Christ's ascension to heaven, and it expressly declares that it was "to show . . . things which must shortly come to pass:" chap. i., 1; and chap. iv., 1 saith "I will show thee things which must be hereafter." The birth and ascension of Christ was in the past by from sixty to ninety years. We say nothing, now, of other points in his application, from which we dissent.

REMARKS ON ROMANS II., 12, 14.

BY REUBEN CADWELL.

IT has come to my mind to give what I think to be the doctrine taught in Rom. ii., 12, 14, with some reflections connected with them. Not so much from the truth itself, though important, as from the conclusions that must follow. Those believing in the natural immortality of man, and the penalty of the law for disobedience to be eternal suffering, or dying twice, will so interpret them as to have some seeming adaptation to these theories.

I am satisfied the doctrine taught here has much to do in determining the true condition and nature of man, and the destiny of the greater portion of the race up to this time; and after careful inquiry into the Divine proceedings much will remain obscure; yet some things may be known as taught on this subject. And if we may discover God's design, it will appear lovely and glorious.

Verse 12. The persons anticipated sinning here, "without" a certain law, must have had a law given, or proclaimed to them, or they could not sin, "For where there is no law, there is no transgression." And though they may be sinners contrasted with God's law, yet "sin is not imputed when there is no law." But this law was found "witnessed by the law and the prophets," and was being proclaimed by the apostles, as required of Jew and Gentile.

What was the law these persons had not, and sinned "without?" The law which says, "he that doeth these things shall live in them" (or live); and circumcision was the seal or pledge of the fulfilment of this promise of life to those who kept it, and if not circumcision availed nothing, as to life. And without a merciful provision of justification, all would perish.

Verse 14. Here it has been supposed that the heathen nations, before the proclamation of the gospel of justification by faith (and those to whom it has not come), have some kind of a law, and do by nature the things contained in the law; and "are a law unto themselves;" because it says, "do by nature," —natural law, natural power—from inward moral sense of right or wrong. This law, to my knowledge, has not been definitely defined. I have given the one I entertained. But to the question: "When do the Gentiles, by nature," do the things contained in the law? and by what law do they do it, so as to be a law unto themselves? Answer: "The law of faith." Of this the 15th verse is evidence: "Which show the works of the law written in their hearts (not seen by an outward sign of circumcision but none the less valuable on this account) their conscience bearing witness also."

This truth, is still more explicitly given in verses 26, 27, "Therefore if the uncircumcised man keepeth the precepts of the law, will not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision? And will not the uncircumcised man, who is so by nature, if he fulfilleth the law, condemn thee," etc.

Prof. Whitney's translation. The uncircumcised Gentile is in his natural state, or is so by "nature" contrasted with the Jew, who is not so, when circumcised. But if the Gentile embrace "the law of faith," he has the true circumcision, and does the things contained in the law, and "shows the work of the law written in his heart." For "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness, to every one who believeth." "Therefore, by the deeds of the law, there shall no flesh be justified in his sight. . . . . But now the righteousness of God, without the law is manifested, ... even the righteousness of God, which is by faith unto all, and upon all them who believe."

We have now ascertained when the Gentiles do by nature the things contained in the law. But still it may be urged, that before this law of faith was proclaimed, and even now, these to whom it has not come, have some kind of law, capable of saving them, if obeyed; and quote John i., 9, to prove this position. I think a moral or spiritual light may exist, and not many eyes see it. Christ is seen where he is revealed in the word of the gospel, and in the prophecies of the heavens, which testify of him. But this word comes to man either in its written or oral form. And man must learn to read, or hear, and be able to understand, before it can enlighten him.

We think the "dark abodes of the earth," have not all disappeared; neither have they ceased to be filled with "cruelties." The commission given to the apostles is proof of the absence of such a law. The command attending the gospel, that all men, everywhere, should repent, found not an equally saving law among men. The apostle emphatically declares, that before they embraced the gospel, they were without hope, and the knowledge of God in the world. And that he suffered all nations to follow their own ways, and that the tokens of his goodness to them was, he gave them rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling their hearts with joy and gladness. This is a better exhibition of Divine goodness to them than we generally get; though it concerns, as I think, wholly this life, and is the portion of the natural man. God has given an animal life to man, and in this, I think he is justified. God does design to benefit the whole living race, physically and morally, when the system of means adopted, in the fulness of times shall be perfected to reach them. For this we may labor and pray "thy kingdom come."

Cortland, N. Y., Feb., 1868.

THE PORTENDING STORM.

ONE of the grandest sights a Christian can witness during Gentile supremacy, is the gradual gathering of the dark clouds of war, with an occasional flash of lightning or thunder crash, startling men from their slumbers. It is grand, not in the sense of war in itself being agreeable, but on account of the assurance it brings to long-deferred hopes that the day of deliverance is at hand. He knows from the prophetic word that before the inauguration of the day of rest there must of necessity come a period of dreadful war, accompanied with pestilence and famine—a time when terror shall strike the hearts of the stoutest men. If we wish to gather some idea of what that period will be, we have but to read the terrible history of Israel while in the hand of her enemies, and then remember the word of the Lord spoken by Isaiah the prophet, where he says: "Behold I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink it again, but I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee, which have said to thy soul, Bow down, that we may go over; and thou hast laid thy body as the ground, and as the street to them that went over." Isaiah li., 22, 23. From this we see clearly what awaits the nations who have afflicted Israel in the past. They will be compelled to bow down their necks and allow Israel in turn to walk over them. The prophet Micah, looking forward to this day of Israel's triumph, says: "The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might; they shall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf. They shall lick the dust like a serpent; they shall move out of their holes like worms of the earth: they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, and shall fear because of thee." Micah vii., 16, 17.

From these testimonies it is clear that a great change will come over the present status of the nations. Now they are exalted; then they shall be brought low; for ages past they have cruelly tyrannized over Israel; at that time Israel will triumph gloriously over them. As a preparatory step, however, it is necessary that certain national complications shall arise from time to time in order that the course of events as predicted by the prophets may come to pass. The much-vexed Eastern and Roman questions which are now agitating the European world, are destined, doubtless, to work out a situation of affairs which will open up the prophetic word to our view with great clearness. The eyes of all those who are waiting for the salvation that is promised, and are looking for the Redeemer to come to Zion, will turn almost instinctively toward the East for the purpose of gathering any information which may serve to indicate the nearness of our Lord's approach.

The unprecedented arming of the nations, together with the occasional outbursts of the coming storm have called forth from the press numerous expressions of opinion as to the situation. The Chicago Republican in commenting upon it, says:

The grandeur of the conflict inaugurating, the interests involved, reaching not only to all parts of Europe, but its waves surging against our shores and affecting our financial interests, even to the humblest producer in the remotest corner of the land, will command for it the attention of our people, only less absorbing than that given to our own terrible conflict. It is difficult now to forecast the influence and results of this impending struggle. We see no limit to it, once really begun. The assurances of peace which the apparently affectionate (!) monarchs of Europe delight to give to their incredulous subjects, after exchanging fraternal visits, and sipping wine from each other's cellars, go for naught in the light of passing events. . . . The future of Europe looks stormy and tragical.

The unenlightened mind of the politician cannot discern the end of these conflicts and what is to grow out of them, hence he frankly admits that "it is difficult now to forecast the results of the impending struggle," and that he can "see no limit to it, once really begun." To him it is as a boundless sea, which, when once he is launched upon its bosom, no chart or compass can serve him to reach its shore again in safety. He is compelled to trust himself to the mercy of the infuriated waves of war, and await with trembling anxiety the unknown results. How different the position of one enlightened by the prophetic word. He "knows the results" which will grow out of the "impending struggle," and calmly awaits the closing of the scene of slaughter, and the dawning of the day of peace. This knowledge all must feel is worth more than countless treasures.—Selected.

VICES OF THE TONGUE.—"I love to make people like each other better, and I often regret the tattling system which prevails so generally, and from which I grieve to say, many, of whom it would be uncharitable not to think favorably on the whole, are nevertheless not exempt. It is, indeed, a striking instance of our self-deception that persons who would quite shrink from committing most of those crimes which are condemned in the Word of God, think little of the vices of the tongue. But any one who is duly jealous of himself will always watch most carefully against the sins which are least unpopular in his own circle, and certainly the great evil of the so-called religious world is 'chatteration.'" —Wilberforce.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind —willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

GOSPEL BENEFITS.

A SERMON BY THE EDITOR.

"GOD will render to every man according to his deeds: to them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." Rom. ii., 6, 7.

Our object in the remarks we make upon this text will be to examine the nature or character of this cluster of benefits presented for our attainment, and then point out the means by which we may make them our own.

I. THE NATURE OR CHARACTER OF THE BENEFITS PRESENTED IN OUR TEXT.

1. "Glory."—Greek, Doxan. The term glory is one often used, and generally includes in the mind the ideas of excellence and happiness, or something splendid, connected with much enjoyment. As the glory spoken of in the text is something to be obtained in the future, and after effort on our part in the present time, it is worth while to endeavor to get as clear a conception of it as may be.

We regard it as that "change," of which the Scriptures speak, to be experienced by the saints at the second advent of Christ. Or, in other words, that change to be wrought at the resurrection from among the dead, viz., the resurrection of the just. Paul informs us, 1 Cor. xv., 43, "They are sown in dishonor, they arise in glory."—Syriac.

The present state of man is one of dishonor, because one of corruption. Great pains are now taken to adorn our persons—to make ourselves look beautiful, i. e., glorious. But after all the labor and toil, corruption prevails—the most beautiful form and countenance is changed, its appearance becomes offensive, and we willingly lay it away from our sight. "They are sown in dishonor." But the followers of Christ will be raised in glory.

How shall we obtain an idea of the glory to be attained? Paul informs us, Phil. iii., 21, that "Our LIFE-GIVER, the Lord Jesus Christ," will come "from heaven," and that then he shall change our vile body (or, body of our abasement—Syriac) that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body" (or, the body of his glory.—Syriac.) But how can we get an idea of that glory which Jesus possesses? Paul has, in this text, given us the pattern of the glory, and Peter shall give us the clue to its full discovery: 2 Peter i., 16–18. Peter says—'We have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known to you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty; for he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased; and this voice which came from heaven we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount." Another eye-witness of the same manifestation, viz., John, says—"We beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father." John i., 14.

We will now turn to the manifestation of that glory as recorded by Matthew, chapter xvii., 1: "Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John, his brother, and bringeth them up into a high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them (Syriac—was changed before them), and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." Here, in this vision, was the manifestation of "his glorious body," like unto which Paul tells us "our vile bodies shall" be "changed" when Christ "comes from heaven." Surely here is glory enough to satisfy our largest desires. The sight of it, in vision, made Peter say, "Lord it is good for us to be here." O, how satisfying the sight, and how much more so the realization, when "vision" will be swallowed up in the reality. Such is the glory presented as one of the benefits of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

2. "Honor"—Greek, Timeen. "A state of honor, dignity: a distinguished mark of favor." Such is the state to which the followers of Christ are to be exalted. "A Royal Priesthood;" to be "kings and priests unto God and the Lamb," to "reign on the earth, and over the nations." This is what Christ has promised those who obey him; and the Scriptures everywhere confirm the same thing. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father on his throne." Rev. iii., 21. Christ's own throne is "the throne of his father David," which Jehovah has sworn to give him, and which will be bestowed upon him when the judgment is executed, or in process of execution upon the "fourth" dynasty of rulers on earth, symbolized by a "dreadful and terrible beast." That beast is to be slain—the body of rulers overthrown and destroyed; then one is seen coming in the "clouds of heaven" who is "like the Son of man;" and he "came to the Ancient of days . . . . and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and tongues shall serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall be not destroyed." Dan. vii., 13, 14. This dominion and kingdom is that in which Christ has promised his followers a share; and "judgment" is to be "given to the saints of the Most High," when the time has come "that the saints possess the kingdom," verse 22; then "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom (or, the greatness of the kings—Septuagint), under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him:" verse 27.

Such is the royal honor presented to our faith as one of the grand motives to a right course of action in our present state of trial. Men are amazingly influenced by what they call "a sense of honor;" and to occupy some important post of trust where their honor can be conspicuous, is the ambition of many minds. No sacrifice, no suffering, no effort is spared, if they have evidence of the possibility of attaining the desired eminence. What an honor, in their estimation, to be President of the United States, though the term of office is a few short years, and though they may die before even that short period terminates; while the honor proffered the followers of Christ is an honor never to pass away nor to be changed into other hands, or to cease by death, as we shall shortly see. Let us suppose that all the honor ever possessed by kings, emperors, governors, and presidents, could be concentrated on one man, and that his life could be prolonged to a period equal to the combined years that have been occupied by the entire race of Adam; even then in splendor and duration it would fall infinitely short of that of one saint who shall become a king in the empire of Jesus Christ! Let, then, the men of earth, or worldly men, seek their dying honors, which so soon fade away: the Christian has a "far more exceeding," even "an eternal weight of honor," reserved in store, soon to be conferred upon him, if found possessing the required characteristics. Here, then, is motive sufficient to stimulate the most desponding child of God. Take courage, brother; you are shortly to wear a kingly crown, and wear it forever and ever. Lift up thy head, then, and faint not at any trials or sufferings you may be called to endure now.

2. "Immortality."—Greek, Aphtharsian. "Incorruptibility;" a state opposed to our present state, which is corruptible, mortal, dying. This incorruptible state proffered in our text, is essential to confirm us in the glory and honor previously noticed. Without this, that glory might fade away—that honor might have an end. With this, they are both made eternal.

The apostle here clearly shows that men are not possessed of immortality by creation or birth; and he shows also that it is a favor to be conferred on those only who pursue a defined course. He has stated in the previous chapter that "men professing themselves wise became fools, and changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man," etc. Little did he then know of the folly which was to be developed in after times by an attempt to make it appear that man is incorruptible, like God. Such "changing the truth of God into a lie," by which "the creature" is "worshipped and served more than the Creator," remained to be developed as the Man of Sin should begin to be manifested. Now men affirm that they are "immortal"—incorruptible like God! True, they admit their bodies will die, but the essential man, they affirm, is "immortal, and can never die," thus making "void the word through their tradition."

Man is not inherently immortal or incorruptible, in whole or in part. Not one solitary text in the Bible affirms any such thing, but the reverse. Let that fact satisfy the believer in the Scriptures. Immortality is a gift, dependent on the will of the giver—God, and on the action of him who shall partake of it. Paul informs us when it will be conferred, and how, viz.: "At the last trump," and by "the resurrection," for, saith he, "the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible"—aphtharsian; the same word employed in our text. "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." 1 Cor. xv., 52–54. And this victory, which "God giveth," is "through our Lord Jesus Christ." Here is the true source of immortality, and the time when it will be attained. Let all remember this, and lay aside that pride which possesses men's hearts from a fancied notion of inherent immortality.

4. "Eternal life," zoeenaionion: "life eternal." This is the climax of the whole, and securing the whole. What corruptible, dying man most of all needs, is life—an unending life. That is here promised to such as accept the conditions of the offered benefit.

We understand life here, in its most obvious sense of conscious being—or that state of being appropriate to a sentient creature—a being that has the faculty of perception. To give to the term life a figurative sense without a shadow of reason, except that which originates in the traditions of men who affirm that all men, irrespective of moral character, are in possession of existence that shall never end, we regard as a corruption of the word of God—a making void the testimony of the faithful and true Witness, who saith, "I am come that they might have life;" John x., 10; and who furthermore declares, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; John xiv., 6; all of which is confirmed by John, who saith, "He that believeth not God, hath made him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son: and this is the record that God hath given unto us eternal life, and this life is in his Son;" not in ourselves, as the theory of man's natural and essential immortality affirms it to be. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John v., 11, 12.

To suppose that the inspired authors of the Bible almost uniformly speak in figurative language, when presenting the great crowning benefit of the work and mediation of the Son of God, is a position of fearful presumption, and an unfounded assumption. If the Holy Spirit, who inspired holy men to speak, had intended happiness, as the natural immortal-soul theorists maintain, as the crowning blessing, it would have been equally easy to have used the terms makarioi, makarismos, as Paul does, Rom. vi., 6, 7, 8, 9; where these words are translated "blessed" and "blessedness" and have the proper signification of happy and happiness. But zoee is the emphatic term selected by the Holy Spirit as expressive of that glorious reward God has promised to these who obey him. This fact is sufficient to condemn forever the perversion resorted to in keeping up the theory that man is an immortal being. Man is a dying, corruptible creature; God offers him eternal zoee life; not merely makarismos—happiness; though having eternal life, he will be eternally happy—that follows as a matter of course.

Let learned and unlearned perverters of the testimony of the Spirit of God cease making "God a liar" by saying he does not mean zoee, but makarismos, when he uniformly employs the former term in presenting the great climax of proffered benefits for the encouragement of dying men, and to stimulate them to suffer, if need be, even unto death now, that they may attain unto zoee aionion—"life eternal." Let the simplicity in which the gospel approaches us, with its offered benefits, stand in all its purity and plainness, and darken no longer the counsel of God by perverting his word and making them void by traditions. Life—eternal life—to live forever—not die any more, is the grand theme with which the gospel salutes our ears. Joyful sound to dying men. Let them heed it.

Having presented, as clearly as our limits will allow, the glorious cluster of benefits presented by our text, we proceed to notice,

II. THE MEANS BY WHICH WE MAKE THE BENEFITS OUR OWN.

This we shall do only so far as suggested by the text. That teaches us they are to be sought for, and informs us how to seek for them.

1. We must "seek for" them. Men do not seek for that which they have already in possession. Immortality, equally with the glory and honor, is in the future, and is to be attained only by those who seek for it. The idea of the original is—to acquire by labor or work. It is not an idle wish that will give us possession of those glorious benefits, but earnest application, which leads us to notice,

2. How we are to seek for them. (1.) By "well-doing." It is not all doing that will give us a title; it is a specific kind of effort: it is working "the work of God," or that which he has assigned to us, and not the work which our fancy or imagination has pictured out. The first step in the work is "to believe on him whom God hath sent," viz., Jesus. John vi., 29. Believing on him he becomes the source of that energy by which we labor; he becomes the pattern after which we are to labor, and by which all our work is to be tested. This makes faith not that unmeaning and indefinite matter which seems to characterize much of the theology of the religionists of the age. Their faith is, in fact, a do-nothing faith: a faith which gives them license to live as they list, or according to their worldly desires. It includes little of daily self-denial and study to possess the mind of Christ—walking as he also walked—who spent his life in doing good, and for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross—or death by crucifixion—despising the shame. A religion whose greatest study is to be respectable, and to make an appearance that shall divest it of reproach, is not the religion of Jesus the Messiah. His heart was set on doing good to men, not as the cant is—"to their souls;" but to men as men. Their present wants and sufferings moved his compassionate heart, and invariably called forth his exertions for their relief. His life was spent in doing good. Let us, in like manner, labor to benefit men by instructing them and ministering to their necessities, both of body and mind. Only in this way can we be engaged in "well-doing," or doing the work God demands of us, and to which the proffered benefits are promised.

(2). There must be a "continuance in well-doing." It is not doing well now and then, or under some exciting sermon or missionary speech, when talent is enlisted to force out, as it were, action! No: a dead body may show signs of life under the action of a galvanic battery, but the life-principle must have a permanent existence in the man who works the work that God requires and will accept; and such a principle continues its life-motions in well-doing.

(3). But there must be a "patient continuance in well-doing" to secure the proffered benefits. A disposition of mind that does not faint at discouragements, nor cease efforts because left to struggle alone. The idea conveyed by the original is that of "remaining or staying behind when others have departed." It imports that there are discouragements—that most have passed on in their pursuits of profit, pleasure, or sensual gratification, and no longer heed the calls of injured or suffering humanity; then he who is seeking for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life, remains behind to do good, even though left of all, and though tempted with the strong current that has passed him, to join in their pursuits. Yes, though he may be ridiculed as being over-scrupulous, and too nice in his discriminations, he heeds the voice of God which falls on his ear above the foaming waves that rush by him, and hearing that voice he remains behind the multitude to do the work of God—that he may be Christ-like, and so attain the proffered glory. Worldly-minded professed Christians and sensualists may count him a fool, but he has learned, "if any man will be wise" he is to "become a fool that he may be wise." "Patience" characterizes his course, and he has the approbation of God, which outweighs all the censures of men. Shortly will he be exalted to this promised inheritance he has so earnestly and perseveringly sought for.

We see that there is an ample motive set before us to induce any thoughtful and reflective mind to lead a Christ-like life. If this motive fails we can conceive no other which would be effectual. The exhaustless storehouse of God is opened before our minds, and we are permitted to gaze on glory, honor, immortality, and endless life, to arouse us to patient continuance in well-doing. "Glory" that is unending—"honor" that is "unfading"—incorruptibility, "immortality" never to be succeeded by corruption—a life to the utmost bound of which thought can never fly, because it is absolutely boundless! O, what a prize is here! Stop, poor, dying, care-worn and disappointed man: stop and contemplate this boon which high Heaven offers for your acceptance! What are all the sensual enjoyments after which you now pant? What are the honors and treasures of earth which now so command your energies, compared with the glory, honor, immortality, eternal life, we have endeavored to set before you on God's authority. Stop, poor disappointed worldling, stop and think on these things.

Christian, does thy zeal and activity correspond with the amazing mercy and glorious prize set before thee? O, how much reason have we to humble ourselves, that such amazing benefits no more command our thoughts, our time, our talents and our energies in doing the work of God; and now, especially, when the prize is manifestly so near. A few days, or months, at most, and Christ will come "from heaven" to crown his followers with all these glorious benefits, and life's toils, trials, sufferings and woes will all be passed, and glory, honor, immortality, eternal life, be entered upon by you! O, how comforting, how invigorating the thought while we are yet struggling in the mighty conflict. "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly," and may we "be found of thee in peace, without spot and blameless." Amen.

BY HON. O. S. HALSTED.

THE structure of the Hebrew language is very different from that of later, and of modern languages; and its modes of expressing ideas are very different. It is a primitive language, supposed, and probably truly, to be the first written language. Hence its simplicity, and what grammarians call its poverty, that is, its want of copiousness. Its primitive words are comparatively few. Hence, naturally, we might almost say by necessity, its free use of figures of speech, drawn from the book of nature, and from all the elements of nature, including fire and brimstone, and the fire of destruction, and the fire of purification, and the fire—combustion—of decay in the grave. Hence, also, it is full of allegory and of personification. Hence, also, the breath—the life-giving and sustaining element—is used for almost every conceivable affection, passion, emotion, disposition, influence; just as we use the word spirit (Latin, spiritus—breath—from spiro, to breathe), to express the same. For example, the spirit of jealousy, of anger, of hatred, of revenge, and uncounted other spirits; that is, the breath of jealousy, etc., etc.; the reader can multiply spirits at pleasure. What would orthodoxy and modern spiritism have done for spirits if the Latin had not had the word spiritus? Further as to this word, and more appropriately, under the word devil.

The reader may feel disposed to ask: How is it that our English version, coming to us through several languages, by translation of translation (to say nothing of the aid of which it manifestly avails itself from the Romish versions in English), is claimed by ecclesiastics to be, or, at the least, is so spoken of by them that people generally are led to believe that it is, every word of it, the infallible word of God?

We now proceed to give every other passage in the Old Testament, where the Greek has diabolos. If any should be omitted it will be an oversight. We think we have not omitted one.

In Esther vii., 6, the Heb. is, (a) man tsr u aiub, adversary and enemy, Haman he ro—that bad, wicked; Gr., Haman ho poneros—that bad, wicked; Douay, It is this Haman that is our adversary and most wicked enemy; Ital., the adversary and the enemy (is) this wicked Haman; E. V., the same [Heb., anib, and the Heb. aib, are defined, an adversary an enemy, as tsr, and stn are defined. Orthodoxy's Satan—its devil—might just as well have been made from either of those three words as from stn. By referring to John xvii., 15, and 1 John ii., 13, before given, in each of which is used the Greek poneros, used here, it will be seen that Haman was an orthodox wicked one—evil one—devil; and we are not without such personal devils in our day—men of evil. In Esther viii., 11, the Heb. is tsrim (plural of tsr), adversaries, Gr., antidikois, adversaries; [In Esther vii., 4, before given, the Gr. gives diabolos for this same Heb. word tsr]; Lat. and Douay, enemies, Ital., every multitude of people armed; E. V., all the power of the people.

Job. i., 6, Heb., ... u, that came (the) sons of God before Jehovah, and came also he stn, that adversary, in midst of them; Gr., came the angeloi, messengers, angels, of God, and that diabolos with them; [the Gr. angeloi of God, is given for the Heb., sons of God. Holy men are called in Scripture sons of God]; Lat., when came (the) sons of God, and was among them also satan; Douay, when the sons of God came, ... satan also was present among them; Ital., a day that the sons of God came, ... and satan came also in midst of them. Job. i., 7, And said Jehovah to he stn, ... u answered he stn; Gr., And said the kurios to that diabolos, ... that diabolos said. The Lat. does not use satan or diabolos in this verse; it gives, To whom Dominus said, ... who answering said; Douay, And the Lord said to him, . . . And he answered and said; Ital., . . . to satan, . . . e satan answered; E, V., . . . unto satan, ... Then satan answered.

Job. i., 8, Heb., And said Jehovah to he stn; Gr., to him; Lat. and Douay, to him; Ital., And the Signore said to satan; E. V., And the Lord said unto satan.

Job i., 9, Heb., he stn; Gr., that diabolos; Lat., Douay, Ital., and E. V., satan.

Job i., 12, Heb. . . . . he stn, twice; Gr., that diabolos, twice; Lat., Douay, Ital., and E. V., satan twice.

Job. i. 14, Heb., mlak (a) messenger; Gr., angelos (an) angel—messenger; Lat., nuntius, (a) messenger; Douay, Ital., and E. V., And there came a messenger . . . . and said, The oxen were ploughing.

Job ii., 1, Heb., ... came (the) sons of God, ... came also he stn, that adversary; Gr., the angeloi of God, ... and that diabolos came; Lat., ... (the) sons of God, ... satan; Douay, the same; Ital., the sons of God, ... satan; E. V., the same.

Job ii., 2, And said Jehovah to he stn, ... answered he stn; Gr., that diabolos, twice; Lat., to satan, ... who answering said; Douay, to satan, ... And he answered; Ital., And the Signore said to satan . . . And satan answered to the Signore, and said; E. V., the same.

Job ii., 3, Heb., And said Jehovah to he stn; Gr., to that diaobolos; Lat., Douay, Ital., and E. V., satan.

Job ii., 4, Heb., he stn; Gr., diabolos; Lat., Douay, Ital., and E. V. satan.

Job ii., 6, Heb., And said Jehovah to he stn; Gr., to that diabolos; Lat., Douay, Ital., and E. V. to satan.

Job ii., 7, Heb., u went out he stn; from face of Jehovah; Gr. that diabolos from the Kurios; Lat., satan from face of Dom'nus; Douay, So satan went forth from the presence of the Lord; Ital., and E. V., the same.

It is plain that diabolos (given in the Greek for the Heb. stn, for which the Latin and the other versions give satan) means tempter, deceiver, seducer, to sin; the same as the breath of evil,—the of evil, symbolized by the whisperer. This dramatic poem represents God as saying to stn,—Gr., to the diabalos, (in Job i., 8) that the character Job impersonated was upright and straight, righteous, fearing God and sr m ro, refractory from wickedness [that is, refractory in opposition to wickedness]; Gr., abstaining from every poneron fragmatos, bad wicked act; Lat., receding from malum, wickedness; Ital., draws himself back from the male; Douay, avoiding evil; E. V., eschewing evil. (The true word here and in v. 1, is wickedness: the Heb., Gr., Lat., and Ital., are the same in both verses). And the poem represents he stn,—Gr., that diabolos—as saying to Jehovah, (Job i., 11, E. V.) But put forth thy hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face. (That is, sore affliction would tempt, seduce, deceive, him to curse Jehovah). And Jehovah is represented as thereupon sorely afflicting the character personified as Job. But the narrative shows that Job faithfully kept his integrity,—did not sin; and that he was blessed by Jehovah.

The Heb. sr, refractory, used in Job i., 1 and 8, is figurative, taken from the refractoriness of young cattle in trying to avoid being yoked; as is shown by the following verses, in each of which the same Heb. word occurs.

In Hosea iv., 16, it occurs twice. The Hebrew there is, ... as (a) heifer refractory, refractory Israel; Gr., as (a) heifer running about furiously, hath run about furiously Israel; Lat., as a cow wanton hath turned one way or other, Israel; Douay, Israel hath gone astray like a wanton heifer; Ital., Israel is become stubborn, like a heifer stubborn; E. V., Israel slideth back like a backsliding heifer. [The Douay entirely mistakes the meaning; the Italian comes nearer to it. In those days they yoked heifers, and they do yet in some countries.] Nehem. ix., 29, Heb., and presented a shoulder refractory; Gr., a back indocile; Lat., (a) shoulder receding; Ital., was restive in refusing to present the shoulder; Douay and E. V., withdrew the shoulder.

Zech. vii., 11, Heb., and presented a shoulder refractory; Gr., a back delirious; Lat., turned away the shoulder receding; Douay, turned away the shoulder to depart; Ital., presented a shoulder stubborn; E. V., pulled away the shoulder.

Does any man think that the book of Job is to be taken literally—that it was intended to give an account of a literal conversation between Jehovah and Orthodoxy's Satan—Devil?

WE WOULD SEE JESUS.

BY REV. M. M. G. DANA.

OUR religion centers in the person of Christ, and hence to discover its nature and designs we need to see him. The world is busy making out who he is, and books are multiplying which undertake to answer the great questions connected with his being. The foremost thought in men's minds is to see him who has made such an indelible impression upon the world's life. This question which the curious Greeks that came up to worship at the feast put to Philip, is still the all-absorbing one, and the first step cannot be taken in religion without seeing Jesus.

For, 1. Jesus reveals God. "Show us the Father, and it sufficeth us," said one of the disciples, and the reply of Jesus was, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father." Christ is God impersonated. He is the heart of God, laid open, that men might almost hear the beat of its unutterable throbbings, might almost feel the rush of its mighty pulsations. It was God who looked forth on men through the eyes of Christ, God who spake to men through the voice of Christ, and until we see Jesus, we are ignorant of who that Being is, we call God. We know nothing of what his feelings are toward us.

2. Jesus unfolds God's purposes. The apostle tells us, "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." The plan of redemption, it was the errand of Jesus to declare, and men learned from him what were the divine intentions, and in what way they could regain the divine favor. Jesus was the outcome of God's reconciling, atoning love. How exactly Omnipotence will set about the work of winning back to allegiance a lost race, Jesus declares. He interpreted to the world the fatherhood of God, and announced that all, of every grade, might become his sons. All the mystery pertaining to sin and its removal, Jesus cleared up, for he made manifest God's method of destroying its power and overruling its effects.

3. Jesus brings to man the inspiration of God. "Come see a man that told me all things that ever I did," was the convicted woman's testimony to Jesus' influence upon her. Paul, seeing him in the blinding vision that met him on his way to Damascus, was changed from a persecutor to a preacher of truth. "I am come that ye might have life," and ever since his advent, with what new hopes and aspirations Jesus has filled the hearts of men, meeting with God-like exuberance every possible necessity of human nature. Those who came to him, he lifted to an altogether higher range of life. The man, whose fearful condition had gained him the name of Legion, was found "sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind." The woman that came into his presence, though a sinner, was reclaimed and forgiven, while the stony Pharisee who sat at meat with him, was taught the nature of penitence a d divine love. Jesus thus introduced a new spirit into man, and brought to him the refreshing inspiration of God.

Reader, it is no dead theological Christ I bid you see, but Jesus, the Son of God, who challenges your faith and commends your service. "Keep your eye upon Jesus, and the unsearchable riches that are in him," said the saintly McCheyne. Much as men hear and know of Jesus, it is lamentably true, that their eyes, like those of the disciples journeying to Emmaus, are too often holden, so that they do not recognize him, and we all need to pray,

> We would see Jesus, the great rock-foundation,
> Whereon our feet were set by sovereign grace,
> Not life nor death, with all their agitation,
> Can hence remove us, if we see his face.

Signs of the Times.

The Pittsburg Christian Advocate, in a late issue, in an article on "The Hour and its Demands," gives a picture of the present state of the world, which one would think, should open its eyes to the fact that we are near the closing of this age or dispensation. How perfectly insane men must be that dream of the "Conversion of the world," when wickedness and judgment are so palpable to their eyes. Can they not see, that "wicked men and seducers are waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived?" Does not the prophetic word clearly mark such a development as the sign of the end of this age? Christian men and men not Christian see a crisis coming; but they deceive themselves and others with the fancy cry of "peace and safety," when "sudden destruction shall come upon them, and they shall not escape." Hear the Advocate, and let it and all others take warning. It says:

Human affairs seem to be approaching a crisis. Great events thicken around us. Decades of years now accomplish results that formerly required centuries. Sin moves with quickened steps; so too holiness. The hour is instinct with momentous deeds.

A night of crime is settling down upon the world. In our own nation it is dark and tempestuous, passional and tragic. Drunkenness runs riot. Speculation is unsettling the foundations of public confidence. Skepticism is robbing all classes of their faith and hopes. Fraud and dishonesty darken the halls of trade. Robberies and murders are frequent. Peculation and bribery dwell in high places. The land is full of wickedness. Great cities are seats of sin, pollution, wretchedness. Not over-drawn is this life-picture of to-day.

The counterpart and corrective of all this is seen in the steps of God's Providence, admonishing men in the tempest and the earthquake. Turn seaward, and behold the tornado engulfing vast argosies of ships. Look northward, and witness the earthquake shocks that extend far inland from the ocean; or southward, and see them accompanied by mountainous tidal waves that submerged fleets and cities. It is Jehovah who speaks to man in the tremblings of the rock-ribbed earth and destroying winds. And what shall we say of cholera, travelling like a destroying angel, among the nations; of other epidemics, decimating ship loads of emigrants, or falling upon communities and depopulating them; or of fires, explosions, and railroad accidents that destroy millions of property and thousands of lives, and send thrills of sadness through widely-scattered homes? Are not these God's messengers of wrath—his visible footsteps—dissuading from evil deeds, and sent as warnings to the incorrigible? They premonish the evil-doer that God is just, as well as good, and that the day of retribution will certainly come. They are daily-occurring revelations of God to show his eternal hatred of sinful deeds.

Webster's Dictionary Unabridged.

New Illustrated, over 3000 fine engravings.

We have just received this work from the publishers, G. & C. Merriam, Springfield, Mass. For the lack of time to give it a thorough examination, we give the following commendation from the Boston Congregationalist:

The New Webster a New Work.—We have commended this edition warmly already, on the faith of our first examination of it. It has grown upon us in every day's farther study. We did not, at first, comprehend how entirely new a work this is, as compared even with the last preceding edition; and how important had been the etymological revision which it has received, making it, for substance, a rewritten volume, with all that was admirable and superior in the previous contributions of a generation to its pages, preserved and augmented by a thorough concentration upon it of the best skill and widest research of the present. As it stands, in its etymologies, in its definitions, in its synonyms, and in its (real) illustrations—it is far in advance of any other manual which offers itself to the aid of the student of the multifarious wealth of the composite English tongue.

The man who will buy and habitually and properly use Webster's Unabridged Illustrated Dictionary, in its latest and noblest form, has no excuse for not using the English language with intelligence, accuracy and force.

It is not a sectarian dictionary. We do most sincerely believe that all sects will find their especial phrases of faith more exactly and fairly and fully given in Webster than in any or all others put together.

American Methodism Moving.

The signs of the times indicate that God is speaking to the church to leave its stand-still position, and directing her leaders as he did Moses, to "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." Whether they will obey, remains to be seen. The Methodist Episcopal Church, with others, has been at a dead stand in church government and in doctrine for over a hundred years; but signs of new life begin to appear; and we hope they will find not only that their church government, but their doctrinal theory, also, needs improving. We know that some of its ministers and members feel there is a necessity for both. At present, however, their governmental affairs are mainly agitating that denomination; but that is sure to lead to reform in doctrine ultimately.

Hitherto their annual and general conferences have been composed exclusively of ministers. By them all laws and regulations for the government of the church have been enacted, and also executed. This state of things has been tolerated and endured for long years. There is now a waking up on this subject; and a "lay delegation" is sought to be introduced into all their conferences. This is as it always should have been; but it meets with strong opposition; yet the idea is advancing, and some of that church's strongest ministers are coming, or have come, over to this side of the question.

At a recent meeting to promote the object, held at Newark, N. J., we find Dr. Stevens is a convert to the view of a "lay delegation." He is a very prominent minister in that denomination, having edited, formerly, the official paper of that body, and was once strongly opposed to the proposed change; but a revolution has come over him. At the above meeting, at Newark, Dr. Stevens made a speech. The following is the first paragraph, and we commend it to all such as cry out against men because they sometimes change their views. He said:

Mr. President and brethren: I venture to claim a special right to speak on this subject, for what I think will be considered by wise men a valid reason—the fact that I have changed my opinion upon it. In one of the speeches of my estimable friend, Bishop Simpson, he made the same plea. There is hardly an old Methodist among us, I suppose, who was not once on the other side. I was born into the church in the time of the old radical controversy, and was educated to believe lay representation an inadmissible heresy. Practically it was proscribed. I doubt very much whether a young man could then have got admission into an annual conference if it was understood that he was a "radical" on this question. Thus trained, I accepted the theory of the Church, and in later years defended it with my pen, but never with an original argument. The citations from my writings, made by opponents, are only the arguments of our old authorities, sincerely reuttered by me in my pupilage. I changed my opinion before the controversy revived in the church. I have indeed the grave responsibility of being the first church editor to open our official press for the resuscitated question. A man who has thus revised and changed his views is, I think, entitled to be heard. An ancient philosopher said that "a wise man finds it necessary sometimes to change his opinions—a fool never." If not a wise man myself I may at least follow the example of the wise.

These are noble sentiments, and such is a noble confession; and following out the principle, we see not how it is possible but what ultimately it must lead to a reform in doctrine, especially on the immortal soul doctrine, and its attendant, eternal torment. The defenders of those doctrines cannot boast of "an orignal argument," in any thing they have said in this generation, not excepting Dr. Stevens himself. We would be glad to see him and his fellow-laborers all confessing that those old relics of barbarism came to them by their being "born into the church" which held them; for sure we are they never learned them by an unbiased study of the Bible. We are rejoiced, therefore, to see signs of looking beyond old stereotyped practices, and shall look to see it reach beyond, to doctrines that have no foundation in the word of God. Truly "a fool never changes his opinions." We trust our old fellow-workers in the M. E. Church will demonstrate that they are not of that class.

Another remarkable paragraph in Dr. Stevens' speech is the following, in his defence of the change in their church government by the introduction of the lay element. He said:

In the first place, I contend that the genius and spirit of Christianity—I mean apostolic, primitive Christianity—justify the change. Nothing is more clear, and nothing was more distinctly enunciated in the Reformation, and is more tenaciously held yet by the very best minds of the Lutheran Church in Prussia, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and, indeed everywhere, than the doctrine of the priesthood of the people, the essential equality of all saints in the kingdom of God on earth. It is a glorious, a magnificent idea. The promulgation of that great thought by apostolic Christianity was the ecclesiastical emancipation of the world. Look into your New Testament to settle the question of church government—of the relative rights of clergy and people, and what do you find in it? Not a single injunction, except that most general one, "Let all things be done decently and in order."

Here again are noble sentiments; and we most heartily thank him for their expression. It is this position we have occupied ever since we withdrew from the M. E. Church, in 1840, twenty-eight years ago. All the true believers in Christ collectively constitute the body of the "royal priesthood." One is no more a priest than another; but one may have bestowed on him a talent for a more public speaker than another; but that gives him no right to be a "lord over" another's "faith," but only to "be helpers of their joy" by assisting to a clearer understanding of the truth. Praise the Lord that this light is speading.

The primitive Christians, or Jews, had been accustomed to certain simple ecclesiastical usages, founded in practical convenience, but without a word of divine prescription. They copied them into their new organization. They found a young man who had charge of the Synagogue, and he was called in our language, a servant—in the New Testament, a deacon. He had the care of the synagogue edifice and its charities, looked after the poor and sometimes expounded. They found an old man there, and he was called an elder—a presbyter, in the Greek of the New Testament. There is where you get your titles of presbyter and deacon. This old man presided on the platform and read the law on the Sabbath, and, closing the book, said on one occasion, as you recollect, "If any man has a word of exhortation, let him speak on," and the deacons, or anybody else, addressed the people. When Christ went into the synagogue, he took the elder's place and read and expounded. When Paul was in the synagogue, and heard the elder call upon any to speak, he arose and preached Jesus and the resurrection. Here is the germ of all our church system.

Surely a church that can sit and hear such words of truth from one of her most eminent sons, and hear them too with applause, as was the case during the speech, is in a hopeful condition as to other reforms. We cannot expect any man or body of men to travel out of all their traditional errors in a day, any more than ancient Israel could drive out all the old inhabitants of Canaan in a day. All we can reasonably ask, is, that they "Go forward." and make no league with that which God indicates he would have rooted out. Compromises are fatal in all reforms. If Israel had never made any compromises with the doomed inhabitants of Canaan, they would sooner have possessed the land, and not have learned the wicked ways of its old inhabitants, and so lost it again.

In further speaking of the government of the primitive church, Dr. Stevens said:

It was not copied, I reaffirm, from the Levitical system; it had no divine prescription, and has no divine injunction; it was all copied from the Jewish provincial customs, and simply because these were expedient, decent, impressive; Christianity thus started untrammelled for its career over all the planet and down all the ages. Its present ecclesiastical fetters were not wrought at Jerusalem; they were forged in the Vatican, and among the Greek hierarchs. . . . . . The conclusion, then, is this—that church government, in the light of primitive Christianity, is a matter of expediency. This generalization is historically, logically, indefeasibly true. All the best Lutheran writers on church history attest it, and with it dissolve, as phantasms, all our difficulties respecting lay representation, so far as apostolic Christianity is concerned. And how grand are the consequences of this truth! But though there is no priesthood, no technical or "clerical" priesthood in the Christian church, there is, indeed, a glorious priesthood in Christianity—a priesthood of the people, of all saints, and this crowned by a higher, a diviner Pontificate.

That is a glorious and Bible "conclusion." Let it be carried out, and "the people" will begin to feel that the demand on them by the Head of the Church to "search the Scriptures," does not mean, let the clergy search for you, and you be content to take their conclusions without questioning their correctness. Each "saint" is as really a priest as any other in the church; and you are bound not to let any man, whether the so-called "clergy" or others, "lord it over your faith." "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free, and be not entangled in a yoke of bondage" to any man or body of men. To Christ alone are we responsible for our faith; and no popish bulls, or other ecclesiastical fulminations or anathemas should deter any one from searching the Scriptures, and receiving, as to faith and practice, what we honestly believe to be its teaching; and if any professed Christian organization denounces us for it, let them know, Christ is our Judge, and to him we appeal against their denunciations.

The following extract from Dr. Stevens' speech, though somewhat long, will be found very interesting. We do not, of course, agree with every expression in it: especially not in the idea that "the kingdom of God has come." Not yet, Br. Stevens; but we trust it will soon. We think a clearer light on this point will yet be seen by those who are on the forward movement. Dr. Stevens said, on the priesthood of the people:

St. Paul pronounced Jesus Christ the High Priest, yet St. Paul was guarded lest it might be thought he had some reference to Levitical authority or Jewish precedent. He argues that Jesus was not a high priest after the order of Aaron, but after that of Melchisedec. Melchisedec was king of Salem. Abraham found him a royal priest, a monotheist, worshipping the true God. He appears merely in a passing allusion in the Biblical history. St. Paul speaks of him, therefore, as without beginning and without end—that is, as apparently or historically so. And thus he, not the Levitical high priest, symbolizes the Christian high priest. Beside this high priesthood there is none other recognized by Christianity but the common and glorious priesthood of all saints. Neander, our highest authority in church history, asserts the doctrine of the priesthood of the people. He affirms that, not only Peter and John expressly teach it, but that the epistle to the Hebrews, in its whole tenor, maintains it. In the final triumph of our great High Priest, the veil of the temple was rent; the way was opened for all the new Christian priesthood to enter where only the Levitical high priest had hitherto dared to penetrate, and the great apostle now summons all "with boldness to enter into the holiest" place. Ye, the people, are "a royal priesthood," "kings and priests unto God," declare Peter and John, in announcing the new era. All preceding religions, throughout the world, had priesthood, pontificates, but a revolutionary epoch, in the spiritual world, has set in with Christianity; the kingdom of God has come with power, and all humanity entering it, became consecrated to priestly and regal dignity and responsibilty. Sublime fact! Magnificent emancipation! The Lutheran reformation, and the present structure of the Lutheran Church throughout Europe, were based, I repeat, upon this idea. The Lutheran churches refuse to call their clerical grades "orders;" they recognize them simply as officers. They thus assert my general position: the essential equality of all saints in the kingdom of God; the priesthood of the people; the priesthood of the sexton yonder at the door, if he is a devout man, as well as of the teacher or "minister" here in the altar; the priesthood of the chorister yonder and all around him, if they are real disciples; the priesthood of the mechanic and the farmer—of all. Whoever enters into the church of a living Christian should be recognized, from the pews and from the pulpit, as arrayed in pontifical robes, ministering in the church, in his home, in his workshop, everywhere, in the common divine service of an evangelical life. That is the Bible doctrine of priesthood (applause), and it is a sublime doctrine. You who have read the proceedings of the public gathering of the Evangelical Lutheran churches and of the Christian Alliance on the Continent, will recollect how emphatically those great evangelical divines urged the revival of this idea. They said virtually: "We must revivify the doctrine; we must scatter it like lightning over the whole heavens of the church: we must wake up all the laity to feel that they are priestly and have priestly responsibilities—that there is no distinction among us but that of office for convenience." The primitive church had, as we said, functionaries gifted with 'tongues' and 'miracles,' and there were deaconesses also. God has withdrawn miraculous gifts; and other functions, meeting a contemporary need, have ceased, but he has left the office of teaching, of preaching, of spreading the divine truth. We preachers of the gospel are only the executive officers of the common priesthood. As all cannot preach together without confusion, the church selects those most competent, and virtually says: "Go you up and do the talking in the pulpit, and we will do our talking in the vestry, the class meeting, the Sunday school, the home." That is the doctrine of the priesthood of the people. (Applause.)

One brief extract more from Dr. Stevens' speech, shall close. Speaking of the objections to this reform by admitting lay delegates to their conferences, he said:

Our opponents stand before the American people, controverting the expediency of this reform, because they are afraid it will be an "entering wedge" to something more. I thank God that it will be an "entering wedge!" When our fathers constructed this government, did they not understand that, by popular sovereignty, there would be change after change? That was one of their arguments for it. No government, no system of education, of social life, of science, or any thing on this planet, can stand stereotyped forever. The human race is on its march; the forces of humanity must revolve as certainly as the planet revolves; and if you fix a government or anything on the earth, except the great absolute principles of morality and right, and revealed supernatural truth—if you bind it in iron, it will be wrenched again into liberty and motion, if even Church and State are rent to pieces. By the law of nature and of God, stagnation is death.

Here is truth well and forcibly spoken. We rejoice that such truth is admitted in high places, and by men of influence. Let us all "thank God" that an "entering wedge" is being introduced into American Methodism. May it not only change their old "stereotyped" church government, but so much of their stereotyped theology as relates to the unscriptural notions of "young immortal souls" (a phrase Dr. Stevens uses in this very speech), and such souls in "eternal torments:" a theology this which is a thousand times more injurious to pure Christianity and the character of God than any mere change in the form of the government of their church. We beseech them not to "tithe mint, anise and cummin," and neglect or omit the vastly more important matter of purity of doctrine. Remember the "entering wedge" has found a lodgment in the M. E. church, and "hell torments" is not preached among you as in former days; and no such "stereotyped" system as that of inherent immortality and eternal torments "can stand forever;" and we sincerely invite Dr. Stevens and his noble band of fellow workers to take hold of those horrible doctrines, which have so long been the disgrace of Christianity, and sweep them away. They will as surely be swept away "as the planets revolve" in their spheres. No such corruptions of God's pure truth can forever withstand the war now waged against them. Help them, ye men of God.

"A Defence of the Bible."

As the proposition has been made to put the articles on this subject, that have appeared of late in this paper, in a pamphlet, it is best that our friends should know something of the probable cost of such a project. It will make a pamphlet of about 32 pages, Bible Examiner size. The stereotype plates will cost between $40 and $50. Then the paper, press work, putting up, etc., will be between $30 and $40 more, per 1,000. It will thus be seen that the first 1,000 copies will cost between $70 and $90; or from 7 to 9 cents a copy; and the second 1,000 between $30 and $40, or from 3 to 4 cents per copy. We do not pretend to have made anything more than a probable estimate, but the cost cannot vary much from it. So soon as $50 are received, we will put the matter into the hands of the compositors and stereotypers. We wait for the responses.

Back Numbers.

Almost every new subscriber that we receive asks us to commence with the number containing our first speech, "A Defence of the Bible." That, and the one following are all gone, so that we have not been able to supply them for some weeks past; and, to add to our vexations, our pressman neglected to print the 75 extra ones for last week, which we promised; and we did not learn his neglect till the entire edition had been completed.

We can furnish new subscribers, now, with only three numbers back of the present. The misfortune spoken of above may be remedied if the "Defence of the Bible" is to be published in pamphlet. See the statement on the subject in this paper.

The Pope Couldn't Help Him.

Michael Angelo, the famous painter, painting in Pope Clement's chapel the portraiture of hell and damned souls, made one of the damned look so like a cardinal that was his enemy, that every one knew it at first sight. The cardinal complained to the Pope, and asked that it be effaced. The Pope said to him, "Why, you know very well I cannot deliver a soul from hell." The Pope's wit was equal to the painter's satire.

But the "Pope's wit" was greater than his wisdom; for it proved, beyond all controversy, that he is not "God upon earth;" for God delivered "a soul out of hell." One there was whose "soul was not left in hell." The Psalmist said, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell:" and Peter said "His soul was not left in hell." And the Lord said, "I will ransom them from the power of hell (sheol)" . . . . . "O hell (sheol) I will be thy destruction." Hosea xiii., 14. Poor, poor Pope! What a "vicegerent" of God he must be! He "cannot deliver a soul from hell"! No, not he! It may be questioned whether the whole system of papacy and its upholders do not, ere long, go into hell, never to be delivered from it. Of course, we use the term hell not in the theological sense, but in the Bible sense. How many Popes, cardinals, priests, and their satellites, will be unable to get out of hell, it is not for us to say; there is one that knoweth.

Questions.

"H. G. A." Trenton, N. J., writes: I want you or some of the readers of the Herald to answer me these questions. (1.) Cannot God's everlasting kingdom be greatly hastened by the combined prayers of his people, if concentrated on that particular object? (2.) If not so, why does Jesus teach us to pray to that effect? (3.) And again, will not God avenge his own elect, that cry day and night unto him? I tell you, he will, and that speedily. Nevertheless, when the Son of Man cometh, will he find (this) faith on the earth? I hope he may.

Remarks by the Editor.—We confess ourself unprepared to give an answer to H. G. A.'s first question: but if it is thus to be hastened, we think it will be by a special outpouring of the spirit of grace and supplication, as the time approacheth and troubles increase in the earth. (2.) Jesus taught his followers to pray, "Thy kingdom come;" perhaps not to hasten it, but to keep the fact alive in our minds that such a kingdom is what we are to "look for:" so that "we, according to his promise, look for a new heaven and a new earth;" or the renewrl of all things. Prayer is well calculated to keep alive the subject in our minds, and to beget an earnest desire for the event, and thus tends to lead us to a full preparation for it.

(3.) This question is answered by our Lord himself. It, not unlikely, is intended to instruct us that there will be from some cause, a special cry of true believers for help from God just prior to the glorious deliverance o the church. "Nevertheless," it seems there will be a general unbelief on the subject among the great body of professing Christians, at that time.

Paternal Influence.

A young minister, when about to be ordained, stated that at one period of his life he was nearly an infidel. "But," said he, "there was one argument in favor of Christianity which I could never refute—the consistent conduct of my father!"

Let parents lay such things to heart. The life that they manifest, before their children, must and will have a tremendous influence for good or evil on them. And those parents who leave their religious training to others, whether ministers or teachers of any class, are casting off a responsibility that may prove fatal to their children. God has ordained that parents should have a deeper interest in the welfare of their offspring than any others can have, and has entrusted the direction of their opening minds to their hands, and they should feel that he will hold them responsible not only for what they teach their children, but for the lives they live before them. Life or death, most likely, will come to the children by the manner of life they witness in their parents. Remember this, fathers and mothers.

Napoleon.

Garibaldi answered Victor Hugo in verse, and the poem has been translated into English. The stern patriot is something of a poet, and his remarks concerning the French Emperor are very sharp and pretty well directed. He says:

> Warned off from Mexico—foiled at Berlin—
> He slew my lads—my Roman boys! to "win
> Prestige." He won it. Ah! good Friend! thy verse
> Thunders the judgment of a righteous curse
> On those soiled laurel leaves. But let him be,
> He does the things he must! Wait thou and see!
> A little while his shameless scheme prevails,
> A little while, and God's long-suffering fails.
> And when he ends, and we may pity him,
> The dawn will break on Europe dead and dim;
> The dawn of brotherhood, and love, and peace,
> The light of a new time, when there shall cease
> This clang of armies over Christian lands;
> And nations, tearing off their Lazarus-bands,
> Shall rise—see face to face—and sadly say,
> "Why were we foes? why did we serve—and slay?"

Yes, the political career of Europe's cunning, shameless schemer is near its close. Great events will doubtless soon transpire in that country, but they will presage the dawn of a "new time" of "brotherhood, and love and peace," only so far as they herald the coming of him who shall establish the reign of eternal peace, "when there shall cease this clang of armies" altogether; and when there shall be nothing to "hurt nor destroy in all" God's "holy mountain." Then shall "every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth," bless, and honor, and glorify "him that sitteth upon the throne," "for ever and ever." L. C. T.

A Fixed Time.

We understand that Mr. Mansill, of Ill., has published a pamphlet on "The Age and Life of Our Earth;" and that he predicts its destruction in sixty-four thousand millions of years (64,000,000,000). We think there may be some sort of collusion between this profound author and modern theologians, as that must be about the length of time that it will take them to "evangelize (so termed) the world." As revelation instructs us that the earth is to be the inheritance of the saints we are inclined to the opinion, that the aforesaid planet never did, and never will, this side that time, look so fresh and blooming as when the very remote period above designated arrives. However, we will wait and see. Sixty-four thousand millions of years seems like a long while to wait, but then it is a very small part of eternity, and we shall so long before be glorified that the point will soon be reached. L. C. T.

"Hid from their Eyes."

What is hid from their eyes? The true cause of the indifference to the great Bible doctrine of the resurrection of dead ones. Of this blindness we were deeply impressed lately by a rebuke administered by the Advent Herald, a paper holding to the conscious state of the dead, to those who make so little of the resurrection. By request, it publishes an article from the Ladies' Repository, and follows

i. with some "reasons why many Christians are so little interested in the doctrine of the resurrection," but has entirely overlooked or ignored the main reason. Both parties are opposed to the true doctrine of the necessity of the resurrection of dead ones. But we give both articles as they appeared in the Advent Herald, and then will follow them with further remarks. They are as follow:

THINK MORE OF THE RESURRECTION.

"If we may judge of people's habitual thoughts by their public prayers, it is clear that the precious and glorious doctrine of the resurrection is not made much of by a majority of Christians. They think a great deal more of immediate bliss after death. Go into almost any prayer meeting, and notice how many prayers close with an earnest desire that after we have finished our earthly life, we may be received to heaven, and how few make any hearty reference to the resurrection. It seems to be a habit of modern Christianity to set the heart on the glory immediately following death, and make only a cold doctrinal account of the awaking at the last day. It is not difficult to explain this. It is a blessed thing to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord; and as we are accustomed to put the last day far into the future, it is not strange that our hearts seize fondly upon the nearer bliss, especially as that is associated with so many loved ones, 'not lost, but gone before.' But this dismissing of the resurrection from our experience and our fervent worship, is not right. We ought to love the doctrine. We shall if we think of it rightly. It may satisfy our present desire of happiness to think only of the rest and joy of the intermediate state, but have we no heart to dwell on the glory of God in completing the work of redemption. We may say that heaven after death is enough for us, but is it enough for God's glory? Does it not consummate his mighty plan of salvation? Moreover, if he has promised to us a higher glory at the last day, is it becoming in us to let it pass from our hopes and to take up with anything inferior? Christianity is a revelation, and it was not revealed as reaching its end in death. What would one think of Christ's work if he had not risen from the grave? The apostles, whose mode of looking at this subject is our law, set their hearts upon the resurrection. Paul was in a strait about desiring the redemption of his body. He says, 'not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon—that mortality might be swallowed up of life.' When he gives thanks to 'God who giveth us the victory' he does not mean the victory by which the soul is rescued, and the body left to decay: 'for when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory.'"—Ladies' Repository.

The above article reminds us of one of Dr. Adam Clarke's notes on 1 Cor. chapter xv.—the longest chapter in the Bible which treats of the resurrection. He says:

One remark I cannot help making: the doctrine of the resurrection appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive Christians than now. How is this? The apostles were continually insisting on it, and inciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness through it; and their successors in the present day seldom mention it! So apostles preached, and so primitive Christians believed. So we preach, and so our hearers believe. There is not a doctrine in the gospel on which more stress is laid, and there is not a doctrine of the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect!

There are at least two reasons why many Christians are so little interested in the doctrine of the resurrection, viz. (1). Placing the coming of Christ so far in the future that it is not likely to occur in their day—perhaps not for hundreds or thousands of years yet; and (2), Losing sight of the true inheritance of the saints—the earth renewed. As the result, much of the glory and blessedness which belong to the resurrection state, is transferred to the intermediate state; but as we would not call the "peace in believing and joy in the Holy Ghost" which Christians have in this world, any part of their "reward" or inheritance, so neither are the rest and comfort of Paradise and the companionship of Abraham (Luke xvi., 22, 25) after death, the promised reward. The day of reward and of coronation is when the King comes (Rev. xxii., 12; 1 Peter v., 4). Under the metaphorical denominative of a "crown" the regal dignity of the everlasting kingdom which God has promised to them that love him is presented. But that kingdom is to be "under the whole heaven" (Dan. vii., 27;) the meek are to "inherit the earth and dwell therein forever" (Psalm xxxvii.,) if therefore Christ never comes to remove the curse from the earth and make it new and glorious—the saints never receive their inheritance—2 Peter iii., 12, 13. When all "the excellent of the earth"—the saved of our race—are redeemed from the domain of death, and with their glorified King inherit the glorified earth (Numb. xiv., 21), then—and not till then, will they be rewarded according to the promises of the divine Master. We believe there will be no failure. The power of God is sufficient to accomplish all he has promised; and, resting on his word, we await "the resurrection—the first." To us it has powerful attractions.—Advent Herald.

REMARKS BY ED. OF HER. OF LIFE.—It will be seen that these two papers are largely in harmony, though opposites. Neither of them dare oppose the resurrection; hence are agreed there is to be one; they also agree that the dead are not dead, but alive and happy—i. e., the saints: hence, also, they both make a resurrection impossible; for that which is not dead cannot in any true sense have a resurrection. The two papers reel one against the other. One carries the saints immediately to heaven, where they would be happy enough without a resurrection, if it was not in "God's plan" to have one, "completing the work of redemption;" and, though inspiration saith, "in thy presence there is fulness of joy," yet it cannot be without "the plan" of the resurrection is completed! Our friend of the Repository, to make out his explanation of the matter, very curiously overturns one of the texts of his party for the intermediate consciousness, by quoting Paul as more anxious for the resurrection "of his body" than to get to heaven at death; for, saith the Repository, "He [Paul] says, 'not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life.'" True; and Paul never uttered so foolish an expression as that his "soul was going to heaven" at death: or to "paradise" as the Advent Herald has it; no, never. He looked to Christ's coming "from heaven"—"at the last trump."

The Advent Herald says, "There are at least two reasons why many Christians are so little interested in the doctrine of the resurrection." It gives us those "two," but it happens that neither of them is the true one. The true one is, they deny, and are "satans" to the doctrine that life future can be had only in one way, viz., by a resurrection of dead ones "at the last day;" that till then the saints "sleep in the dust of the earth," and their "life is to be hid with Christ in God," and that that life will never be developed unless "Christ, who is our life," shall "descend from heaven, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God;" "then shall the dead in Christ awake;" till then they are "asleep," and are not in heaven, nor in paradise, and this invention of pagans and the corruptors of Christianity has well nigh banished not only the resurrection, but the coming of Christ "from heaven," from the theology of this age. "Confusion worse confounded" is the result; and men are built up with a false hope about a future life, and Christ is robbed of the glory of being both "the resurrection and the life." Let not "satan rebuke sin;" i. e., let not those who teach souls to go to paradisiacal bliss at death, rebuke those who send souls to heaven; for both are virtual adversaries to the resurrection of dead ones.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM LEONARD C. THORNE.

SAVANNAH, Ga., March 2, 1868.

BR. STORRS: In writing from this point few topics are more urgent in claiming our consideration at this time than the very important one respecting the present condition of the South, and sentiments of the people. The more is this so, because of the accepted fact that upon the establishment of order and good government in this now socially and politically disorganized and chaotic part of our country, largely depends the restoration of harmony, confidence, and commercial and industrial activity throughout all the States. The all-absorbing subject—to the discussion of which every traveller in the South, who associates to any considerable extent with the people, must either be a willing, or an unwilling listener—is "politics." Almost everywhere one hears the subject argued by men exhibiting nearly every degree of mental excitement. This, too, when hunger is gnawing at their very vitals, and starvation stalks through the land.

Of all the industrial pursuits of the South, agriculture is compelled to undergo the most radical changes. The public mind in this section has not yet begun to appreciate the great transformations that will have to be wrought, in domestic and agricultural economy, for instance, to meet the new state of things brought about by the war. And instead of considering that matter; instead of discussing the comparative merits of certain various principles and appliances, respecting their adaptation to the most rapid and effectual development of the productive resources of the country; instead of inculcating a recognition of the need for early conformity to those practices and usages which, under a system of free labor, can alone assure profitable farming and manufacturing; instead of insisting upon an acceptance of the stern, though, to them, unpleasant fact that the necessity for labor on the part of all, white as well as colored, has become imperative; they overlook almost every feature of true policy and yield themselves willing subjects of the ruinous hallucination that uncertain, exciting, treacherous politics affords a broad highway to success and future greatness. A barometer is not more sensitive to atmospheric changes than is Southern sentiment to the rumors that reach here from Washington. When Mr. Johnson, the so called defender of the Constitution, seems to have gained advantage, they are defiant and talk open war, actually believing, many of them, that the existing political differences at the North can only be settled by an appeal to arms; but when Congress is triumphant, they are vexed and sullen. This frequent and constant excitement of hopes, promising some undefinable advantage suddenly to accrue, so diverts attention from objects of vital interest as to result in a lamentable neglect of almost everything really calculated to lift them out of the condition of destitution and beggary into which they are plunged. Their power in the Government was once pre-eminent, and at last their insatiate thirst for more cost them all. But all their bitter experience of the past few years has failed to teach them that true power is only to be secured by the development of moral and industrial strength, for they are still infatuated by the idea that political power must first be obtained and all else will necessarily follow. And that this power, too must be wielded by them, is shown by the deep, though yet moderately silent, current of opposition to the proceedings of the Constitutional Conventions. In this state, Georgia, for instance, a new Constitution, embracing new principles, consequent upon the changed social and industrial relations, will soon be presented to the people for ratification. It is almost a foregone conclusion that bitter opposition to it on the part of disunion press and leaders will be made. However liberal, enlightened, and wise the Constitution may be, its provisions will be assailed with a fury, and opposed with tenacious stubborness of spirit, such as only a disappointed and maddened faction can be capable of, for they will then hope to prevent ratification. In analyzing the cause of this opposition, hatred toward the "negro," as a part of the people, and toward those in the North whose efforts, under God, frustrated the designs of traitors, is found to be no inconsiderable element. Last year I returned from the South with the conviction that the freedmen were being grossly misrepresented and libelled respecting their imputed unwillingness to labor; and my observation so far this year has contributed not a little to the strengthening of that conviction. That there is a strong disinclination to work is undeniable; but it is not general, and my belief is, that the whites are more dangerously afflicted with the malady than are the blacks. As a class, the colored people are kind, quick to forgive injuries, but slow to forget favors, or even kind treatment. One of the numberless attestations to the truth of this is the following incident, vouched for by the Mobile Tribune, a disunion sheet:

An old colored man, whom we will call Jim, entered a well-known commission merchant's store and inquired if he had heard anything from his old "master" (a former patron of the merchant, who lives up the country) lately; that he would like to know how he was. "Yes," responded the merchant, "I am just reading a letter from him, Jim. He is in great trouble, and writes me that his family is suffering greatly. The merchant read certain portions of the letter to Jim, in which his "old master" had depicted the distress of himself and family, and tears coursed down the old African's cheeks. He left the store and returned in about an hour. Handing the merchant a roll of money amounting to forty dollars, he said: "Mars' John, send dis to old marster, and tell him dat it am all his old boy Jim can do for him now, but dat he'll help him all in his power," and pressing the notes into the merchant's hand, the faithful old African sadly left the store.

We hardly need ask what would have been the course of the former owner had "forty dollars" been his all, and he had received information that "Jim" was suffering. Had the circumstances of the two individuals been so far reversed as that the ex-slave had land to work, the magnanimous "old marster" would undoubtedly have said, "Let the 'nigger' get a living off his land."

The freedmen are a people representing every shade of color, from the native African to the nearest possible approach to white, and displaying every degree of intelligence (among the blackest of them I have found instances of fine intellectual capacity). These are they whom so many enlightened Americans judge unfit to take any part in government—incompetent to have any voice in the framing of laws to which they, alike with the whites, are held amenable.

Commotion and distress is confined to no section; our whole country is one vast political cauldron, excited to a heat of fearful intensity, and very few individuals are to be found, especially among those in authority, calm enough to act dispassionately and in the fear of God. When, therefore, we look over our own country and vainly seek some substantial token of a dawn of quiet and safety; when we listen, as listen we must, to the universal and illy-suppressed murmur of unrest, forboding convulsions, among the various nations of the earth, and ask of the world, "When shall these things cease?" Echo hurls back to our eager ears the words of our mouths. Surely and sadly disappointed must all be who look for stability in any human government, for he who said, "As the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and causeth it to bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower and bread to the eater: so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it"—he has declared it his purpose to establish an "everlasting kingdom" upon the earth; but not until "he come whose right it is to rule." Then shall we have stability; for to that government "there shall be no end."

In these times of dire confusion we may not lament "as do others which have no hope;" for we know that each successive outburst, each day of sad misrule, brings us nearer to the glad hour. Let all followers of Jesus be patient, faithful, "always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as" we know that" our "labor is not in vain in the Lord."

FROM RUFUS WENDELL.

SALEM, MARCH 7, 1868.

THE revival in our church here is yielding precious fruits; a good many have started in the way of life, and we hope the work will continue. It has been my privilege to attend the meetings four evenings the present week. They are under the charge of Joseph W. White, of Portsmouth, a brother who entered the world and the ministry about the time I did. He has preached here the past two Sundays, and is to preach here on the 15th inst., as well as on the evenings of next week. I gladly commend him as an efficient worker in the Lord's vineyard and feel sure that his labors are likely to be a blessing wherever he goes. My beloved neighbor, Elder Boutell, is to preach here to-morrow.

May grace be with you all. Your affectionate brother, R. W.

FROM MRS. R. W. PIERCE.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., March, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Excuse me for writing so soon again, but a few thoughts suggested themselves to me, and I thought they might interest some one.

"If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments." How easy it is to obey one that we love; and how we will anticipate his wishes, and how light the task (if task you can call it) to do in every thing as he would have us do. "For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." It is hard for one to wear that yoke, if he has not love in his heart. That is the simple reason why it is such hard work for many professed Christians to serve Christ, and so much more easy to serve the world, because they love the things of the world better than they do Christ. O, how can we love Christ unless we have his spirit? He had the spirit of his Father, and went about doing his Father's work. He said it was more than his meat and drink to do his Father's will. How many of us can say as he did? Christ said, man could not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeded out of the mouth of God. The life that he referred to is the life that is to come. Now, how can we know what every word of God is unless we study his word? O, how many we see, in these last days, trusting to what other people think and say, instead of searching for themselves. He that hungers and thirsts to know the right shall be filled. Blessed promise.

We must work out our own salvation, with fear and trembling, and then to think God is so willing to give us his Spirit to guide us into all truth, if we will but ask him. A Christian lady said to me, the other day, O, if I could be settled on one thing I should be so happy. I told her to just go to her Bible, and search it, as she would for a hidden treasure, and her doubts would go to the four winds. She is attending meetings every day, and she said one day they would tell her she must do so, and the next day something else, and that she was so mixed up she didn't know what to do.

FROM WM. C. METCALF.

HOLDEN, MASS., March 2, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I plead guilty to the charge of tardiness in forwarding my subscription for the current volume of the HERALD. It is not because I have lost my interest in it, or the glorious cause it advocates. On the contrary, both appear, if possible, more precious and desirable than ever before, and necessary, also, to be spread broadcast, with a liberal hand, over fields long since sown with the seeds of error, and now producing a luxuriant harvest of doctrines and creeds, alike dishonoring to God and his holy word, and injurious to the spiritual interests of man.

The great central doctrine, Life Eternal, as the gift of God, through Christ the LIFE-GIVER, conferred, at the resurrection, on those alone who are united to him by faith, seems to me so reasonable in itself, so in harmony with the character of a just and loving Father, and so clearly revealed in the inspired word, that I can hardly see how any honest seeker after truth can fail to grasp it and rejoice in its light. And yet, I am fully aware of the power of prejudice to blind the mind and close up the avenues to conviction and the acceptance of truths which involve the rejection of long-cherished dogmas (especially if implanted in our youthful minds), such as the immortality of the soul, the eternal conscious existence in sin and suffering of the ungodly, and the being of a personal devil, possessed of attributes nearly allied to omnipotence and omnipresence, who is the constant attendant of each individual of our race, inciting to and leading on in every wicked act.

Well do I remember the struggle when, more than fifteen years ago, I was brought to the point where I must give up all investigation of what the Bible did teach, relative to man's nature and destiny—allow others to do my thinking, and prepare my belief for me—and I glide along with the current; or, on the other hand, abandoning many views that I had long cherished, I must subject myself to the coldness, the pity, and censure of brethren whom I loved, and with whom I had labored many years in the church relation.

I found that it required some self-sacrifice—I believe, also, some faith in the Master—to form and carry out the resolution, "That I would lay open my mind to conviction, and be ready to receive as truth, or reject as error, any views, as I should find them to be, or not to be, sustained in the divine word." Nor have I ever seen the day that I regretted the decision then made. The path of duty has appeared more and more plain; the truth more glorious; and the character of God more lovely at every onward step. The things I foresaw, to a considerable extent, came upon me. I found great difficulty in making my brethren understand me; was often misrepresented; and for several years was subjected to church discipline for holding heretical doctrines; yet, out of all these trials, God has led me; nor hath he suffered the "enemy to triumph over me," so that now I can openly teach in the Sabbath school and elsewhere, "Death as the penalty or wages of sin; and a resurrection for the righteous alone, through faith in Christ."

In regard to our HERALD, I think it improves as it grows older. I have been better pleased with it the past six months than ever before; though I have always loved it.

The short sermons, by the Editor, have enhanced its value very much to us who seldom or never enjoy the privilege of listening to such truths from the living voice. The discussions, too, have been extremely interesting to me; particularly on the "resurrection," and the "Personality of the Devil."

Go on, dear brother, removing the rubbish, and tearing off the coverings with which the "Man of Sin" and all his allies have sought to hide the truth, that it may shine forth in all its glory and beauty.

FROM FRED. WINANS.

CHICAGO, ILL., March 4, 1868.

BR. STORRS: When I first came to this place, in May, 1866, I found no regular Advent meetings in progress. The nearest I came to it was a kind of people set in motion by one Mr. Thomas. I there heard such heresy, as I think, if received will prove more fatal than anything held by the sects. They maintain there is no Holy Spirit in the church since the apostolic age; also, the thousand years reign of immortals over mortals, to subjugate them, peaceably if they can, but forcibly if they must. They allowed me some privilege, and would have allowed me all the privileges of the house on the simple condition of going under the water by some of their fraternity. But having undergone this service at the right time, and in the proper place, I declined, informing them that if there were any spots on my garments it would require something more stringent than water to remove them; yet I availed myself of all the liberty afforded me of speaking of practical Christianity and its legitimate fruits; whether to the benefit of any one remains to be determined. However, by continuing to attend, and opening my mouth to say a little something, I finally fell in with a person who informed me of some fragmentary particles of an Advent body, which had discontinued their assembling together in consequence of the sickness of the Elder. I did not then know, but have since ascertained, that it is under the supervision and entire control of one master-mind. So I am still homeless, as I do not believe in such church government. There is the same kind of liberty here as in any of the sects; keep in range of the line; speak nothing but what everybody believes: believe as much of precious Bible truth as you like, and believe what you like, but lock it up in your bosom! How will that agree with the apostles' practice, viz., "We believe, and therefore speak?"

I have lent the HERALD to a number of persons, who like it very much. I shall unsheath the sword, and try to fight a good fight. It will take some time to do much, as the taskmasters are drilled, and very vigilant.

A few weeks since I was asked what paper I took. I answered, Br. Storrs'. Do you take that paper? Yes, I am more or less acquainted with all the Advent papers, and I believe this to be the best one.

There was an old gentleman, some time ago, passed pretty current for an Advent preacher, and a considerable writer, trying to show up Br. Storrs' heresy in the non-resurrection of the wicked. But in showing up the eternal torment theory, his argument, Scriptural and forcible, like Moses' rod, swallowed up all the torment theories; for, if the "good God" would be very bad in resurrecting the wicked to torment them eternally, he would be proportionably bad to resurrect to torment at all. I spoke to one brother and he agreed with me, that if Br. Storrs had been present, he could not have done the cause any better justice.

I want your prayers that I may be stripped for the race and harnessed for the battle.

The church organization, as described by you, in the last HERALD, is all the one I am ever going into.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The same "old gentleman" spoken of by Br. Winans, has often tried to show up our "heresy," but as invariably fails to succeed. The more he opposes us, the more thinking men will see that his own arguments condemn his opposition to our views. He may yet see it himself; but whether he does or not, others will.

FROM J. S. POTTER.

EAST BOSTON, MASS., March 7, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I have just received the HERALD OF LIFE, and I bless God the light is spreading in different parts: to God be all the glory. The Gospel plan never looked so good, so grand and so glorious as it does at the present time. I feel strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. A few of us in this place have been standing as beacon lights, firm on the rock of truth, the past year; while some good friends forsook us and turned in favor of the mortal resurrectionists. But I feel to thank God and take courage; for the tide is turning, light is spreading, and some have ears to hear. May the Lord help them to hear so as to live again. Br. M. M. Young and myself have been trying to spread the light of no future life out of Christ by holding meetings at a private house; and by the labor of love of Sister Andrews and her husband, in whose house the meetings are held, the truth has taken hold of some hearts, and we expect to reap, if we faint not. May the good Lord of the harvest cause the seed soon to spring up and bring forth fruit to the glory of God.

Pray for us, and may the God of all grace bless you in the great work of proclaiming the Gospel of Christ.

Yours in hope of life, (via) of the resurrection of the dead.

As the power of grace comes in at one door, the love of vice will go out at another.

WE can strike up bargains and make contracts by proxy; but all men must work out their salvation in person.

WISDOM—We ought not to judge of men's merits by their qualifications, but by the use they make of them.—Charon.

To see Christians (so called) join hands with worldlings, in vain, sensual amusements, reminds one of the true proverb, "The dog has returned to his vomit, and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire."

OUR NATIONAL FINANCES.—This is the title of a work on the present financial condition of the country, showing the proper course to pursue and means to be adopted to lessen the present oppressive burdens on the industries of the country, and restore its prosperity. This solution of this important question of finance is of interest to every one, and many schemes are before the country, some one of which must be finally adopted. It is well to be properly instructed, therefore, and we think much valuable information will be found in this work, which appears to treat the subject in a free, candid spirit, and with an earnestness that shows the author has the matter much at heart, as well as clear in his mind. The author is S. P. Townsend. Copies are offered to any one sending an order to Macdonald & Swank, No. 37 Park Row, New York, inclosing postage. The author proposes to issue a larger work, shortly on the same subject.

"THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE."
GEO. W. YOUNG, No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son, will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. Halsted, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J.;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.
The work can also be had of W. S. OLMSTEAD, Hartford, Conn.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton avenue and Jay street., at 7½ o'clock. OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Professor Wilson, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For our self, we endorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage, six cents.

All Alone.

DEDICATED TO THE LONE ONES, BY MARIA M. WEAVER.

All alone, The loved one sleeping,
Sleep from which no soul can wake,
Though long, long, strict watch I'm keeping,
On till the morn shall break.

All alone! How drear the world is,
And how empty every sound:
Nothing charms me since my treasures
Moulder beneath the ground!

All alone! My heart beats heavy,
Ah! the load my soul doth bear,
And the gloom that now surrounds me,
Black as the garb I wear.

All alone! Hark, hear the tidings
Of a brighter, better land,
Where I'll meet the loved and lost ones
'Mid the immortal band.

Jesus called, and death delivered
Every saint from either shore:
Happy, happy, ransomed people,
Living, to die no more.

All alone, yet Jesus cheers me
With the hope of life and peace,
And I smile through tears, believing
Soon time's rude storms shall cease.

The Ten Friends.

"I wish that I'd good friends to help me on in life," cried the lazy Dennis, with a yawn.

"Good friends! why, you've ten!" replied his master."

"I'm sure that I've not half so many, and those that I have are too poor to help me."

"Count your fingers, my boy," said his master.

Dennis looked down on his big, strong hands.

"Count thumbs and all," added the master.

"I have—there are ten," said the lad.

"Then never say that you have not ten good friends, able to help you on in life. Try what those true friends can do, before you go grumbling and fretting because you do not get help from others."

Thou, God, Seest Me.

A lady came home from shopping one day, and was not met as usual by the glad welcome of her little son. He seemed shy of her, went into the yard, hung about the garden, and wanted to be more with Bridget than usual. The mother could not account for his manner.

When she was undressing him for bed, "Mother," he asked, "can God see through the crack in the closet door?"

"Yes," said his mother.

"And can he see when it is all dark?"

"Yes," answered the mother, "God can see everywhere, and in every place."

"Then God saw me, and he will tell you, mother. When you were gone I got into your closet, and I took and ate up the cake; and I am sorry, very sorry;" and bowing his head on his mother's lap, he burst out crying.

Poor little boy! all day he had been wanting to hide from his mother, just as Adam and Eve, after they had disobeyed God, tried to hide from his presence in the garden of Eden. Guilt made him afraid. It put a gulf between him and his mother.

How did George get rid of his feeling of guilt and shame? He took the best, the only true way, by repenting and confessing it. His mother forgave him. He was restored to her confidence and love.

Just so must we do toward God. We must confess and repent of our sins, and pray God for Christ's sake to forgive us. Then we may taste the sweets of forgiveness, and be no longer afraid and far off from him.

Simple Faith.

We are assured that the following incident is literally true:

The pastor of a Congregational church in a New England city has a little son, now about ten years old, who trusts he gave himself to Christ three years ago. He has a hen, and with her eggs had managed to collect a little purse of seventy-five cents, with which to buy more hens in the Spring. After hearing an earnest appeal one Sabbath for contributions to assist a feeble church in building a meeting house, he went to his mother and told her what a struggle he had had to give up the money for it; and he wanted her to go with him to the same spot where he gave his heart to Christ, that he might pray there. She did so. In the course of his prayer he said: "Here, O Saviour, are we two, where we were three years ago, when I gave myself to thee. Now meet us here again. And O give me power and strength to part with this money, to help build the church, and be with it as it goes from hand to hand until it reaches its consummation." Destination, he probably meant. And the little Christian brought forth purse and all, and with tears in his eyes, told what a struggle he had been through, and how glad he was to give it. He thought God would yet give him the hens somehow.

When the above prayer and its result were mentioned to the brethren and sisters of the little church assisted, it was affecting to see them weep, and hear the blessings they invoked upon the liberal-hearted little brother at Providence.—Congregationalist.

Count up Rows.

I went into my cornfield, where my hands gathered corn. I stood and looked on until they got out to where I was. They all took their rows again, and I thought I would try a row. They went ahead and got out some time before I did and commenced to gather back. When I got out I commenced to walk through to see if they left any ungathered. I walked on and found a large ear that had been left. Further on I found another, further on another in the same row. I gave the alarm that some one had left corn. They all began to excuse themselves. "It is not me, and it is not me." Well, said I, it is some one, for I have found three ears in the same row, and it will never do to leave corn in that way. So count up your rows and see who it will fall on. The rows were counted and to my astonishment it fell to myself, to the no little amusement of the hands, who went off laughing to themselves. Well, thinks I to myself, if that don't beat the bugs.

Well, sirs, that little circumstance taught me a lesson which I have always remembered, and when I hear members of the church complaining this thing is wrong, and the other thing is wrong, and nothing goes right with them—thinks I to myself, you had better count up the rows. And when I hear the more able and wealthy of the church complaining that we are a long way behind in paying up our preachers, and I don't see where the money is to come from, thinks I to myself, you keep your purse strings drawn too tight, you had better count up the rows.

And lastly, I would say to preachers and laity, count up the rows, and there won't be so much complaining.

Our Present Position.

[Extract from E. B. Elliott's Horæ Apocalypticæ.]

With regard to our present position, we have been led as the result of our investigations, to fix it at but a short time from the end of the now existing dispensation, and the expected Second Advent of Christ. This thought, when we seriously attempt to realize it, must be felt to be a very startling as well as solemn one. And for my own part, I confess to risings of doubt, and almost of scepticism, as I do so.

Can it be that we are come so near to the day of the Son of Man, that the generation now alive shall very possibly not have passed away before its fulfilment: yea, that perhaps our own eyes may witness, without the intervention of death, that astonishing event of the consummation? The idea falls on my mind as almost incredible. The circumstance of anticipations having been so often formed quite erroneously heretofore of the proximity of the consummation—for example, in the apostolic age, before the destruction of Jerusalem—then during the persecutions of Pagan Rome, then upon the breaking up of the old Roman Empire; then at the close of the tenth century, then at and after the Reformation, and, still later, even by writers of our own day; I say, the circumstance of all these numerous anticipations having been formed and zealously promulgated of the imminence of the Second Advent, which, notwithstanding, have by the event itself been shown to be unfounded, strongly tends to confirm us in our doubts and incredulity. Yet to rest in scepticism simply and altogether upon such grounds would be evidently bad philosophy. For these are causes that would operate always: and that would make us be saying, up to the very eve and moment of the advent, "Where is the promise of his coming?"

Our true wisdom is to test each link in the chain of evidence by which we have been led to our conclusion, and see whether it will bear testing: to examine into the causes of previous demonstrated errors on the subject, and see whether we avoid them; finally, to consider whether the signs of the times now present be in all the sundry points that prophecy points out so peculiar as to warrant a measure of confidence in our inference such as was never warranted before.

And certainly, on doing this it does seem to me that the grounds or our conclusion are stable. For let us look backward over the path we have travelled, and, in rapid retrospective review, call to mind the evidence, step by step, on which our argument has proceeded. A review which now, on revising this work for the fourth edition, we can make with all the advantage of those who have had the evidence investigated by antagonistic expositors; its links tested and every possible flaw sought out.

But it is individually that the application of the subject is most important. And when thus personally applied, need I say how unspeakably deep and solemn its interest! It is not enough that we belong to the most orthodox church, profess the most Scriptural faith, and be even zealous for it against the many errors and heresies of the day. The question is, Are we of Christ's true disciples, his "little flock," to which alone the Father has given promise of the kingdom? Luke xii., 32. Have we the evidence of belonging to it? Have we received the Apocalyptically noted mark and seal of God's Holy Spirit? and the inward light of life and spirit of holiness and adoption which he alone can give? Is our faith fixed on Christ as the Sun of Righteousness? Do we hold to the written word in life, as well as in doctrine? Do we witness for Christ in an apostate world; as in the world, but not of the world? Do we seek to follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, in holiness, spiritual-mindedness, benevolence, self-denial, and patient perseverance in well-doing, through evil report as well as good report? Do we seek to improve our several talents for him, as those that must soon give account? Matt. xxv., 14, etc. Is the lamp daily trimmed, (Ps. cxix., 105,) and its light kept burning within us, as by men that watch for their Lord? Matt. xxv., 7; Luke xii., 35. Is the thought of his coming precious to us? Do we look for and love the thought of his appearing? 2 Peter iii., 12; 2 Tim. iv., 8.

Doubtless there are many who can answer these questions in the affirmative. And happy are they. But there are many more, it is to be feared, with whom misgivings will arise in the conscience, as they reflect upon them. Alas! who can doubt the prevalence of much false profession; much of the Laodicean spirit of lukewarm self-conceit, religious pride, earthly-mindedness; much of the characteristic deadness of the church of Sardis, "having a name to live but being dead?"

With all such what cause is there in contemplation of the coming future, for humiliation, holy fear, repentance! Blessed be God, though the acceptable time remaining be short, it is not ended. Though the Master seem to be on the point of rising, he has not as yet actually risen and shut to the door. Luke xiii., 25. Not only is the probationary period of permitted evil as well as good prolonged, as it is written, "He that is unjust let him be unjust still, and he that is holy let him be holy still" (Rev. xxii., 11,) but the voice of mercy and love is also yet to be heard, inviting sinners to salvation: "The Spirit and the Bride say, Come; and let him that is athirst come; and whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." Rev. xxii., 17.

"Lighteth Every Man."

[The following is an extract from an article in The Advance. The article is one of a series "By Thomas C. Upham, D. D." We trust it will be profitable, even if every expression is not considered exactly correct.—Ed. Herald of Life.]

THE ESSENTIAL LIFE—ITS CONSTANT AND UNIVERSAL OPERATION.

There is one manifestation of what we have been led, as an economy of speech, to call the Essential Life, which is obviously worthy of some degree of notice. We refer to the fact, that in every period of the world's history, and among all the varied situations of the human race, there have been evidences of its presence and operation in enlightening and guiding men. In other words, the history of the human race, including profane as well as sacred history, will justify us in affirming, when all the facts are candidly considered, that no country, no age, no people has been left entirely destitute of the presence of the Spirit of God.

This remarkable result, so intimately connected with the interests and hopes of humanity, is what we might be led to expect from what has already been said in relation to the nature of Essential Life. Activity, movement, that which is the opposite of cessation or non-movement, is inherent in its nature. And this element of activity, without which the wheels of the universe would stop, is always and necessarily benevolential. Considered in this aspect, it is love; and love is an instinctive and elemantal principle of momement, which always operates in the direction of good. And the consequence is, that the living principle of the universe, whom men call God, from the very nature of his being, has never ceased, and never can cease, to impress the minds of men with the truth, and to try in every possible way, consistently with their moral freedom, to lead them into right paths. This is the a priori or intuitional view of the subject; and there are many facts and incidents which ought not to be overlooked in a history of philosophical opinions, that might be brought together in support of this deeply interesting doctrine. And we proceed now briefly to allude to some of them.

In the beginning of things, this great self-active principle appeared, in the language of Scripture, as the "Spirit of God," and laid its formative hand on the chaotic waters. And then, in the successive order of creations, proceeding from the lower to the higher, the human race made its appearance; and man was born in the image of God. But, perverted by those rebellious tendencies, which are known theologically as the "fall of man," men have rushed everywhere, with a strange and fatal unanimity, into error, sin, and self-destruction. From the disastrous period of the fall, mental darkness had become the normal state of the people and nations. Nevertheless, the life of God, which is always seeking for entrance into the minds of men, found a lodgment, even at that early period, in the heart of Noah. Receiving inspirationally the truths of God, which others rejected, he stood as a light, a true and warning prophet, in a dark generation, but his utterances were unheeded. The ark saved a few and the flood destroyed the rest.

After that memorable epoch of purifying desolation, the same sad and terrible tendency discovered itself again; and would have been followed by the same results, had not God interposed, by condescending to be not only a life, but a light. Under the influence of that innate, benevolential tendency to which allusion has already been made, there arose, all along the ages, men who were comparative lights; and who by the inspirations they received, the instructions they imparted, rolled back the surrounding darkness. Among these, and standing apart in his overpowering grandeur, was Moses, the Hebrew lawgiver and teacher. He stands at the gates of the morning, and holds up the brightness of his great radiance to the view of the nations.

But long before Moses, there were not only Enoch and Noah, but many others, who were taught by the Holy Ghost; some of whom seem to have received from the lips of the Infinite himself the story of the beginnings of things, which Moses, availing himself of this mysterious instrumentality, became acquainted with, and incorporated into his own early historical statement. It will at once occur here to the biblical student, that reference is made to the separate historical documents, easily discriminated in the original, but not so easily in the English translations, which are found at the commencement of Genesis. But who were the men who wrote these invaluable records? In what solitary caves and mountains, in what deserted and silent Thebiad, unknown to history, were their souls protected and nurtured to that degree of purity and believing receptiveness, which fitted them to invite and embrace the sweet whispers of the unknown truth?

In pursuing the train of thought suggested by this subject, let it not be supposed that these great moral and religious lights, set up from time to time by Providence, were limited to the Jewish people. The Hebrew and Jewish Scriptures themselves would fail to sustain such a supposition. One or two instances, briefly hinted at, would indicate what we mean. The imagination, going back to the early times of the Bible, loves to dwell on the possibilities in the thought, feeling, and history of that remarkable man, who is recorded as being without "father or mother," and "without beginning of days or end of life." Abraham, the father of the faithful, could not have done homage to the virtues and piety of Melchisedek, that lonely dweller of the hills of Judea, had he not been baptized with the spirit of the infinite.

The same Scriptures furnish us with another instance. The labors of the learned are greatly perplexed in ascertaining who was Job. But the intuitions of the readers of his wonderful poem can affirm boldly, in default of the records of personal history, that, though unknown and mysterious as Melchisedek, he was, nevertheless, a man of thought, of vast poetic imagination, and filled with inspirational teachings coming from above.

In the latter days of the Hebrew commonwealth, and greatly separated in certain particulars of belief and practice from the great mass of the Jewish people, whole sects made their appearance, who may be described as seekers after divine knowledge, and as truly inspirational. The history of the Essenes and Therapeutæ, as it is given, apparently from living and reliable sources, by Philo and Josephus, reveals facts of moral and religious insight and culture, which are explainable only on the ground, that the Essential Life of the universe, impelled by the necessity involved in the universality of his great loving nature, has imparted to many solitary and praying hearts, whose religious position has not been generally recognized, some preparatory portions of the truths of the everlasting Gospel.

The pages of ecclesiastical history inform us that there were Reformers before the Reformation; men who, by their solitary studies or their active piety, prepared the way for Luther; and without whose labors and sufferings the great event of the Reformation could not have taken place. And so, in the early period of history, that Light, which "lighteth every man that cometh into the world," found a small number in the distant and dark places of the earth, who were receptacles of a comparatively higher degree of radiance, and whose lamps dimly guided the nations toward that Shiloh Light, that star of Bethlehem, which was destined to eclipse all others.

It is thus we remember, with deep gratitude, what God has done for the nations in the earliest times; how he has borne with their sins, and has always given them that kind and degree of instruction which was best suited to their situation. The God of the Hebrews although in some respects, with less intimate relations, was nevertheless the God of Greece and Rome. And history abundantly shows, that the historical development of those remarkable nations, including literature as well as arms, and art as well as power, was precisely adjusted, in time and circumstances, to the Hebrew development. And when in the fullness of time the Star of Bethlehem arose, which otherwise would have shone only over the waters of Galilee and the hills of Judea, it became the guiding light and the illumination of the world, through the aiding influences of Greek and Roman civilization.

President Edwards, in his truly great work on the History of Redemption, is right in giving us to understand that God, as the living principle of the ages, and especially in the great fact of his incarnation, is the keynote to the philosophy of history. God's life knows no cessation of activity; and his wisdom and benevolence will always turn that activity in the right direction. The car of the universe is not floating at random; but under the Master's hand is always tending to one great issue. And what he made as Creator, he will hold as conqueror and governor. It may require the destruction or the re-adjustment of nations; but Christ will at last reign.

A Few Reasons Why.

There are reasons why the masses believe in the immortality of the soul and kindred doctrines. It is not at all surprising to those who were traditionized into this theory, but have now the scales of tradition removed by searching the Scriptures for themselves. There is no doctrine of the Bible more clearly taught than that immortality is something to be sought for by patient continuance in well-doing. And if ever man gets the victory over mortality and death, it will be given through our Lord and Saviour) 1 Cor. xv., 57), and through no other power in heaven or in earth. And we are taught that it will be realized when the trumpet sounds and the dead are raised incorruptible, and we are changed. These events being connected with the coming of Christ, we have nowhere else to look for it. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, ... and the dead in Christ shall rise first." (1 Thess. iv., 16.) "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written: Death is swallowed up in victory." Then, blessed be God! we shall have "immortal souls."

One grand reason why so many believe the natural immortality of the soul is, it becomes a part of their early education at school. School books abound in that kind of instruction In Webster's spelling-book we find among the short sentences, "The soul is immortal." Also in McGuffy's fourth reader we find the doctrine taught:

The soul, immortal as its sire,
Shall never die.

This doctrine then is sown in the youthful mind from school-books, and the old adage, which says, "As the twig is bent the tree's inclined," holds good in this as well as in anything else taught. Thus children are taught this doctrine while studying their lessons for recitations: and when they arrive to years of maturity, after having heard it declared time and again from the pulpit, and not having read the Bible enough to detect the error, they conclude that it is a Bible doctrine.

Again: on p. 219 of the new fifth reader, we find another gross error, which reads as follows: "Of all God made upright, and in their nostrils breathed a living soul." Compare the above with the Bible, and oh! what a contrast. "Breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. (Gen. ii., 7.) Is it any wonder that so many are in the dark on this subject? Again, on p. 334 of the same book we find a whole lesson, teaching the immortality of the soul; but it is taken from Plato not from the Bible. Our school-books are quite defective in wholesome reading, and it stands us in hand who are teachers to be awake when doctrine is taught, that it be not counterfeit. Every teacher should have a detector at hand: and when doctrine is taught that looks spurious compare it with the genuine. If the Bible is to be respected, and regarded as God's Word, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for instruction in righteousness that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished, then why appeal to any other author to prove the immortality of the soul? Is this the way to honor and glorify God in all things? Is this worshipping the Lord in spirit and in truth? Many believe the Bible upon this subject, but are afraid to talk it out, for fear of being cast out of the synagogue. Such are not free in the truth. Jesus says "whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this sinful and adulterous generation, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he shall come." Oh! what solemn words! May the Lord help us all to believe, and not only believe but talk the truth. "Sanctify them through thy truth. Thy Word is truth."

Where is the Evidence?

We are told, that the individual experience of every thoughtful person, affords convincing evidence of mind working apart from matter. But where is the evidence? who ever witnessed the phenomena of thought when no nervous matter was present? Name your authority, give a single instance, give a single argument! All we know of mind is in connection with a living brain. Give us the instance of a brainless mind, and we will thankfully acknowledge it. R. V. LYON.

The Wife.—If you wish to be happy and have peace in the family, never reprove your husband in company—even if that reproof be ever so slight. If he be irritated, speak not an angry word. Indifference sometimes will produce unhappy consequences. Always feel an interest in what your husband undertakes, and if he is perplexed or discouraged, assist him by your smiles and happy words. If the wife is careful how she conducts, speaks and looks, a thousand happy hearts would cheer and brighten our existence, where now there is nothing but clouds of gloom, sorrow and discontent. The wife, above all others, should strive to please her husband, and to make home attractive.

This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

Eternal Torments.

[The consideration of this subject is a little behind the times to many of our readers, yet it may be useful for some who have just begun to look at the question of immortality. We have concluded, therefore, to give parts of some of our sermons on the subject in the Herald of Life, and the following is the first extract:]

It is said, "The fathers believed in the endless torments of the wicked." In reply, we remark, Our Lord and Master has prohibited our calling any man father. But, if the fathers, as they are called, did believe that doctrine, they learned it from the Bible, or they did not. If they learned it there, so can we. If they did not learn it from the Bible, their testimony is of no weight. It may have been an error that early got into the church, like many others.

Mosheim, in his Church History, tells us, as early as the third century, that the defenders of Christianity, in their controversies, "degenerated much from primitive simplicity," and that the maxim which asserted the innocence of defending truth by artifice and falsehood, "contributed to this degeneracy. And he adds:

"This disingenuous and vicious method of surprising their adversaries by artifice, and striking them down, as it were, by lies and fictions, produced, among other disagreeable effects, a great number of books, which were falsely attributed to certain great men, in order to give these spurious productions more credit and weight; for, as the greatest part of makind are less governed by reason than authority, and prefer, in many cases, the decisions of fallible mortals to the unerring dictates of the divine word, the disputants, of whom we are speaking, thought they could not serve the truth more effectually than by opposing illustrious names, and respectable authorities to the attacks of its adversaries."

This practice, spoken of by Mosheim, increased as the darker ages rolled on; and through those dark ages, what there are of the writings of the "fathers" have come down to us. It is a truth, also, that the practice of corrupting the simplicity of the apostolic doctrine was commenced much earlier than the third century. Enfield, in his philosophy, says, "The first witnesses of Christianity had scarcely left the world when" this work began. Some of the "fathers" seemed intent on uniting heathen philosophy with Christianty, and early commenced the practice of clothing the doctrines of religion in an allegorical dress.

You may judge what dependence can be placed upon the "fathers" in settling what is Bible truth.

Again it is said—The Jews held the doctrine of eternal conscious being in torments. This is proved, not from their Scriptures, the place where it should be found, if true, but from the writings of Josephus.

The same may be urged against the infallibility of some things found in Josephus as in the "fathers;" for it is certain there was a large class among the Jews that did not believe it, viz., the Sadducees, who did not believe in the existence of spirits at all, and of course could not have held to their eternal conscious existence in sin and suffering.

But what if the Jews did believe it? They believed, too, "many other such like" foolish things. Are we to go to their ignorance and superstition to learn the knowledge of the Most High? The fact is, the Jewish Scriptures, the Old Testament, nowhere teach that doctrine.

Our attention will be called to Isa. xxxiii., 14. "Who among us shall dwell with devouring fires? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" This looks the most like teaching that doctrine of anything in the Old Testament. But the text itself refutes the theory it is brought to prove; for it tells us, expressly, the fire is a devouring fire. What is the meaning of the term "devour?" According to Walker it signifies "To eat up"—"to consume"—"to annihilate." Surely, then, this text is wholly in our favor.

Beside, such questions often imply the impossibility of a thing; e. g., "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" i. e., There is no escape. So—"Who shall dwell with devouring fire?" implies the impossibility of any person doing it, as it will utterly destroy, or consume him. We will give the objector one text from the Old Testament, that he may weigh along with this. It is Ps. xcii., 7, "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of inquity do flourish; it is that shall be destroyed forever." We have said the Jewish Scriptures nowhere teach the common theory; so far from it, they wind up with the most solemn declaration, calling the attention of all men to the fact, "Behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven: and all the proud, yea, all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

But suppose we were to admit that the Jews did hold the doctrine of endless suffering, as some say, what then? Why, say they, that is strong evidence it must be true; because, if it had not been, the Saviour and his apostles would have taught the contrary.

We reply, first: Many of the Jews believed in the pre-existent state of souls; or, their existence in some other body prior to those they now inhabit. It was owing to this idea that we find the disciples of our Lord in John ix., 2, asking him, "Who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" This question shows that even the apostles had imbibed the notion common among the Jews at that time. They supposed that in some previous state he might have sinned, and hence, as a judgment, was born blind. Does not the same reasoning which says the Jews believed in the eternal sinning and suffering of the wicked, and therefore it must be true because the Saviour did not refute it, prove that the doctrine of the transmigration of souls is true, because the Jews believed it, and our Saviour did not refute it?

But again—we maintain that Christ and his apostles did teach the contrary of endless sin and suffering; and, that as clear as language could make it. We have read the New Testament carefully through, and noted down every text that speaks of the final destiny of the wicked, or that can be construed as referring to it. Let us look at these texts and see if any language could well express more clearly and forcibly the utter extirpation of the wicked.

Testimony of the New Testament.

1. John the Baptist.—Math. iii., 10—"Every tree that bringeth forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." It appears to us—

This language imports, clearly, an utter extinction of being, and nothing short. Again in the 12th verse John says of Christ—"He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Here the language denotes nothing less than the previous, and is, most clearly, a reference to the words of the Lord by Malachi, chap. iv., 1. John iii., 36, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; he that believeth not the Son shall not see life."

John, then, does not teach the common notion of eternal torments, but utter destruction of being, if there is any meaning in language. If, then, the Jews did hold the doctrine of endless suffering, or the immortality of the wicked, as some pretend, John's preaching was directly calculated to overthrow it. The next witness is,

Jesus Christ our Lord.—Math. v., 29, 30—"For it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell." Let it be kept in mind that the term perish, primarily, signifies "to cease to have existence." Now, we ask the candid if the one member here is not, by our Lord, put in opposition to the whole body? and if so, is not the sense of this passage expressed thus—If one member is diseased it will cause the whole body to perish unless that member is removed; better, therefore, that one member should be cut off and perish than that the whole body perish?

But again, Math. vii., 13, 14—"Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat; because strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life."

Here, as destruction is put in opposition to life, and signifies to be consumed, or, as Walker says, "In theology, eternal death," it cannot mean eternal life in sin and suffering, but a "ceasing to be; unless we would confound the use of all language, and adopt the notion that the common people cannot understand the Bible, and therefore it ought not to be put into their hands. In fact, have we not come to that pass already? How much short of this is it, when we are told, at least indirectly, that the language of the Scripture is so figurative, or mystical, that we are not to give the obvious and literal sense of the words, as in reading other books?

But let us hear our Saviour further: Math. vii., 19—

"Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." The same idea and the same language as that used by John the Baptist. We ask if it imports anything short of utter destruction?

Math. x., 28—"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." We ask if this language does not clearly imply that God is able to kill the soul?—whatever the term soul imports—and does it not as clearly affirm that he will kill or destroy utterly the wicked? We have no fear for the answer from the candid and unprejudiced.

Once more: Math. xiii., 40, 50—"As, therefore, the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world: the angels shall come forth and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." How is it possible for words more clearly to denote an utter destruction of being? How can these words be tortured to mean eternal conscious existence?

Math. xvi., 25, 26—"Whosoever will save his life shall lose it," etc. "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Here is no idea of eternal conscious existence, or a miserable eternal life, but a loss of life. It could not be a loss of the soul, if the soul continues in being. No, says the objector, it means loss of happiness to the soul. We reply, a loss of happiness is one thing, and the loss of the soul is another and a very different thing. Suppose we should interpret the exprrssion, "Whoever will save his life shall lose it," to signify that the person who seeks to save his life shall lose, not his life, but the happiness of it! Would not the objector himself call it a perversion of the Scriptures? But it is no more a perversion than for him to say the loss of the soul means only the loss of its happiness.

Again, Math. xviii., 8, 9—"Cut off thy hand; pluck out thine eye if" they "cause thee to offend," for "it is better for thee to enter life halt or maimed," or "with one eye, than to be cast into everlasting" or "hell fire."

Here the punishment is the opposite of life, which it could not be, if the wicked are to have endless life, or eternal conscious being.

Thus, then, we fail to find, in the language of our blessed Lord, the doctrine of eternal existence in sin and suffering, but we do find that the punishment of the wicked will result in the loss of life, and we find no countenance to the supposed Jewish notion of eternal sin and misery.

It is pleasant to agree with good people who write for the papers, but if you do not, look out for squalls; for they can quote so many passages of Scripture, that prove you are only a reprobate, and "no Christian." For this reason, we have almost as much dislike to write for the "religious papers," as the editor of the Herald of Life has for church organizations, which are, in too many instances, only mutual quarrelling societies; in which there is a general agreement, individually, "I am holier than thou," and must be king, or deacon, or nothing.

Judging from the correspondence in the Advent papers, (we take several), the majority of the writers, if we believe them, have a very large amount of religion, and an immense amount of trouble, sickness, poverty, etc.; and some seem to imagine their religion is pure, just in proportion as their troubles are increased. They describe hard times, terrible storms and awful wickedness, etc.; and some thank God that they are poor and miserable in this world. In short, they despise everything that is pleasant and beautiful, but expect to have rich feasts, and enjoy a vast amount of good things in the world to come.

We have known very good men, at least they looked solemn and serious, attend church, and pray much, but leave their poor, half-starved cattle out to encounter the storms of Winter, without shelter, to suffer with cold and hunger during the terrible, long, and freezing nights, while these praying men thanked God, they were not like other men, "worldly minded," who built houses and barns to protect themselves and cattle in this world. And if their exposed children and stock die from neglect or exposure, they affirm it is a judgment of God; and take no better care of those that remain, and charge God or the devil with the results of their carelessness and stupidity.

It is abominably wicked to charge the good and bountiful Creator with their curses; and if there is a personal devil, which we do not believe, it is a libel on his infernal majesty that ought not to be made.

One bright and beautiful morning last Spring, the writer started for the railroad depot, driving a splendid pair of blooded horses (God made fine horses for good men); the buds on the trees and bushes were bursting into beauty; the birds were dancing and singing gay songs of welcome to Spring in the soft sunshine, which made our heart expand with praise and delight to the beneficent King and Maker of nature, and this glorious universe. We espied in the road, in the distance, a man hobbling, cane in hand, with lameness. Coming up to him we said, friend, will you ride? In a moment we discovered beneath his slouched hat, an intelligent countenance, and that the man was better than his clothes. We inquired how far he had travelled; and learned he had walked from Pennsylvnia, over 100 miles distance, and was travelling to Long Island; was very poor, entirely destitute of money. We felt interested and perplexed, for it appeared to us inconsistent, that a perfectly sober man should be so poverty-stricken as this man was. He had travelled over a hard road for days, in sight of a railroad and trains of cars, that, for a small sum, would have taken him in a few hours to his home.

Upon further inquiry we learned, that he was a temperance man, a Republican, and belonged, or was a member of the Methodist Church. This perplexed me more still, to be possessed all of these virtues and still be cursed with poverty. I informed him I was astonished to find so intelligent and correct a man in such straits; and finally, mustered sufficient impudence to ask him abruptly, Do you pray? His answer was, yes. When did you pray, and what did you pray for? I was determined to solve the mystery. This Christian man, who did not appear to be ashamed of his poverty, though he had not a single penny, seemed ashamed to acknowledge that he had been praying, or asking God on the road, just before I saw him, "if it was consistent with his will" he would assist him on his journey. I said, "Did the Lord answer your prayer?" "Why, yes, sir;" being, or seeming, yet almost unwilling to acknowledge that God had immediately answered it. And when I put the railroad tickets in his hand, that would speedily take him to his home, and sufficient money to pay other expenses, and told him the next time he required anything to ask God at the beginning of his journey, and he would get it, he looked confused as a real orthodox Christian naturally would; and it is very doubtful if he believed it; and more than probable, he thought I was a sort of wild man and did not understand what I was talking about, especially as I was respectably dressed, and was driving an elegant team, and did not look particularly miserable, as many suppose Christians should appear.

I think the trouble of this man was, and is, he is a complaining Christian; and spent his time in praying to be kept out of eternal torments in a future world; and instead of asking God to give life and being in this beautiful world, and bless the people of this happy and free country, he was continually begging or praying for that which he did not require, and could not get, asking to go to heaven, where he had no business, instead of asking for the things he did require, and to be raised from the dead, and with the meek inherit the earth—this earth.

How can Christian, that will not pray, work and vote for the good things of the Lord, in this life, expect to get them?

If they do not want them, then certainly they ought not to complain. God has fitted up this world perfectly magnificently for the abode of men, and filled it to overflowing with all description of the necessaries and luxuries of life; charming flowers, if we will permit them, will fill the air continually with exquisite perfumes, sweeter than the breath of angels; rich and luscious fruits, in infinite variety, shape and taste, and colors are given in lavish abundance. If we will have them, delicious vegetables, fish, fowl, and meats are provided bountifully; yet there are hundreds of thousands of men professing to be Christians, that hold the most of these rich gifts of the bountiful Creator in contempt; and if they attempt to praise God in prayer, they put themselves in a very awkward and uncomfortable position, and make up a terrible face, and look as if they were preparing to take a dose of offensive medicine. When all nature is gay, they look as solemn as an old grave yard. And they seem to have a horror of any thing that is grand and beautiful; and as for the weather, it is altogether abominable. It is either too hot or too cold; too dry or too wet; they are determined to be dissatisfied. The past Winter they have cursed or complained of the weather continually. Yet the good Lord has covered all the fields, with beautifully soft, and marvellously white and clean blankets; and tucked them in around the feet and toes of the young grass and grain to keep them moist and warm, so that they will shoot up early in the Spring, and give the people abundant crops, so necessary for the welfare of the nation.

Some of these dry and hard Christians are not only dry and hard, but are dirty. And being dirty, of course they are sick, or ailing; and then they charge the Lord with afflicting them, which is not fair or proper. We, of course, cannot and will not attempt to answer for the Creator, but if we had rented and fitted up a splendid mansion and garden, and furnished them with every convenience and all good things, and made them a present to an acquaintance; and if he, instead of being pleased, thankful, happy and agreeable, was morose and disagreeable, and said these were sinful, all vanity and worthless, and grumbled continually because we did not immediately give him a better and more extensive establishment, we would turn him out; and we would not attempt to please him a second time.

Brethren, let us praise God for life and being in this magnificent and beautiful world; and go to work and help him make it over new and, better; and as we believe that we shall inherit this earth, let us assist to repair the breaches that war, sin and slothfulness have cursed it with. Let us continually praise God that he gave us a home and being in THIS NEW WORLD, where we can worship him according to Scripture, with none to molest and make us afraid. A most inestimable and GLORIOUS PRIVILEGE.

The Second Advent Nigh.

We take the following extract from Eld. A. Hale's pamphlet, or Review of Thurman's book. It is under the head "Our Position and Argument." This extract is from his "general argument" on the Second Advent of Christ. He says:

The first general argument is drawn from the admitted outline of the future given to our first parents Gen. iii., 14, 15. "And the Lord said unto the serpent, I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; he shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." This germinal promise comprehended the whole future and the final result. It exhibits the Lord God as having the case completely in his own hands. He appoints the providential judgment for the offence. He fixes the relation between the two parties named—the serpent and the woman, and the relation between the offspring of the two parties—that of "enmity." And the promise, "He shall bruise thy head," indicates the final result of that predicted hostility. As the bruising of a serpent's head must end his career, this prediction could mean nothing less than the undoing of the mischief and the destruction of its author; for to destroy the author of the mischief and leave its victim still involved would be no remedy at all. But as a remedy and a redeeming remedy was understood to be provided in the promise, it must have looked at the restoration of what was lost, as well as the overthrow of the deceiver.

By the serpent agency our race was brought under his power and subjected to death: and our earth was brought under the curse. But the rebellious and foolish alliance could not be peaceful or prosperous. A seed would be loyal to the true sovereign only. Enmity to that loyal seed would break forth into violence. The violence would call to heaven for justice. Judgments would hurl the persecutors from power, and finally the serpent and his seed must be swept from the earth. On the farthest limits of the vast field covered by prophecy, beyond which no rebel can be found, that prediction "He shall bruise thy head" falls like a thunderbolt. Then the leader goes down, and other specific portions assure us that all his allies go down with him.

Between the widely separated extremes of the ample arch which spans the entire field, the world has recognized the most complete fulfilment of the first promise in the appearing of the Seed of the woman. How literally that promise was realized the sacred record informs us, and the anniversary of that event, the most ennobling and the most assuring for our race, is celebrated by the entire Christian world. We know that those men of God, who were witnesses or the realization, regarded it as a pledge of what remains; and standing on the same position with them secures this threefold advantage. (1) It shows how the prophecies are to be fulfilled. (2) How they have been subverted, and (3) What we have now to expect. There never was an apostasy in the apostolic church which led from the spiritual to the literal, but always the other way. The Gnostics, with whom John contended, and the "fools" at Corinth whose error called forth the most elaborate argument in the New Testament, denied the facts on which the whole apostolic position rested, and at the same time denied "the Scriptures." The apostolic correction reasserted the facts, put the facts and the Scriptures together; and thus joined together, they defended them with the authority of God. The birth, the baptism, the death, the burial, the resurrection, and the ascension of the Son of God, the Son of Mary, were literal, tangible facts, which always included a literal bodily Christ. If it is not safe, nay if it is not the only safe position we can occupy to stand on that plain, simple apostolic platform, then we have nothing safe to stand upon at all.

When our Lord ascended to the right hand of the Father, angels testified that "this same Jesus who was seen to go into heaven should so come as he was seen to go." He took his place at the Father's right hand by virtue of this familiar passage—"Sit thou at my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool." The subjection of his foes was then in the future, and Paul worked out of the passage as its ultimate result the final condition of things under the Son of God. He goes back to the sin of Adam, who brought all down to death. He bounds forward with Christ to the end—"telos" the completion of his work, when all enemies are put under his feet; when he shall have put down "pasan arkeen," all the personel of adverse power; "pasan exousian," all the forms of adverse power; "kai dunamin," and all adverse influence of whatever kind; and finally death, the last enemy. When that work is done the whole field is cleared of foes, and the rebellion in our part of the universe comes to an end. Then our planet and the redeemed of our race come back into the union of loyal worlds. Then the Son of God as the second Adam, in subjection to God the Father, transfers the reconstructed province, to be loyal and true henceforth and forever. And all who are Christ's at his coming inherit the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world. Thus the great prophetic system in its germinal form, verified and illustrated by the coming of the seed of the woman, lays the broad immovable basis of our position in the literal realization of the Christian hope. Any other construction is anti-apostolic and an apostasy. The seed of the woman has come, but his work is not yet done. The same Jesus is to come again as the personal King and Conqueror of all adversaries.

Walking with God.

"Enoch walked with God, and was not for God took him; who before his translation had this testimony that he pleased God." What a wonderful character! Who that ever graced the pages of history, a mere man, attained such eminence or experienced such exaltation in the infancy of the world in learning and experience? How came Enoch in possession of the requisites for such a stand-point? The answer, I conceive, is found in the fact that he received his instruction from the pure fountain of wisdom and truth. What a testimony he carried with him daily; so powerful and assuring, that he believed he should not see death, and his faith was fully realized. He walked with God, lived in constant communion and fellowship with the divine spirit; so in union with the great "I Am," that they might be termed inseparable, walking together in the nearest and dearest relation, the divine fulness flowing into his heart like the living water from a pure fountain, conveying to his mind the sweet assurance that he pleased God. We find on history's page one similar character, yet not so perfect, in the person of Elijah. These are the only ones. Are their characters and lives such, that no mortal could imitate, in any period since, or even in this boasted age of light and progress? I fully believe there are many now living who will have a similar exaltation—of whom these two were a type—caught up to meet the Lord in the air.

We can learn from these representatives what kind of a walk we should maintain, and how firm our faith must be in him who has left for us exceeding great and precious promises, and in the fulness of time sent forth his Son to redeem them that were under the law that they might receive the adoption of sons; and has sent his spirit into our hearts whereby we cry, Abba, Father. Then what hinders our following in the footsteps of Enoch, walking with God? cheered onward in our pilgrimage with the inspiring assurance that we please God; regarding earthly possessions much as Noah did when the ark was nearly completed? He probably had no wish to build elegant mansions and lay out tasteful grounds, or add farm to farm. If his course in this did so contradict his testimony, no wonder the antediluvians scoffed.

I feel our hold upon earthly possessions should be so slight that they will cause us little uneasiness. If such were our position before the world, it would do more to convince that what we profess to believe is truth, than all the preaching without a corresponding example.

How peacefully passes the lives of those who have the assurance that they please God; how much good they can accomplish; care and anxiety are strangers to their bosoms; trusting that while their Father knows what they need, all will be supplied, they trust implicitly and follow the Lord whithersoever he leads. Such were the hundred forty and four thousand whom John saw in the vision of the Apocalypse. Who that loves Jesus, and looks for him, but desires a good part with that pure company? Then should we imitate the example of Enoch, and we shall have a part with those who walk with Jesus in white, who ascribe all the glory of their position to him who washed them in his blood, and made them to be kings and priests, to reign with him on the earth.

Samson's Foxes.

When a boy I was puzzled with all parts of this affair. Thought I, "Would not the fire-brand burn the string, or the hair of the tail? How could a dull brand, dragged fast through the corn set it on fire? Why not the foxes singly? Would not two of them pull contrary ways and prevent their running at all? And how could he catch so many foxes?" No doubt thousands of boys have felt these difficulties, and thousands of knowing men have turned up their noses at the account as unworthy of serious belief. But let us look again. Scepticism is generally a lazy thing, not pleased with study.

In the original Hebrew, the word means jackals, doubtless. This animal is not solitary, like the fox, but goes in large packs. They take shelter in the deep caverns abounding in that country of limestone hills. Samson, being a chief, could easily command the assistance of a large number of men; block up the entrance of the caves, and catch as many as he pleased. In that rude state of society, such sport would please them well. The word translated fire-brand, means torch. In many parts of the East, the torch is often made several feet long, of combustible materials tied tightly together, so as to blaze out strongly at one end, while it is held at the other end by the hand, and lasts for many hours. If dragged along on the ground, it would still blaze fiercely. These large glaring torches were what Gideon's men had, for their night attack upon the camp: not the little fine flame of a house-lamp you put out by a fast walk or a breath! Suppose Samson had tied the torch to a single jackal, the frightened animal would have bounded with such velocity as might not have set fire to the grain; while two of them with their tails tied must enclose enough of the stiff stalks to impede them considerably, and so give the blaze time to kindle all along their course. They could not stand still, because the burning straw close behind would compel them to go on. If Samson had set his men to set the fields on fire with their own hands, the Philistines would have caught and killed some of them; but they could not catch the jackals.

The sudden steeps of Dan overlook the land of the Philistines. Even at this day we are told, that same plain is a vast grain-field. Samson might station his different parties of men with their jackals, along the side of the hills for a considerable distance. When they had made the long hair of the two tails fast to the small end of the torch, by many knots, they would light the other end, perhaps with a few extra drops of oil; the jackals must go down hill; the men would not allow them to turn and go back to the caverns. They would naturally steer for the tall grain to hide themselves; there were no fences to stop them. Presently there would be a hundred and fifty lines of crackling fire, spreading to the right and left, over miles of yellow grain. The enraged owners, living here and there in the villages would naturally chase the jackals; this would only spread the ruin still more widely.

All this shows how intensely Samson must have thought out the different parts of the cunning contrivance. It agrees with his cunning character, which evidently had in it a considerable spice of reckless fun. We can see him sitting on the rocky brow of his native hills, looking down on the fresh fields of his enemies, pondering his plan, and grinning to think how he would serve them.

This is a beautiful instance of the clear light which may be thrown on an obscure passage of Scripture, by making ourselves acquainted with its geography, and the circumstances of its time. Balaam's ass, with numerous other perplexities, could be made equally plain, if we had the means to transfer ourselves back to the remote age, with its ways of life, and modes of thought, so different from ours. These are constantly accumulating. Let no one be such a fool as to reject any part of Scripture because he does not understand it, and has no good opportunity to study it.

How profitable might such things be made in Sabbath-school lectures on Winter evenings! The field is boundless, if the lecturer only has the knowledge, together with the skill, to present it in a popular form. This I predict will yet be done. The bible class, too, is an institution hardly begun.—Congregationalist.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 18, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

THE SCORNER'S SEAT.

"BLESSED is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly . . . nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful." Psa. i., 1.

The Christian Advocate of this city, the official organ of the Methodist E. Church, on the 27th of Feb., admitted into its columns an article, signed "H. MATTISON," and headed "Present Status of Annihilationism; and the Editor has added, or suffered to be added, a note in the following language:

For a refutation of the latest phases of annihilationism see "The Bible Doctrine of Immortality," a ninety-six page pamphlet, just issued at our Book Room, New York.

Now we happen to know that the article, which appears in the Advocate, is mostly, if not all, taken from said "pamphlet." By publishing that article and the pamphlet aforesaid, the officials of the Methodist E. Church have set themselves "in the seat of the scornful," which it had been happy for them if they had let H. Mattison occupy alone, as he is entitled to it by pre-eminence. If they had allowed him to sit there alone, we would never have made them responsible for his misrepresentations and falsehoods; we would have considered it lowering ourselves to have dealt with a man whose utter recklessness of facts is notorious to many of our readers.

Now that the Methodist officials, in this city, have indorsed his "pamphlet," and his letter statement, in the Advocate, the responsibility rests on them; and we shall deal, not with H. Mattison, but with the Advocate and the "Book Room" Agents; and we ask them:

Gentlemen: Do you really adopt the Romish notion that "The end justifies the means?" Is that the character of Christian advocates? Do you sincerely believe that we may "do evil that good may come?" Though our connection with the Methodist E. Church ceased in 1840, we have always felt a respect for that body and her ministers above that we have for any other organized church; and to this day are, probably, nearer their position, in faith, than that of any other organization of human invention; nor have we ever united with any other, nor tried to raise up any other, since we withdrew from your body, though repeatedly urged to do it. How is it, then, that you can allow yourselves to be the promulgators and indorsers of such shameless misstatements—to call them by the mildest name—as those made by H. Mattison? You cannot but know, it seems to us, that he has followed us for years with the bitterness of a man who gives sad evidence that he "delights in—" What shall we call it? In non-professors of religion, we should call it "lies;" but in him, perhaps, "monomaniac"-ism.

Now, Gentlemen of the M. E. Church, take the first statements in the communication in your paper of Feb. 27. Here is the paragraph entire:

Some fifteen or twenty years ago George Storrs then a presiding elder in one of our conferences, became infatuated with the idea of the speedy coming of Christ, and began to give his whole time and thought to that one idea, and to conform his previous views to the supposed newly-discovered truth; and from that one error he has gone on step by step, discarding one fundamental doctrine after another, until he now retains scarcely a vestige of the truth as it is in Christ. Even years ago he had gone so far as to indorse the deist Hobbes as a sound and orthodox theologian.

How many misstatements do you, Methodist officials, think this paragraph contains; First, a misstatement in time: "fifteen or twenty years," he says. The fact is, we "located," as it is called, i. e., withdrew from the "travelling connection" in 1836; 32 years ago; and from that church in 1840, four years later. So much for his accuracy in time. Second, a misstatement of facts: "George Storrs, then a presiding elder in one of our conferences." This must be news to the Christian Advocate and its readers. That is "some fifteen or twenty years ago," this man, "George Storrs," held a high and responsible station in the M. E. Church: notwithstanding he has had no connection with their travelling ministers for thirty two years! Wonders multiply as we follow this magician and soothsayer. But the end is not yet: for "George Storrs" never was a "presiding elder" in any "conference," as the "wise in his own conceit" would have known, if he had consulted "Dr. Stevens' History of Methodism." The "Presiding Eldership" was offered to "Geo. Storrs" by Bishop Hedding, and refused by Mr. Storrs on the ground that he would not consent to an abridgment of his right to preach against what John Wesley called "the sum of all villanies." This was at the New Hampshire Conference in 1836. Since that time you have all come to take the exact view of that "villany" which we took in 1836; but not till the subject became popular, and most of you had none of the persecutions to endure we encountered. Thus it is seen that your church is not unchangeable, and may come to see that truth is better than falsehood, always, for the promotion of any just cause.

From our dissection of only the first two lines of H. M.'s statement, above, it is seen that this magician makes three blunders—to call them by a soft name. Then he insinuates, and elsewhere affirms, that our first step in error was the reception of the "idea of the speedy coming of Christ." If this statement is true, then it follows, that our views of the non-immortality of man is not an error; for we embraced these views more than a year and a half before we embraced the doctrine of the "speedy coming of Christ," and had actually preached and published our "SIX SERMONS" (first edition) before we received the "idea of the speedy coming of Christ." Hence, in four lines, the notable hunter of heretics makes four—shall we call them blunders? That is the mildest term we can employ; but when we consider the malignancy which has characterized his course toward us and our views, we might use a stronger term; yet out of respect to you, gentlemen officials of the M. E. Church, we use the mildest terms we can, hoping that you may yet see that truth is not promoted by misrepresentations.

Your magician next states a partial truth, only however, to aim a more deadly blow at us. He says, after we "became infatuated with the idea of the speedy coming of Christ," Geo. Storrs "began to give his whole time and thought to that one idea." That is true; but it is not "the whole truth;" he should have added, He made the study of the Scriptures his constant work, that he might know from the mouth of God the truth relating to the coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. In other words, we obeyed the command of Jesus, viz., "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me." The thought of Christ's second advent may not be agreeable to your H. M.; especially, the "speedy coming." In this respect he differs from the noble men who were the fathers of your church; and even the venerable Wesley looked for it with joy and embraced the "idea of the speedy coming of Christ," as you, gentlemen, very well know; and supposed it might take place about 1836, some seven or eight years earlier than Wm. Miller did. Was Wesley "infatuated?" No doubt he was, if H. M. is sane, or free from error.

"From that one error" (the idea of the speedy coming of Christ), says your magician, "he" (Storrs) "has gone on step by step, discarding one fundamental doctrine after another, until he now retains scarcely a vestige of the truth as it is in Christ." Do you, gentlemen Methodists, indorse such assertions as these? Let me tell you that our Lord and Master once said, "Judge not, that ye be not judged: for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged." That is one "truth as it is in Jesus:" and we rather think it is a "fundamental one."

But the last falsehood (for what else can we call it?) in the paragraph under consideration, is, that "years ago," we went "so far asto indorse the deist, Hobbes, as a sound and orthodox theologian." We did state that Hobbes was not a deist; and that he lived and died in the Established Church of England: and we proved it, too. That is not all, we proved he was an "orthodox" Trinitarian believer. Does that make a man a deist in your estimation? Let his revilers prove, if they can, from reliable testimony, that he was anything else than what is called "orthodox," save in the one point that, immortality is conditional, and not inherent.

Is a man so full of blundering assertions as H. Mattison, the man to have the full swing of the Methodist Book Room and Christian Advocate to defame those who differ from him in their views of the teachings of the Bible? If so, we can only say, alas for Methodism! We are not willing to believe that noble men, as many Methodist preachers are, will suffer themselves to be hoodwinked by bombastic declamation from one who has shown such an utter disregard of accuracy and of facts; an enemy to any changes in a man's views, and yet who has often shown himself changeable; sometimes being out of the M. E. Church and then in again; for what end, his Judge shall determine, and not we. We may say more on other parts of this Advocate article: but not from caring what the writer says, but because of its endorsers.

A CORRESPONDENT'S DIFFICULTY.

HE says: "You claim that, 'We as a body have no organization.' Can this be true, when we have such men as you to preach the way of life? From whence then do you derive the right to preach the word?"

Our friend stumbles just where all sectarians do. They fancy no man has the right to tell the truth unless some organization authorizes him to do so. He seems to have lost sight of the fact that, "Every one of us must give account of himself to GOD:" not to some human organization: that has been the cause which has produced popery at Rome, and every where else in Christendom: it has crippled Christianity for these hundreds of years, and corrupted the fountain of truth, by obliging men to preach, or proclaim what these self-made bodies—called churches—should dictate, whatever the personal convictions of the individual might be: preach he must, as they direct, or be expelled, disgraced, and have his name cast out as evil; so that the minister, morally and mentally, is in much the position of a Chinese girl, whose baby foot is put in an iron shoe and never permitted to grow beyond its prison. Such is the natural effect of a minister deriving his right to preach the word of life from these self-styled "organizations," called churches.

We, in our ignorance, forty years ago, received the "authority," our friend speaks of, in the following words by the "bishop," with his hands first on our head and then with the Bible in his and our hands, he saying, "Take thou authority to read the Word of God and to preach the same." What mockery! Just as though the "Royal Priesthood" (every believer in Jesus) had not this authority, without asking or receiving it from any man's hands! Such notions have no foundation in the Bible, and have been the scourge of the true church, the body of Christ, crippling her in her work, and exalting "lords over God's heritage;" who have divided, and subdivided, the living child, till hardly a lineament of the face of the true church is to be seen in Christendom.

If men cannot walk without crutches, let them have them, if they will; but do not ask us to go limping because you do. "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things." So spake an apostle; and to it we respond Amen. We seek not, we ask not, and will not receive "authority" from any human organization—called churches, priests, or bishops—to preach the word of life. Our authority is God given; and let any man interfere, or forbid, who dares; he may settle the controversy with him whose authority alone we recognize, or shall submit to, or obey. Does our friend now understand "whence we derive the right to preach the word?" We rather think he does; nor shall we surrender it till he who gave it shall also give us our discharge.

"If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed." Our freedom from sectarian trammels has cost us "the loss of all things;" but we "count it all joy," and the loss a thousand times made up to us, in peace of mind, and "joy in God, through our Lord Jesus Christ," the LIFE-GIVER. Praise God and the Lamb for the blessed privilege of reading the Word of life without the bondage of human organizations, and systems of human lordships.

A READER'S MISUNDERSTANDING.

"You deny that Christ, in giving the commission to the apostles, ever delegated to them the power of conferring the right to proclaim the word to any others."

This is an entire mistake. We said, the apostles "had power to baptize with the Holy Ghost by laying on of hands; but had no power to communicate this prerogative to other men." There is not a particle of proof that they ever did do it; and there is but one instance of any believer ever supposing the apostles had power to communicate it to others; that was one who had been baptized with water, and thought he would like to baptize with the Holy Ghost. We refer to Simon the sorcerer. When he "saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money" to "communicate this prerogative to" him. The impudent sorcerer learned, to his shame, that the attempt to procure this prerogative proved his "wickedness," and was evidence that he was "in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity," notwithstanding his baptism with water, which, it seems, did not "wash away his sins." Peter explicitly informed Simon that the "power to communicate" the Holy Ghost was "the gift of God." Christ was the fountain God provided, and in whose hands this gift was placed. He gave power to his apostles to communicate it by the laying on of their hands, but not to enable those persons to communicate it to others in this, or any other way.

We said nothing about "the power [of the apostles] of conferring the right to proclaim the word to any others." What we said related wholly to their "power to communicate this prerogative," of baptizing with the Holy Ghost, "to other men." In this matter they had no "successors," nor were they authorized to make any; and those who assume such a responsibility must take heed lest they fall into a like condemnation as Simon the Sorcerer.

"Inasmuch as Christ not only conferred the right to preach the gospel on his legates [apostles], but upon his disciples also, your theory must fall to the ground; for you remember that the seventy were sent forth before the apostles were appointed as his legates, and power was given them over evil spirits."

What has this to do with the question? We did not say that none were ever sent by Christ to preach the word, either before or after the apostles. The question is one which relates to the power and authority to baptize with the Holy Ghost. "The 70" had no such power nor authority; for that baptism did not commence till the day of Pentecost; then, Christ administered it himself. Peter said, on that day, "Jesus being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this which ye now see and hear." From that time the apostles, and they only of all believers, had power to communicate this gift by laying on of their hands: but they had no authority to transfer that power to other men, and there is no evidence that any others ever had it, but Christ reserved to himself the power to bestow this baptism directly on whom he would. But our friend adds:

You say that these "apostles had the power only to confer the Holy Spirit." To this I demur, for as Peter preached to Cornelius and his friends "the Holy Ghost was poured out;" not conferred, as you say, by the laying on of Peter's hands.

We did not use the word "only" in the remarks referred to; but if we had, to what did it refer? Certainly not to the exclusion of him who gave the apostles that power; but it does restrict it to the apostles as the only men who ever had that power. We explicitly said, this baptism with the Holy Spirit was "by the direct communication by Christ himself, without human aid," except in those instances where he made the apostles the medium of it; but to show them its impartation was not dependent on their action in the case, he took the matter entirely out of Peter's hands, and thereby taught him his mistake on the day of Pentecost, when he said . . . . "Be baptized . . . . and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost"—thus making water baptism essential to the baptism of the Spirit. In the transaction in the case of Cornelius, Peter was "taught the way of the Lord more perfectly;" though he was clearly taken by surprise when his mistake on the day of Pentecost, in putting water before the Spirit, was so completely set aside; and he seems puzzled, at the moment, what to do, and inquires, "Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?" His Jewish prejudices had met another shock, as they did when the sheet was let down from heaven and he was commanded to slay and eat, and he said, "Not so, Lord; for I have never eaten anything common or unclean." He was a strict Jew yet; and with this prejudice, to some extent, he went the same day to the house of Cornelius; and now his Judaism gets another shock, his teaching on the day of Pentecost, in the matter of baptism, being set aside by a direct act from heaven. By calling for water after this, Peter virtually said again, "Not so, Lord." His Jewish notions die hard; but he did at last learn, before he left Cornelius' house, that he had been unmindful of Jesus' testimony that his baptism—the gospel baptism—was unlike John's, for, says Peter, in his account of the matter on his return to Jerusalem, "Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how he said, John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost." Peter had now learned the lesson which the Lord and Master sought to impress on his mind. Previous to this he had overlooked or forgotten his Lord's words on the matter of baptism.

"HOW READEST THOU?"

"REPENT and be baptized that your sins may be blotted out when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."

So writes a correspondent. We would have thought his misquotation was accidental, if he had not labored to build an argument on baptism from it. The word "baptized" is not in the text; but he has substituted it for the word converted (epistrepsate); literally "to turn about; face about"—change one's course, etc. The same word is used Acts xvi., 18, where Paul, being grieved by the interference of the damsel possessed of a spirit divination, "turned (epistrepsas), and said," etc.

There is nothing said of baptism in the text our friend quoted. The address is to men who had participated in the wickedness of rejecting and putting to death "the Prince of life;" and Peter calls on them to "repent and be converted"—change their course; turn about—"that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing" [literally—the time of breathing again—to recover breath—the resurrection] "shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ. . . . whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution," etc. He had told them that God raised up from the dead Jesus, whom they killed; and urges on them to repent—change their minds about Jesus—and be converted—turned about, that they also may recover breath, or have a resurrection, when God should send Jesus from heaven; which resurrection or breathing again, they could not have unless their sins were blotted out; and this would not be unless they changed their minds and course of life before Jesus' return.

"LOVE ONE ANOTHER."

"You say, 'Personally, we do not baptize any one in any way, not believing in the commission to any man, since the apostles, to do that thing.' Then, of course, all who practiced immersing believers without they were apostles, did a very wrong thing; for if no man but the apostles had the authority to baptize, then John was a very bad man; and Christ was insane to submit to the act of baptism, and foolish to say, it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."

So writes a correspondent. We regret it if we were not sufficiently explicit. We certainly do not mean to mislead any one. Our words are, "Since the apostles." Surely John's baptism was not since. Nor did we say that "no man but the apostles had authority to baptize," at all. We did say, "The apostles had power to baptize with the Holy Spirit by laying on of their hands: no other men have ever had that power," etc. That baptism (of the Holy Spirit) we, personally, believe to be the essential baptism of the gospel; that is, the baptism without which no man can have eternal life; but this baptism "since the apostles, has been by a direct communication of the Spirit by Christ himself, without human aid." That is what we did say, and re-affirm; and John the Baptist, very clearly prophecies of this fact, when he says, "He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost." John i., 33.

John the Baptist's mission was to "manifest" the Messiah. Thus he speaks: "That he (the Messiah) should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water." John i., 31. This was the principal object of John's water baptism. Surely no man will say Christ was baptized to "wash away his sins:" but it was God's appointment for his public manifestation. John so understood it; but felt as if he ought not to baptize with water one who was to baptize with the Holy Ghost; and consented to do it only on the assurance that such was the will of him who sent him to baptize with water for the manifestation now to be made.

Jesus himself, when about to open in its fulness the gospel dispensation, said to his disciples—"John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." Acts i., 5. This was not to be done till "Jesus was glorified." Till that event, they lacked the "power" necessary for their mission; hence Jesus commanded them to "tarry in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." Luke xxiv., 49.

In relation to water baptism, we said, in the article to which our correspondent refers, "Each one [among us] is left to act in that matter as he pleases, provided he acts in charity, not making his practice a rule for others." We know of no other way to promote peace among believers than this; for if every one is determined to force his views of external things upon others, then farewell to harmony, or union; and we have reason to tremble, lest "faith, hope, and love" are all swallowed up in the gulf of outward ceremonies and observances. We no more believe it is a sin for a man to baptize or to be baptized with water now, than we believe it was a sin for the "many thousands of Jews which believed, and were all zealous of the law," still to keep the law, as they did for thirty or forty years after the day of Pentecost. Acts xxi., 20. Practices as well as theories, of long-standing, are hard to overcome; especially, seeing men are more easily led to unite with others by the external, or by their senses, than by an internal grace, or the communion of the Spirit. We entreat all believers to practice what they are satisfied God requires of them. For you to omit it, would be sin in you; for "to him that thinketh it is sin, to him it is sin," whether it is so in itself or not. Let all things be done in charity, and not judge one another in respect to outward observances. Persuade as much as you please; but take care that you do not judge them because they see not as you see.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

WE noticed, a few weeks since that we had continued to send this paper to a number of our old subscribers, contrary to our usual custom, who have paid nothing on the present volume, even though we had heard nothing from them expressing a wish to have us do so. The time has now arrived in which we must take some action on all such cases. The continuance of such papers will depend entirely upon an immediate response, by a remittance or a request for longer credit. We are sorry to withhold the paper from any who are willing to read it, even though they may be unable to pay anything for it; nor will we, provided they inform us of their inability and of a desire still to receive it.

This number completes the first half of the present volume. Such as we may be obliged to discontinue from not hearing any response, we, of course, regret to lose. Some may find their paper stopped who believe themselves not in arrears. If such a case should occur, we shall be glad to rectify the mistake.

THE CHEAP EDITION OF "LIFE FROM THE DEAD."

THE first thousand of this work has been printed, paid for, and most all sent off or spoken for. That is right. We will print a second thousand so soon as the funds for the object warrant it. Let the work go on as it has begun, till every corner of the land has the "light of life" laid before the people. Only think, a pamphlet of 96 pages, containing the grand theme of "Life from the Dead, through Jesus Christ, only to the just by faith," published at five cents per copy, or given away to such as cannot afford to pay! Who that loves this glorious theme will not do something to promote this cause. If you cannot give money to help print, how many copies will you undertake to circulate? Let us know at once; for, having begun this work, it must not stop; we must go forward. Next after the issuing the HERALD OF LIFE, the scattering of LIFE FROM THE DEAD, is of the first importance to the cause of the truth we advocate. If the scattering of the SIX SERMONS first set in active motion the Life views in this country—as thousands testify—the scattering of LIFE FROM THE DEAD, in like manner (i. e., by thousands), is important to give increased life and stability to the work in which we are engaged. The truth of Life from the dead, only for the just by faith, is the crowning truth of our whole theory. Without it, our whole system is like a well-finished and well-filled building without a roof or keystone—it is incomplete, and lacks firmness. Let us finish our work like men who feel we have a wise MASTER-BUILDER, Jesus Christ, the Head of the new creation—Life from the Dead; for, they who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, even the resurrection from the dead, cannot die any more, but are the children of God, because they are the children of the resurrection.

May each of our readers see that the great and important thing for them is, to live from the dead; and that in order thereto, they must become "just by faith;" such only, "shall live again."

"CAN YOU BELIEVE?"—The article on this subject, in the HERALD OF LIFE two weeks ago, is to be issued in a tract of two pages, soon. When it is printed, orders for it will be answered. They will be sold at 30 cents per 100 including the postage, and given away by thousands, if the Tract Fund is filled up.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM STEWART CARLISLE.

WILMINGTON, DEL., March 9, 1868.

BR. STORRS: It is with great pleasure we announce the fact that for the first time in the history of our city we were permitted to hear three discourses on the Life views. You are aware of the notice of Br. R. W. to be with us on last Sabbath, but, owing to other appointments, he notified us on Friday evening that he would not be able to be here. We had announced to the public that the meeting would be held on the Sabbath, and his notice came too late to be revoked. So on Friday evening we paid a visit to Philadelphia, and called on Br. Jacob Grim, stated our case to him, and he very kindly consented to come down and help us through. He opened his first discourse from John v., 9–11. His subject on the one hand, God's testimony in regard to man; and on the other, the testimony of orthodoxy; clearly showing that man possesses, in this probationary state, only an animal life, with the glorious privilege of seeking, by patient continuance in well doing, glory, honor, immortality, and eternal life. In the afternoon the testimony of the prophets was added to prove the mortality of man, and in the evening Psalm xlix. was examined and explained, closing with some remarks on the thief on the cross, in response to some objections he overheard on entering the door in the evening. The objectors themselves were highly delighted with what they had heard. We had a very attentive audience, and felt ourselves instructed and profited, and hope that the seed sown may spring up and bring forth abundant fruit.

Br. Grim is a bold and fearless advocate of the Life views, and possesses a depth of mind and power of research that but few attain to. His knowledge of Scripture truth, coupled with his love for that trrth, renders him a formidable antagonist to popular orthodoxy, and places him on vantage ground in the presence of its advocates. Not handling the word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth he commends the gospel to all who may have the pleasure to sit under his instructions. Such preaching takes a man back, and he may almost imagine himself under the personal ministry of the apostles themselves; men "mighty in the Scriptures," whose only object is to spread gospel truth and bring his fellow men to the knowledge of this truth. Life again from the dead, as taught in the Scriptures, is surely an object worthy of the highest consideration of every intelligent creature; and no wonder Solomon should say that "The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead;" or, as David says, "they shall go to the generations of their fathers; they shall never see light."

Now that Br. Grim has found his way to our city we hope his visits will be more frequent.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—It gives us great pleasure to hear that our Br Grim has visited Wilmington, and that he was so well received. We have long wished this excellent brother could be persuaded to visit generally, especially all through the regions round about where he lives. We are satisfied there is no man among us capable of doing more good than he. He is no imitator of other men, but has, by close study of the Scriptures, advanced in knowledge beyond many others, while he has been "diligent in business." We do hope he may feel disposed to go forth more widely to proclaim the word of life, and that our friends, in all quarters, will call for his services. May the Lord guide him in all his way.

FROM RUFUS WENDELL.

DEAR HERALD: After publishing a withdrawal of my Springfield appointments, in last week's paper, the programme was so changed as to make it necessary for me to fill them after all. So the visit to Wilmington had to be postponed. I spent last Sunday in Springfield, and am to be there again to-morrow. Next Tuesday evening I am to preach in Hartford. On Sunday evening, March 22d, it is my intention to present the Life theme to the people of Marblehead, four miles from this city. I have been there and engaged Lyceum Hall for the purpose. The ground is entirely new. Particulars hereafter. R. W.

FROM DR. J. F. LEE.

MONROE, N. C., March 9, 1868.

BR. STORRS: It is now about twenty-one years since I read for the first time your Six Sermons, which were given to me by J. P. Prichard, with the request that I might examine them and give him the result of my examination. What that result was I presume you have long since understood. I had read, previously, twenty-one years, a discussion between Abner Kneeland, and Rev'd C., which took place in Philadelphia, and afterward between Kneeland and Adam Empe, in Wilmington, N. C., about the year 1826. My impression then was, that, so far as it respects an eternal hell, or a lake of fire and brimstone, Kneeland was right, and had the best of the argument. My mind was prepared for the perusal of your sermons, and I read them without a particle of prejudice, determined, by the grace of God, to adhere to the truth, regardless of human opinions or persecutions for the truth's sake. I procured all the information I possibly could on the subject, and up to this day I have never read anything more plain, concise, conclusive, cogent or satisfactory than your sermons. "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST," which includes the Six Sermons, is the best system of divinity ever published, for this simple reason—it is in harmony with Scripture—it is Scripture. If any one doubts or attempts to deny it, let him know that he doubts and attempts to deny the word of God, the truth of divine revelation. No candid, sincere Christian, who loves the truth, can read "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST" and not feel its divine influence. But if it is read with any sectarian prejudice, the result may be different. The circulation of the work will do good. I have seen and known the force of prejudice, and am sure nothing but the divine influence of truth can eradicate it; and it is a sad fact—some receive the truth in vain. It has no transforming, sanctifying influence on them. They receive the grace of God in vain, and sooner or later will bring upon themselves swift destruction. I am indeed truly glad that you are about publishing the work for distribution; and my only regret is that I cannot contribute at this time any funds to aid in the glorious work of proclaiming through the press, "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST."

It is useless to give a narrative of one's trials, privations, sufferings, destitution of the means of living, or the persecutions so common in some portions of the world. It is best to leave them all with God, instead of spreading them abroad to excite the sympathy of some, or extort from avarice the scornful alms. Better, by far, to fall into the hands of God, and die of starvation, than to be subject to the will of cruel, malignant enemies, whose vindictive malice delights and glories in the amount of suffering, oppression and degradation they can heap on those who never harmed them.

But this present world is a place of trial, probation and purgation. It is the only purgatory we shall ever see. It will soon be at an end with some of us. In a few weeks, I shall be 67 years of age; and though I enjoy, and have enjoyed always, perfect health; though I have never had head or back ache, or any bodily ache or pain; though I feel no infirmity from age, and can ride on horseback 40, or 50, or 60, or even 80 miles in a day, as free of fatigue as I did forty years ago, yet I do not expect to live many more years. I sometimes think I will die suddenly, without any premonitory symptom of disease, an easy death—euthanasia. To walk by faith—to remember and feel we are always in the presence of God—is not walking in darkness, and wanting light to take the next step. "Qui sequitur me, non ambulat in tenebris," I memorized, when reading the New Testament 56 years ago. Much of it I memorized at that time, and though I have had no Latin dictionary in 46 years, the knowledge of the language is as familiar to me as it is to one who graduated but yesterday. Strange power of memory, reviving toward old age the lessons studied in youth. Oh, how important to cultivate properly and wisely the youthful mind. "Train up a child," etc.

This thing of "one step more in the dark," etc., is beyond my capacity. Perhaps I do not comprehend the meaning of certain writers, or understand their beauties, as some seem to think they do. I like elegant extracts and sublime selections, provided they are good and true. I have read one sentence in the last HERALD OF LIFE that is invaluable. Yes, one sentence, that would, if realized and felt in its unction, transform the pulpit, and make every preacher a mouth of God. O what a change it would create—a novelty [!] surpassing any 25,000 dollar novel that any preacher ever wrote for the New York Ledger, and making the preacher "fit" in the pulpit far better than H. W. B. fits in the columns of the———. I need not say what that sentence is to which I allude; but for fear it might be involved in any kind of doubt I will tell you what it is, and commend it most cordially to all preachers and audiences. It is this:

"Let every minister, while he is preaching, remember that God is one of his hearers," and let all the hearers remember that they are in the presence of God, when in the church or elsewhere. Without this remembrance while preaching, as through every scene of life, in the pulpit or out of it, there can be no enjoyment of religion. I had almost said, no true religion, pure and undefiled.

FROM WILLIAM STEELE.

ARKANSAW, WIS., March 4, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I was brought up under the influence of the Presbyterian church in Scotland, but the distinguishing doctrines of Calvin were always rather repugnant to me. So when some of the preachers of a Presbyterian denomination, and some of the Congregational churches were expelled for preaching and publishing what is called "Arminian heresy," I joined with those who sustained the heretics. About that time, too, a pamphlet was put into my hands entitled, "The Sure Word of Prophecy." This, in the main, was approved by me; but I was so engaged by opposing a limited atonement, unconditional election, and other Calvinistic points, that I did not study the doctrine set forth in the pamphlet referred to; but it did me good; for it led me to give up the heathenish doctrine of going to heaven at death, and to look for eternal life only through obedience to Christ, and by the promised resurrection at the last day. Myself and wife came to America in 1848, and lived most of the time in Cayuga Co., N. Y., until 1862, when we moved to this place. While in Auburn, N. Y., we frequently attended the Second Advent meetings, but kept aloof, because we could not see as they did about the time of Christ's second coming, and some other matters.

It was while in Auburn that I was led, by means of Roswell Curtis, to subscribe for the Bible Examiner, which myself and wife read with great interest, and also your other publications. I believe your writings have done both myself and wife much good; though they have been the means of keeping us more isolated from denominational Christians; yet they have been the means of leading us into the light and liberty of the gospel of the grace of God. I thought a great deal of the Bible Examiner, and could hardly be reconciled to giving it up; but now I like the HERALD better because it is weekly; but I always fear that it will not be sustained. I have many a time felt sorry that it was not in my power to do more to increase its circulation; and I may say, that it has been better to us this Winter than ever. The sermons, the editorials; the criticisms on such men as Henry Ward Beecher and others, who have become popular; the discussion on the personality of the devil; your articles on free will and free grace; and not the least interesting to us are the letters and extracts. We generally read them first; and it is like a conference meeting to us with them of like precious faith.

Wishing you the enjoyment of the peace of God, and the hope of life and of the kingdom promised, I remain your brother in Jesus.

FROM JACOB GRIM.

PHILADELPHIA, March 13, 1868.

BR. STORRS: You are aware that Br. Rufus Wendell was expected to deliver a course of lectures at Wilmington, Del., on Sunday last and during the present week. Late on Friday evening Br. Stewart Carlyle, called at my house, stating that they had engaged the Methodist meeting-house, which had been sold and was about going into other hands, and they could have it for the one Sunday only. He further stated that they had advertised for the meetings and it would be a great disappointment to the people, and likely to be an injury to them if they disappointed them. He stated his object was to see if I would not come down to Wilmington and speak for them; in other words, to fulfil Rufus Wendell's "disappointment." I had advertised my name for two lectures in Philadelphia. In the morning, "Bible hell;" evening, "Thief on the cross." So you see somebody must be disappointed. I agreed to go to Wilmington. So I went; and Sunday morning I spoke to a very attentive audience: my subject was, "Man:" his creation, trial and destiny. In the afternoon the audience was larger and very attentive. My subject was the "Hope of the Gospel, and the way to attain it, even through Jesus by the resurrection of the dead." In the evening we met with a difficulty; quite a large congregation assembled at the meeting-house, but the meter was frozen up, and the gas would not burn; and for a time I thought I was going to be relieved from speaking the third time; but the congregation seemed anxious to hear what more could be said on the subject; and, after trying in vain to make the gas burn, concluded they would have a meeting any how. So they went out into the neighborhood and borrowed several oil lamps; enough to light up the desk, so they could see the speaker, if the speaker could not see his audience; and we had quite a good meeting. My subject was Psa. xlix; and as I heard several ladies say, as I was going in, they would like to hear some of the negative side of the argument taken up, and among others the thief "this day shalt thou be with me in Paradise," after I was through with my subject, I answered the objection; and the same ladies told me, they were perfectly satisfied with the interpretation that I gave of it.

Well, in conclusion, I formed some very pleasant associations in my visit to Wilmington; and, upon the whole, I have no regrets at having gone; but I prefer filling my own appointments to those of some other persons; for it gives me time to make my own preparations. This jumping up and running off "Jack on the pinch," without any time to arrange matters or business, is not at all times pleasant. Br. Charles Sutton was taken by the same surprise on Saturday, to come in and fill my appointment. Upon the whole, I hope some good may result from it.

FROM L. D. TANNER.

MARATHON, N. Y., March 2, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I have not heard yet, through any of those who take your paper, whether any one has responded to the inquiry I made some weeks since, through the HERALD, for the lost article entitled "A thousand dollars won, but not paid over." So certain am I that your readers will appreciate the article, if found, I would like a further search might be elicited. If some reader remembers, and could inform you what paper the article was published in, that information might lead to its whereabouts, as a preserved relic.

The republication of your "Defence of the Bible," I am sure, is highly valued among your readers in these parts.

About here, many are venturing to read the HERALD, that a few years ago would have feared it as they would the cholera; it is a terrible demolition of the machinery by which revivals have been manufactured; and to many of these, masters, the hope of their gains is lost.

When I took your paper, some years since, no one would read it. Things are now shaping differently; some of my near neighbors are willing to read, that yet would not subscribe.

LAYFAYETTE NORRIS, Campton, Iowa, writes: There has been quite a revival north of here among the Freewill Baptists and Methodists. Some of these preachers are bitter opposers of the Adventists. One of them said he "broke up a nest of Adventists in Wisconsin," another of them preached a very denunciatory sermon against "No-soulism," in this place. One of my neighbors remarked that this preacher took "Layfayette Norris for his text." He went so far in his abuse, that part of his church members told him, next morning, that such preaching would not do. I report this to their credit. There are a few in this vicinity that refuse to unite with any church organization, but hold on to their profession. It seems harder to get people to unite with the different churches than to get them to "the mourner's bench;" hence, the preacher's labor is hard to prove the necessity of church organizations. The Bible is frequently spoken of, in their sermons, but seldom ever quoted—they seldom refer to it for proof.

LUCY A. BARNEY, New Preston, Conn., writes: I thought to let you know how the battle goes here. Sometimes it is hard; but we intend to stand fast. Last Sunday (March 8) Br. and Sr. Fogg came to our help, and her words did good execution, and we thought the battery of the enemy was silenced. But in the evening, while we were quietly assembled at Sister Calhoun's house, anticipating a comforting time hearing from the veterans of the cross, we were surprised to have the battle renewed. But one of our soldiers replied so effectively that the conflict soon ended. Our Captain's commands we love to obey; for he has promised a great reward, even eternal life at the end of the war. Who can harm us? Our life is safely hid with Christ in God. There are a few here who will stand up for our Captain; and if any ask to what company we belong, we can tell them it is the Life company. Your sister, believing in "No life out of Christ."

ELD. LIBERTY WETHERBEE, Bangor, Me., writes: I send a new subscriber for the HERALD. The truth is gaining ground in this region. I am to-day (March 8) at Kenduskeag, having a good time. People are becoming interested in the doctrine of "No Life out of Christ." I shall send more subscribers from this place. We hope to get Br. Wendell to come to our help the coming Summer. How is it, Br. Rufus, will you come if we can get you a hearing? There are quite a number that wish to see and hear you. Let us know. Yours in hope of eternal life, when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

JOSEPH K. MARSHALL, North Chester, Mass., writes: The HERALD OF LIFE comes to hand regularly; for which we feel very thankful, as we consider it the best religious paper in the world. We rejoice that God is blessing his truth in so signal a manner, and pray that all his children may see the beauty there is in the plan of redemption. We desire holiness of life and patient waiting for the Lord, who shall change our vile bodies and fashion them like unto his most glorious body, at his appearing and kingdom.

S. D. MORSE, Manchester, N. H., writes: I wish to say, through the HERALD OF LIFE, we have started a free meeting in Whitney's Music Hall, and invite all ministers commissioned by the Lord, to come and preach the word. If they send appointments through the paper, mention the above-named Hall. If they write, direct to me, "No. 3, Print Works Caps." Yours, hoping for life when the LIFE-GIVER comes.

PERSECUTION—REV. XIII.

BY C. L. PERCIVAL.

I WILL not take up room by transcribing this chapter, it being familiar with almost all readers of the HERALD OF LIFE, and other Advent papers. It contains the history of the rise, character, and doings of two wild beasts.

The first, with its strange and complex character and doings, it is universally admitted, symbolizes the fourth, or Roman kingdom; and its history is brought down to the present time, when its wounded head is healed. Its superadded mouth, which spake "great things and blasphemies," can be nothing else than the Roman Catholic Church; and the perfect and intimate connection of that church with the Roman government for the past 1,200 years, and more, is too apparent for any one not to see the perfect fitness and propriety of the symbol.

The description of this beast finished, we read, And I beheld another beast coming up out of the EARTH. Mark, the first came out of the sea, and the other out of the earth. Bishop Newton and many other writers on the prophecies say that this two-horned beast symbolizes the Romish church. I dissent from this entirely, and for these reasons: 1. The Romish church is represented, in connection with the Roman empire, where it ought to be, by the mouth which was given to the beast, so that there is no necessity for another symbol of it.

2. As the first beast represents a civil government, and the second is another beast, it must be another civil government, a beast in prophecy never symbolizes a church, or ecclesiastical body at all, but always a civil government. Now, then, what one does it symbolize? I answer, it is a power yet to arise. This will be seen by observing its doings. (1.) It causes its subjects to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. (2.) It causes them also to make "an image to the beast that had the wound by the sword and did live." As the deadly wound was undeniably inflicted when the French empire under the first Napoleon fell, in 1815, and was healed, or is being healed by the restoration of that empire under Napoleon III., it is evident that the two-horned beast cannot cause the dwellers on the earth to worship it, or make an image to it, till about this time, or some time yet future. Still more conclusive evidence of this will appear hereafter. Let us look, now, at the work of this power. First, it causes its subjects to worship the first beast; second, it works wonders or miracles, and by them deceives the people, and leads them to make an image to the first beast; then gives life to the image, and causes it to speak, and cause that as many as will not worship the image should be KILLED. Now mark, the first beast was a politico-ecclesiastical power, or a union of church and state. The image to this beast must of course resemble it and is, therefore, a church and a civil government united, and which will require all its subjects to subscribe to the legalized creed or die, and also deprive all of the right to buy, or sell, or pursue any ordinary business for gaining a livilihood unless they bear some mark by which it may be known that they belong to the established church. If we have not a sore time brought to view here for the true followers of Jesus, the Nazarene, then I am terribly mistaken. I shall take another look at this chapter, hereafter, but leave it now. I suppose I have seen all the different applications of this chapter to past events; but in them all there is an entire lack of fitness, or naturalness in the adaptation of the events to the prophecy. I do not believe it can possibly have had any fulfilment in the past and therefore I look with earnest expectation for a speedy fulfilment of this deeply-interesting prophecy, and I labor and pray that God may prepare his people for the sore, but certain trial.

Massawippi, P. Q., March, 1868.

REMARK BY THE EDITOR.—Our Br. thinks the "sore trial," presented in this chapter, is in the "future," and says, if it is not so, "I am terribly mistaken." We trust it may not terrify him if he escapes and his fellow Christians escape, the trial he supposes yet to come. Let us remember, "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." If the prophecy of the two-horned beast and its image is not in the past, we think it will be in vain to attempt to find it in the future till it appears. Let us live and labor as men who wait for the return of their Lord and so be found ready at his appearing and kingdom.

SNARLING.—The way not to be healthy or happy is to keep up an incessant snarling. If you want to grow lean, cadaverous, and unlovely, excite yourself continually about matters you know nothing about. Accuse other people of wrong doing incessantly, and you will find but little time to see any wrong in yourself. We wish here and now to inform all men of irritable dispositions that they will live longer if they only keep cool. If such men want to die, we have nothing to say; snarling will kill about as quick as anything we know. We have had good health for the whole period of manhood, and attribute the most of it to the way we take things.

HOW IT HAS BEEN GUARDED.—Rev. Adolph Saphir expressed the following striking thought at the anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Society. "Marvellous is the very existence of this book. One portion of it was preserved by the Jews, who have been the most careful and scrupulous custodians of a historical record which faithfully and severely delineates their guilt and obstinacy—they have been the guardians of predictions which fully and clearly describe the person and work of a Messiah whom they reject; while the other portion of the Bible has been preserved and transmitted by a church, the errors of whose apostacy are anticipated and condemned in the very pages which they have so diligently preserved. Strange, indeed, the Synagogue guarding the Old, the Church of Rome guarding the New Testament."

"UPON THE WATCH-TOWER."

BY WILLIAM H. BURLEIGH.

Oh Lord, how long? We watch and wait
The coming of that Better Day,
When Love, triumphant over Hate,
Shall rule the earth in soverign sway—
When he who toils, and he who bleeds
The promise of its dawn shall see,
And slaves of power and slaves of creeds
Shall hear the word that makes them free.

Oh Lord, how long? We wait and watch
Night lingers, and the rough wind chills;
We strive some gleam of morn to catch,
Slow climbing o'er the eastern hills—
Some glimpses of the herald-star,
Whose light shall tell its advent near;
But lo! the darkness wide and far,
Blots out the whole broad hemisphere.

Oh Lord, how long? The earth is old,
And reels, sin-stricken to its doom,
Burdened with sorrows manifold,
And veiled in more than midnight gloom.
Her children weep upon her breast,
And heavenward eyes of suppliance turn;
Perplexed by doubts, by fears distressed,
Too blind thy promise to discern.

Yet is that promise sure? and sure
The coming of earth's Better Day,
Though long the night of wrong endure,
And still the dawn of right delay!
Oh make us brave to watch and wait
The hour by prophet bards foretold,
When Thou shalt lift the Orient's gate
And flood the lands with morning's gold!

HOW A CHIP WAS MADE TO SPEAK.

THE Rev. J. Williams, in his "Narrative of Missionary Enterprise," gives the following anecdote:

In the erection of this chapel (at Raratonga), a striking instance occurred of the feelings of an untaught people when observing for the first time the effect of written communications. As I had come to work one morning without my square, I took up a chip, and, with a piece of charcoal, wrote upon it a request that Mrs. Williams would send me that article. I called a chief, who was superintending his portion of the work, and said to him,

"Friend, take this; go to our house, and give it to Mrs. Williams."

He was a singular-looking man, remarkably quick in his movements, and had been a great warrior; but in one of the numerous battles he had fought he had lost an eye, and giving me an inexpressible look with the other he said,

"Take that! she would call me a fool, and scold me if I carry a chip to her."

"No," I replied, "she will not; take it and go immediately, for I am in haste."

Perceiving me to be in earnest, he took it, and asked, "What must I say?"

I replied, "You have nothing to say; the chip will say all I wish."

With a look of astonishment and contempt, he held up the piece of wood, and said,

"How can this speak? Has it a mouth?"

I desired him to take it immediately, and not spend so much time in talking about it. On arriving at the house he gave it to Mrs. Williams, who read it, threw it away, and went to the tool-chest, whither the chief, resolving to see the result of this mysterious proceeding, followed her closely. On receiving the square from her he said,

"Stay, daughter; how do you know this is what Mr. Williams wants?"

"Why," she replied, "did you not give me a chip just now?"

"Yes," said the astonished warrior, "but I did not hear it say anything."

"If you did not, I did," was the reply; "for it made known to me what he wanted, and all you have to do is to return as fast as possible."

With this the chief leaped out of the house, and catching up the mysterious piece of wood, he ran through the settlement with the chip in one hand and the square in the other, holding them up as high as his arms would reach, and shouting as he went,

"See the wisdom of these English people; they can make chips talk—they can make chips talk!"

On giving me the square, he wished to know how it was possible thus to converse with persons at a distance. I gave him all the information in my power; but it was a circumstance involved in so much mystery, that he actually tied a string to the chip, hung it around his neck, and wore it for some time. During several following days, we frequently saw him surrounded by a crowd, who were listening with interest while he narrated the wonders which the chip had performed.

LET those who have never told a lie, cleave to their love of truth. Let those who have, repent, and do so no more. Let all remember that "lying lips are an abomination to the Lord; but they that deal truly are his delight."—Star.

THE LITTLE LANTERN.

A VERY young child may be useful. A small lantern, well-lighted, is of much service, while a very large lantern, without any light in it, is of no use. And who knows how many the light from a child's lantern will reach and benefit?

Do not be dark lanterns, or such as give no light; but as you pass along through life, at home, or in school, or in the street, or wherever you are, show that you love the truth, and that you seek, by God's grace, to walk as you are taught in his holy word. Show it in your lives. Show it by cheerful, honest, loving walk with your companions. "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven."—Friend.

A POOR lame boy was walking along one of the muddy streets of the city, trying to find a suitable place to cross. The heavy rains had fallen, and the street was unusually deep with mud and water. While waiting to cross, another lad saw him, and cried out, "Stop! stop! I'll carry you over." In a moment he gently took the little cripple in his arms, and carried him over to the opposite side of the street. In doing it he got quite wet and muddy; but he did not mind that, for he felt amply repaid by the inward reward which his heart gave him. The little lame boy smiled gratefully, and thanked him kindly, but the pleasure of doing a kind act paid him better. Doing good to others brings its own reward, which the selfish of the world can not appreciate.—Sel.

THE DORCAS MISSION.

SOME of the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE are among our contributors, and for their benefit, and for the benefit of our numerous friends who are not able to contribute, I pen this article. For the support of this mission we depend upon the Lord who opens the hearts of his people to send of their substance. This saves us from boring our friends with appeals for aid: it saves us from judging those who do not assist us: it enables us to realize more the value of God's promises in regard to temporal blessings, and consequently our faith is strengthened in this direction continually. We think that the facts of the existence of our mission, and of our feeling that it is the Lord's will that we should spend and be spent for our Master in this way, are all that we should burden our friends with. Then to have it supported, it is all sufficient to beg at the throne of grace, and thus by prayer and supplication we make all our wants known unto God; and when tried we can there cast all our cares and burdens upon him who careth for us. We have the great satisfaction of knowing that every penny received is a free-will offering, and we see the hand of the Lord in supplying our necessities in his own way.

During the year 1867 the following donations of money were received: from visitors at the Home, $486 26; the former managers of the Home (ladies of the Society of Friends), $200; other Friends, $32; for preaching, $161 20; private contributions in places where I have visited and preached, $73 52; at the Wilbraham Campmeeting, $152 64; at the Alton Bay Campmeeting, $238 27; a friend in Bristol, R. I., $175; by mail, $1,368 28; sales of rags, $9 77; making the total amount for the year, $3,437 94. It is my privilege thus to recount what the Lord hath wrought for us in this direction. Next I will state how this money is expended, and will arrange under distinct heads.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

It has a membership of two hundred boys and girls, and twelve teachers. About three quarters of the scholars are unable to read, hence we have to use alphabet cards and spelling books for that number. Those who can read are formed into reading and Bible classes. They are not taught the popular theology of the day at all, yet they are instruced but partially in the truths we hold so dear, for on account of their past want of instruction in truth they are unable to bear much strong meat. Our school meets in an excellent hall, which measures forty by eighty feet, for which we pay a mere nominal sum for rent, only $1 50 per Sunday afternoon, so that the rent for the year will amount to but $78. Cards, books, and Testaments are constantly needed, and this adds to the expense.

OUR DAY SCHOOL.

This has a membership of seventy-five children, comprising the children of the Home, and other poor children in our neighborhood. It meets in the Home building, and is under the care of Sr. Mary Meeker Valle, of Newark, N. J. This school is always requiring books, slates, pens, pencils and the like, and they take a portion of our receipts. Sr. V. labors for Christ's sake, and will receive no stated compensation, but have such sums as we may be able to give her from time to time.

OUR EVENING SCHOOL.

Also held in the Home, for men and women. On account of protracted meetings it has been suspended for a while. This school also requires reading and spelling books, cards, writing books, slates, arithmetics, and the like. These draw upon our treasury also.

LITTLE WANDERERS' HOME.

This institution has just entered its sixteenth month. Quite a number of the readers of the H. of L. contributed to this branch of our mission, and they will be especially interested in a little review of its past operations. Its objects are—

I. To gather in the children of destitute and worthy persons, especially half orphans, feed, clothe and educate them, until their parents are able to care for them once more. Whenever desired we procure homes and service places for this class.

II. To gather in orphans and children who may have been deserted by their friends, and obtain homes for them.

III. To rescue children from haunts of vice where they are not already ruined, and bring them up ourselves. The parents of these children are willing in some instances to place them under our care, provided we will pledge to bring them up ourselves. Though degraded themselves, they appear willing to put their children with us, for they believe that we are not their enemies. We have but three under this head. Our present building is fa too small for such a purpose, and its location for the same is not altogether desirable.

We have a Matron, Assistant, School Teacher, and seamstress at the Home. All work without salaries, but receive sums at various times to keep them supplied with all they need. A cook is hired for the work in her department.

Since the Home was opened, one hundred children have been fed and clothed and lodged in it, some for a short, and others for a longer period. Thirty-six of the number were boys, the remainder were girls. Their ages ranged from six to twelve years, with a few exceptions. Homes and service places have been procured for thirty children. Four children ran away from us. Four have been sent to the House of Refuge as "hard cases." Some were discharged on account of bad behavior. Others of the first class have been taken by their parents as soon as they were able to care for them. Of the entire number cared for by us, twenty-eight were orphans; sixty-six were either motherless or fatherless; three had both parents living; the balance unknown. At this time we have thirty-seven children under our care. Forty is the fullest possible extent of our accommodations. Since we commenced we have turned away over four hundred children on account of our quarters being so small. The average number of children in the Home through the year, thirty.

We have expended $1,438 47 during the past year for food for our entire household. There have also been several donations of vegetables, etc., by friends. Repairs of the building and premises, buying wood and coal, gas bills, and a hundred other expenses incident to such an institution, help to use up the funds.

OUTSIDE THE HOME.

Provision and cash have been distributed to the amount of $428 82. Gospel feasts, some eight or ten of them were given in our Home school room to hundreds (in all) of poor men, women and children around us. Surprise parties were given to scores of others, when we carried bags of flour, packages of meal, sugar, tea (for old people), or soap and candles, potatoes and codfish to their homes, offering up prayer there on their behalf.

We have received, from January 1, 1867, to March 1, 1868, fifty-five barrels, seven boxes, and sixty bundles of clothing, etc., which have been the means of clothing hundreds, and of putting hats, caps and bonnets on bare heads, shoes and stockings on bare feet, and so on to the end of the chapter. Many interesting cases might be cited under this head, but time and space forbid.

MEETINGS, CONVERSIONS, ETC.

Afternoon and evening meetings are held in the school-room of the Home. For the last two months meetings have been carried on every afternoon and evening. During that period about seventy children of various ages connected with our day and Sunday schools and the Home, and others living in this section have professed to find Christ, and about fifty adults have also given evidence of having passed from death unto life. The signs of the times, the coming of Christ, and the saints' inheritance, are the prominent themes held up before them, and it is cheering to hear the converts, large and small, talk about these things boldly. I feel that the great and terrible day of the Lord is impending, and that by the help of the Lord I must warn them to flee from "the wrath to come." Some of the worst sinners in our neighborhood have turned to God, and their testimonies are very stirring. Of course we do not know how many will endure unto the end; but we think that some will, perhaps many, but we will rejoice in the Lord over them as long as they are faithful. We endeavor to instruct them faithfully in regard to their daily life, so that they may be examples to others in purity, faith and patience. This is of the utmost importance, for truth, unless advocated by a godly person can have but little effect upon sinners. How much the cause of Christ is hindered by the lack of the spirit of Christ in some of its adherents.

This seems, for the present at least, to be my field of labor, and in humble dependence on my Saviour I shall go forward, warning the ungodly to flee from the wrath to come, pointing the repentant sinner to the Saviour who can deliver him, strengthening the weak, comforting the mourner, visiting the widow and the fatherless, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, administering to the sick, taking care of the fatherless and motherless, and the orphan, praying for all God's saints, and seeking myself to be a faithful follower of the meek and lowly Saviour.

In a few days we expect Sr. Helen Robertson to take the position of matron of the Home. Our present matron is in ill health, which incapacitates her for the work, and Sr. R. will fill her place. Srs. Helginson and Case will still remain with us. In conclusion, I will state that this article is not written for begging purposes; as heretofore, I intend to do all my begging at the throne of grace, and leave the matter of giving between the Lord and his people. Thus I interfere with no other interest, and save a world of needless anxiety and trouble. Pray for us. Yours, among the lowly. F. H. BURBANK.

HISTORY OF JERUSALEM.

THE earliest mention of this place in Scripture is in connection with the pursuit by Abraham of the kings who had made prisoner of his nephew, Lot. Having effected the rescue of that person, Abraham, on his return to Hebron where he lived, (20 miles south of Jerusalem), was met by Melchizedek, the King of Salem, who came out with bread and wine to the valley of Shaveh—probably the point just below the city—and blessed him in the name of the most high God. Five hundred years after this we find the place named Jebus, afterward Jerusalem. The Turks at the present day call it El Khuds, signifying Holy City; also, Beit el Muckhudis, the House of the Sanctuary.

As early as the conquest of Canaan, 1,451 B. C., Jerusalem was a considerable place. The league of five kings against Joshua, which was broken up at the great battle of Gibeon, was formed at the suggestion of the King of Jerusalem. . . . In the division of Canaan among the Twelve Tribes, Jerusalem fell to Benjamin, and how it came to be transferred to Judah is difficult to explain. Perhaps it was by the right of conquest, for the tribe of Judah was the first to capture it from the Jebusites. Other cases similar to this are to be found where important places were transferred from one tribe to another, and no reasons given for it.

The first settlement of Jerusalem, under the Jewish nation, was by King David, 1015 B. C. He captured it from the Jebusites, forfeited a portion of it, and built the palace there. During the reign of Solomon, other portions were enclosed within its walls, and the Temple built. Since that period it has been seventeen times destroyed and rebuilt.

1. Four years after King Solomon's death it was taken and plundered by Shisa, king of Egypt.

2. One hundred and forty-five years afterward it was taken by Jehoash, king of Israel, plundered, and a large portion of the walls demolished.

3. Two hundred and thirty-eight years afterward it was taken by Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, and almost totally destroyed. The temple of Solomon was burned, together with the king's palace. The larger part of the people were carried into captivity. The city lay desolate for half a century. Then Zerubbabel led back 52,000 of the captives, and rebuilt the temple, with a portion of the dwellings. Seventy-nine years after, Ezra conducted a second colony, and thirteen years later Nehemiah guided the third and rebuilt the walls.

4. Two hundred and seventy-five years afterward, Antiochus Epiphanes stormed the city, and slew 80,000 of the inhabitants. Two years after this he returned and totally destroyed the city. This was the most terrible calamity the Jews had ever experienced. . .

5. One hundred and six years afterward it was taken by Pompey, the Roman general, who then attached Judea as a province of the Roman Empire. . . . Shortly afterward, Herod the Great commenced to re-build the city. In this he labored with great assiduity for forty years, restoring the fortifications, the temple, and the walls to more than their former magnificence. It was in this condition when our Saviour made it the scene of his ministrations.

6. One hundred and thirteen years after its capture by Pompey, it was stormed by Titus, the Roman general, and totally destroyed. Of all its grandeur and beauty, he left nothing but two or three towers in the western wall, as mementoes that a great city had stood there. More than a million of people perished during the siege.

7. Sixty-two years afterward, it was rebuilt in part, by the Emperor Adrian, who gave it the name of Aelia.

8. One hundred and seventy-four years afterward, it was further rebuilt, its former name restored to it, and many splendid Christian churches, erected by Helena, mother of Constantine, the Roman Emperor.

9. Two hundred and thirty-one years afterward, the city was still more strongly built and beautified by the Roman Emperor, Justinian.

10. Seventy-seven years afterward, it was taken by the Persians, and nearly demolished.

11. A year afterward the Romans retook it, and rebuilt the portion that had been destroyed by the Persians.

12. Twenty-three years afterward, it was taken by the Arabians, who held it for 437 years.

13. Next came the Turks, who took it from the Arabians.

14. Twenty-five years afterward, and on the 15th of July, 1099, the Crusaders, under Baldwin, took it by assault, after a siege of forty days, and restored the Christian emblems which were cast down nearly 500 years before.

15. Eighty-eight years afterward, it was taken by the Turks under Saladin, who had first gained a great and decisive victory over the Christian army, at Hallin, near the Sea of Galilee.

16. During the next fifty-seven years, Jerusalem changed masters several times, but in the year of our Lord, 1244, the Turks finally established themselves in possession, and have held it to the present day, a period of 622 years.

What a history is this! For 3,500 years these hills have been the scene of mortal strife. The echoes of these surrounding mountains have resounded to the warriors of a hundred nations—seventeen times destroyed, and as often rebuilt—now a place of grandeur and luxury—now a place of desolation! With these facts before us we shall understand the Lamentations of Jeremiah, and can more perfectly enter into the spirit of those words uttered by our Saviour as he stood upon the Mount of Olives, east of the city, and looked down upon it, doomed within less than forty years to become a place of desolation, and said: "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee. . . . Your house is left unto you desolate!"

CONNECTED EVENTS.

Having thus sketched the history of this far-famed city, I proceed to mention a few of those events with which it is associated in sacred history:

1. In the year 1872, B. C., Abraham came here, a three days' journey from Beersheba, to offer his son Isaac as a sacrifice, as God had appointed. It has been made a question among Bible Commentators, whether it was Mount Moriah—adjoining Jerusalem—upon which this sublime act of faith occurred, or Moreh, near Shechem, forty miles further north. Without attempting to decide a question upon which the wisest have differed, it appears to me that the burden of evidence rests in favor of Jerusalem.

2. When King David came here from Hebron, twenty miles south, to capture this place from the Jebusites, Jerusalem only covered a small portion of its present site, that of Zion in the southwest. The place was protected by walls that rendered it almost impregnable, and the enemy felt so secure that they ventured to insult King David with the challenge, that even their blind, and lame men could keep him out. Upon this, King David made proclamation that whoever should first enter into the city should be made the general of his army. The valiant Joab gained the prize, and Zion was taken. As the strongest parts of a fort are those that are least looked after by the defenders, it is likely that this daring man climbed up by night at the northeast corner of the city, where the crags are more than 100 feet high and exceedingly steep, and there made his entrance.

3. When Rabshakeh, the captain of the king of Babylon, approached Jerusalem, he took his station at the Upper Pool of Gibeon, opposite the northwest corner, and it was at this point that the Crusaders made their attack in 1099. When Pompey besieged Jerusalem, he made his headquarters, it is said, on the hill south of the city, now called the Hill of Evil Counsel. But when Titus, 133 years afterward, began his siege, he established himself on the hill Scopus, north of the city. It was on the eminence called Neby Samuel, or Mizpeh, five miles northwest of Jerusalem, that King Richard the lion-hearted, stood in the last Crusade, when he buried his face in his hands, and prayed, "Ah, Lord God, suffer me not to look upon Jerusalem, if so be that I I may not rescue it from the hands of thine enemies."

4. It was at Jerusalem that the people of Israel were expected to assemble themselves together, at least once a year, to worship in God's holy temple. To this point they came up by hundreds of thousands, and by millions! By the southern road, by way of Hebron and Bethlehem; by the eastern road, by way of Bethabara and Jericho, and Bethany; by the northeastern road by way of Golan and Succoth; by the northern road, by way of Shiloh and Bethel; by the northwestern road, by the Pass of Bethoran, and by Gibeon, these people sought their God in his covenanted place, and made their offerings and their sacrifices, according to the Law of Moses. Not only the city within the walls, which were more than three miles in circumference, must have been crowded to overflowing upon these occasions, but the adjacent hillsides, and the neighboring villages, and wherever a spot could be found for a camping place.

Different, indeed, is the present appearance of Jerusalem. A town with scarely 12,000 inhabitants, with streets narrow, crooked, and offensive to eye and nostrils, a city of strangers—how forcible the contrast to that Golden City, that unequalled metropolis which afforded St. John a model for "the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."—The Mystic Temple.

Letters and Extracts.

SAMUEL MORGAN, New Rutland, Ill., writes: I love the HERALD OF LIFE, because it contains so much of God's truth; and truth is what a believer in Christ loves. I feel to thank God that I have been led to search the Scriptures, and in so doing have obtained truth. Dr. John Billings sowed the good seed in this place in April, or May, 1864. Some fell on good ground; and from that time to the present, the light has been growing brighter. There are but a few here that believe in Life only in Christ. I don't see how a man can live from the dead except he has the Spirit of God dwelling in him. Jesus saith I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. Suppose he does not believe in Christ, shall he live also? Nay, verily, Jesus did not promise he should.

If all men are to be raised to life in Christ, all will have life in them. Jesus declares, John vi., "I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me; and this is the Father's will that sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." How few there are who can give a Bible reason for their hope of life, when it all depends upon our having the Spirit of God dwelling in us, when we die. Our hope is not complete until the resurrection.

The only hope for a Christian is life from the dead by a resurrection; and all who go down without such a hope, are destitute of eternal life, or any other life. Let us hold on to the faith, and continue in the hope of eternal life. Yours in hope of Life from the dead.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see, if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

ETERNAL TORMENTS.

THE APOSTOLICAL WITNESSES.

PETER'S TESTIMONY.

ACTS iii., 23—"Every soul which will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people." This language cannot relate to a temporary destruction, nor, as some suppose, to a violent destruction from this world, unless it can be shown that all who have refused to hear Christ have been thus destroyed. But this cannot be done, for many unbelieving Jews have existed on earth to this day.

Besides, the original is much more expressive than our translation. The term translated destroyed is exolothreutheesetai; which Dr. Bloomfield, in his critical notes on the Greek text, edited by Prof. Stuart, says "is a word found only in the Septuagint and the later writers; signifying to 'utterly exterminate.'"

In this text, then, we have a clear testimony against the idea of endless suffering, or the immortality of men in sin.

Acts viii., 20—"Thy money perish with thee." Again, 2 Peter ii., 1—"Bring upon themselves swift destruction." Also 12th verse—"These as natural beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, shall utterly perish." This, certainly, does not look like teaching the common theory that the wicked are immortal; and we know not how any form of expression could more forcibly teach the utter extermination of the wicked. At the 17th verse he says of certain wicked characters, "To whom the mist of darkness is reserved forever." This expression carries the idea of a total destruction; as light is sometimes put for life in the Scriptures, as for example, "the light was the life of man," so darkness is put for death; "and the mist of darkness forever," we conceive, implies an utter extinction of being.

But again, chapter iii.—"The heavens and earth—are reserved unto fire again the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." "Perdition," according to Walker, signifies "Destruction—Ruin—Death—Loss, Eternal Death." Which of these definitions favors the common theory of eternal conscious existence?

Again at the 9th verse, Peter says: "The Lord is not willing that any should perish," etc. Lastly he tells us, at the 16th verse, that some "wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction."

Thus we have noticed every passage found in Peter's testimony concerning the final destiny of wicked men, and we ask, if it were not for the trammels thrown around our minds by tradition, if we should ever give any other interpretation to these texts than the plain obvious one of destruction of being?

JAMES' TESTIMONY.

Let us now hear what he has to say. In chap. i, 15, he says: "Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death;" and again, chap. v., 20, he says: "He which converteth the sinner from the error of his ways shall save a soul from death." How can a man maintain that the soul is "deathless" with such testimony before his eyes? And why should we submit to this mystifying the plain language of the Holy Spirit to keep an old theory alive, which cannot live in the light of a literal construction of Scripture language, and when no good reason can be given for departing from the literal meaning?

JOHN'S TESTIMONY.

1 John ii., 17. "The world passeth away and the lusts thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." The inference is irresistible, that the wicked will not abide forever.

Again—Rev. xx., 14, 15. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire: i. e., they are totally destroyed, and this because they would not come unto Christ that they "might have life."

Let us hear this apostle once more: Rev. xxi., 8. "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolators, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death:" a total destruction.

Other passages in Rev. supposed to refer to the final punishment of the wicked we have noticed in another place, and leave you to judge to which theory, that of endless being, or destruction of being, the testimony of John belongs.

JUDE'S TESTIMONY.

Sixth verse, he says: "The angels which kept not their first estate, he hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day." In the days of Seth, after the birth of Enos, it is said, "Then began men to call upon the name of the LORD;" or, "then was begun invocation with the name of YAHVEH"—that is, the DELIVERER—the coming Messiah. This class of men were "angels," or messengers to the rest of men, and were "the sons of God." In time they left their primitive dignity, and married the daughters of mere worldlings, because of their beauty—they became slaves to "strange flesh," and fell "under darkness"—the light that was in them became darkness, and they were bound in the "chains" of it, and "reserved in" them "unto the judgment of the great day," when the flood swept them away with "the ungodly," with whom they had formed a fleshly alliance by marriage. They had no more the light of God's countenance, and perished in their sins. That this is the correct view is probable from what Jude next says, "Even as Sodom," etc. "in like manner giving themselves overt to fornication, and going after strange flesh," etc. Thus the sin of Sodom is seen to be of like character of the "angels" that "kept not their first estate." Both sinned by giving loose to the desires of the flesh, and were destroyed for it.

Again—Jude, speaking of certain wicked characters, says, "Wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." The figure here used denotes an utter, total, and eternal obscuration, or disappearing. No language could more forcibly denote the utter destruction of the wicked—of their being itself, so that they appear no more forever.

TESTIMONY OF PAUL.

If there is immortality in sin and suffering, we shall expect to find that doctrine clearly stated by such a writer and preacher as "Paul," the "apostle of Jesus Christ." In other words, if the punishment of impenitent sinners is endless life in misery, Paul cannot be supposed to overlook it, who had constantly to preach to sinners of the worst class, and often speaks of their doom. Now, if it should appear that Paul never once gives countenance to the doctrine of the immortality of the wicked, or their conscious being in endless suffering, then it must be evident he did not believe that doctrine. It will be my object to examine fully what Paul did say and teach on this question, and not a text shall be omitted where he touches the subject.

In Acts xiii., 40, 41, Paul utters a strong word of caution to his hearers on the danger of despising the gospel. Does he say, "Behold, ye despisers and wonder and" sink to endless misery? No. What then? "Perish." This phrase does not mean preserve, under any form or circumstance, but "to decay, to die, to cease to have existence, to be destroyed." Again, at verse 45, the Jews are found "contradicting and blaspheming," showing an awful state of wickedness. If Paul is a faithful servant of Jesus Christ, we shall expect him to state in the strongest and most emphatic terms the danger of such wicked conduct: but we find not a word that gives countenance to the notion that these wicked men were immortal and would be tormented eternally. Just the reverse of this is clearly expressed: "Seeing ye put the word of God from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles." What can be plainer and more forcibly expressed? It was "everlasting life" they forfeited by their sins; and that is the highest penalty of God's law, or Paul was unfaithful.

The next place where we find the apostle speaking on this subject is Rom. i., 29–32. Let us first attend to the description he gives of the wickedness of those of whom he speaks. He says, v. 28–31, "And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient, being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness, full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity, whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful."

Can a blacker catalogue of sins be furnished than this? Surely if any man deserves unending being in indescribable torments these do. Let us hear what further the apostle has to say concerning them: "who knowing the judgment of God, that they who commit such things are worthy" of endless torments in hell fire? Is that what they are worthy" of, Paul? "No, I did not say any such thing." Well, what did you say? "I said they are worthy of death." Is that all? Those who profess to be your "regular successors" tell us such wicked men are immortal, and cannot die, but must live eternally in misery. However we believe you, and think those who claim to be your "successors" may not have sufficiently heeded the apostolic injunction to "beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of the [pagan] world, and not after Christ."

I now follow the apostle into Rom. ii. After showing that God's judgment of men will be impartial both on the Jew and Gentile, he gives us to understand who will have "immortality, eternal life," viz., those "who seek for" it, by a "patient continuance in well doing:" while the opposite character will have "indignation and wrath," and that this will be the case with all who have sinned "without law," or "in the law;" so that "In the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ," they shall "perish." In this chapter, the apostle gives no countenance to the theory that wicked men are immortal, or that any man can have immortality unless he "seek for" it: all others shall experience the "wrath" which they have "treasured up," under which they shall "perish." To "perish" and have "immortality, eternal life," are put in contrast by the apostle.

Next look at Rom. vi., 21–23, "What fruit had ye then in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? For the end of those things is" endless torments! Have we read Paul right? Does he talk thus? Let us look again. "For the end of those things is death." Modern divines say it is "endless misery"—Paul says it is "death." Which shall we believe? Paul continues, "But now, being made free from sin and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life." He then adds, "For the wages of sin is" everlasting life in indescribable and unutterable torments! Is that right? Did he say so? He ought to say so, if modern theology is true. Let us take off the old sectarian spectacles and look at this text again. What did Paul say? He said "the wages of sin is death." Well, we thought so; but his words have been so often "tormented" to make them speak "endless misery," we did not know but we might be mistaken, and that death meant life. "No," cries the apostle, "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Thus Paul has a perfect contrast—Death to the sinner, Life to the saint. One dies, and his death is eternal; the other lives, and his life is everlasting. Thus far Paul is clear of the heresy of endless life in sin and suffering.

Rom. viii., 13, the apostle says, "If ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." How perfectly plain. It needs no learned perverters of God's truth to make common sense men understand it. So sure as one lives, the other will die: and just as certain as life implies consciousness, death implies unconsciousness. "To be, or not to be," depends on the character men form here. If they have been made free from sin and had their fruit unto holiness, they live, by the gift of God, eternally. If destitute of this character they die, and thus reap the wages for which they labored.

Rom. ix., 22, the apostle inquires, "What if God, willing to show his wrath, and to make his power known, endured with much long suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction?" What, Paul! Are you coming out a Destructionist? Beware how you favor that class of men, for we hate them, as Ahab did Micaiah. 2 Chron. xviii., 7.

Again, Paul says, Rom. xiv. 15, "Destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died:" and verse 20, "For meat destroy not the work of God." Now, that is provoking, Paul: we called you, as Balak did Balaam, to curse our enemies, and behold thou hast blessed them altogether. But come, I pray thee, unto another place—and curse me them from thence. Very well, answers, Paul, we will go to 1 Corth, i., 18: "For the preaching of the cross is to them that" are to be endlessly tormented "foolishness." Will not the endless misery theorists cry out now, as did Ahab, king of Israel, to Micaiah, when he said with the false prophets, Go ye up to battle and prosper, etc.; and the king said, How many times shall I abjure thee that thou say nothing but the truth to me in the name of the Lord? Very well; if truth is what you want, then I, Paul, say, "The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness." Well, have you anything more to say? Yes, "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy:" 1 Corth. iii., 17. More destruction! Yes—"and through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died:" 1 Corth. viii., 11. And "if the the dead rise not—then they also that have fallen asleep in Christ are perished:" 1 Corth. xv., 17, 18. Worse and worse—truly, Paul, you only prophecy evil of our theory: for, you not only teach the wicked are to be destroyed, but that the saints who die are perished if there is no resurrection, and if so they cannot be conscious now! But we are not satisfied yet, Paul, so please come with us to another place, it may be we shall make out these destructionists heretics from there. We turn to 2 Corth. ii., 15, 16, "For we are unto God a sweet savor of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that" are preserved in endless misery! Have we read Paul right? No—he did not say any such thing. What did he say? "In them that perish." But, don't that mean preserve? No, for "to the one we are the savor of death unto death, and to the other the savor of life unto life." But, Paul, by such testimony do you not corrupt the word of God? No—"we are not as many who corrupt the word of God, but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ:" v., 17.

Alas for the advocates of inherent immortality—take Paul to what place they will, he is stubbornly set in giving no countenance to their pagan fable. Let them, however, try him to their heart's content, and, Balak like, drag him to another place. Gal. vi., 8. What do you see now, Paul? "He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption (not immortality), but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." Phil. i., 28, "And in nothing terrified by your adversaries, which is to them an evident token of perdition, but to you of salvation, and that of God." Also, chap. iii., 19, "Whose end is destruction." 1 Thess. v., 3, "Sudden destruction cometh upon them, and they shall not escape." Shall not escape what? Destruction. But they would escape it if eternally preserved. Now, Paul do let us try you once more: come to another place. Speak now, we pray thee, so as to confirm our theory this once, for we cannot bear to think we and our fathers have been in error, and that we are nor gods. 2 Thess. i., 9, "Who shall be punished with everlasting" preservation in indescribable agonies, where "the presence of God in his vengeance scatters darkness and woe through the dreary regions of misery; for God is present himself in hell to see the punishment of these rebels: his indignation kindles, and his incensed fury feeds the flame of their torment, while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being, and render all their powers most acutely sensible, thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep." Now, believers in inherent immortality, shout and clap your hands, for you see Paul is fairly and fully on your side. But stop one moment: we have made a mistake. We began with Paul, but the railroad track has got so badly worn by much travel that we ran off, and took Benson's track, in his Sermons on Future Misery. Badly as we are off the track of Paul we must get back. We start anew, then: "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power," etc. Thus Paul differs from Benson and his immortal soul coadjutors immensely.

Again the apostle, in speaking of the man of sin, chap. ii., 10, says his working is "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish, because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved: and for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie, that they all might be damned (condemned) who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." Then Heb. vi., 8, he says, "That which beareth thorns and briars is rejected, and is nigh unto cursing, whose end is to be burned," not preserved; for John the Baptist declares, Math. iii., 12, that the chaff, same as thorns and briars, shall be "burned up with unquenchable fire; no preservation, but utter destruction. Let us hear Paul once more, Heb. x., 26, 27, "For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." Devour, which signifies to eat up, to consume, to annihilate. "But we are not of them who draw back unto perdition" [destruction], v. 39.

Thus closes up the testimony of Paul. We have now placed before you every word that he has spoken on the doom of the wicked, so far as recorded in the Bible. And where is one solitary expression that gives countenance to the theory of endless sin and suffering? Again I ask—Where? Paul a sustainer of the God-dishonoring theory shadowed forth in the words of Benson, quoted above, which is the doctrine of all who, like Benson, believe in endless misery! No, never. Paul did not so learn of Christ. The endless sin and suffering theory was manufactured in a pagan and Papal mill. Paganism is the father cause, and Papacy the mother cause of the fable of endless torture to any being in the universe. Well did Bishop Newton say "It is impossible for any creature to live in endless torments." And again he said, "God is love; and he would rather not have given life than render that life a torment and curse to all eternity." Whatever Bishop Newton might think or say, a greater has said, even the eternal Jehovah himself—"The soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek. xviii., 4, 20. Also, by the Spirit of God the Psalmist says, But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke they shall consume away. Psa. xxxvii., 20.

God has set life and death before us. We are called upon to choose life. God invites, commands, expostulates, entreats, and warns; but cannot compel man to death without destroying man's moral agency, which would be, in fact, to unman man, and make him as incapable of higher happiness as any other mere animal. Man must turn and live, or he will pass on and die—die because he would not have life—die because he is unfit for any purpose of life—wholly disqualified for the employment of life. And the sinner, persisting in the course of sin and death, will as certainly pass the period of being restored, and when death entire must be the result, as certain as the man with a fatal physical disorder will certainly, by neglecting proper medical aid, pass the period when death cannot be arrested. And if you would think the man unwise, and acting insanely that procrastinates, and puts off application to a proper remedy in such a physical disorder, how much more is every careless and dying sinner chargeable with folly and madness who delays applying to Christ, the great Physician? Every day increases the danger; and every day the moral disease is increasing in malignity—every day is bringing the sinner nearer to that point, where, when once past, there is no recovery—destruction and death must follow.

Let none, then, delay longer: — God is now calling—"look unto me and live." The Lord Jesus Christ is stretching forth his hands, and saying, "This is that bread which came down from heaven, that a man might eat thereof and not die." "Whosoever drinketh the water that I shall give him"—it "shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life. Hasten to Christ, then, who only has eternal life to give—believe in him, trust in his power and skill to make alive; abide by his directions—follow him. Remember no man can come to the Father but by Christ. There is no other way of salvation, or eternal life, but by the Son of God alone. All other physicians and remedies are of no value. If you stay away you die. O, come to Christ and live.

BY HON. O. S. HALSTED.

Ps. cix., 2, Heb., For mouth of wicked, u, even, mouth of deceit, upon, or, against, me they have opened; they have spoken against me with tongues lying, or, of lie; Gr., For mouth of sinful kai, even, mouth of deceitful upon, or, against, me, was opened; they spoke against me with tongue deceitful; Douay, they have spoken against me with deceitful tongues; Ital., For the mouth of the wicked e the mouth of fraud are opened against me; E. V., For the mouth of the wicked and the mouth of the deceitful are opened against me.

Ps. cix., 4, Heb. Instead of love of me, istnu, they have lain in wait for, or, adversaried, me; Gr., endiebalon me; Ital., spoke ill of me; Douay, they detracted me; Ital., to me they are been adversaries, E. V., they are my adversaries. [Here again, the Ital. and E. V. use a noun where the Gr., the Lat., and the Douay, use a verb for the Heb. verb stn.]

Ps. cix., 6, Heb., Visit upon him (a) wicked u—even—stn, (an) adversary, raise up, or, let stand on right of him; Gr., Appoint upon him (a) sinful kai—even diabolos, (a) deceiver, or, caluminator, let stand on the right of him; the Lat. version here uses diabolus; Douay, Set thou the sinner over him, and may the devil stand at his right hand; the Ital. here is, the Satan; E. V., Set thou a wicked man over him, and let Satan stand at his right hand. [The Heb. (a) stn; Gr., (a) diabolos; Lat. version (a) diabolus, in the latter clause of the verse is another term for, or characteristic of, a wicked—E. V., a wicked man, in the first clause; the clauses being connected by the Heb. u, even. The following are some of the many definitions of the Heb. u: "even; by way of explanation; then: and; but; or, because; so that; therefore; wherefore; in order that." J. P. Wilson, in his "Easy Introduction to the Hebrew," for u gives, "and, then, but, because, even," etc. We give a few other instances where u is even. 1 Sam. xxviii., 3, Heb., . . . buried him in Ramah u, even, in (the) city of him; the Ital. gives e; the E. V. gives, even. 1 Sam. xvii., 40, Heb. u; Ital., e; E. V., even. Isaiah lvii., 11, Heb. u, Ital., even, E. V., even. In Dan. iv., 13, the Heb. is, (a) watcher u, even, (a) holy; Gr., kai, even; Lat. et, even; Ital., e; Douay and E. V., and: even, is plainly the proper word here; there was but one watcher, and he was a holy. And in Zech. iii., 2, given after, the Heb. is u; the Gr., kai; the Lat., et; the E. V., even. These examples are sufficient to put the reader on his guard, in reading the E. V., where and is given as if it denoted addition; apparently with a view of destroying the parallelism between clauses of a verse, where even would show the parallelism. As in Ps. cix., 6, above given; where the Douay, and E. V., would have David ask God to set not only a wicked man but the devil too, E. V., Satan, too, [to help the wicked man, we suppose,] at the right hand of him that rewarded David evil for good.

Ps. cix., 20, Heb., This (the) wages of stni from Jehovah, u, even of those speaking evil against enphsh of me [i. e., against me, those speaking evil and stni mean the same persons]; Gr., endiaballonton, (for stni). The Lat. (for stni,—Gr.—endiaballonton,) has, who detrahunt, detract, disparage, speak evil of; Douay, who detract me, [Heb. stni,] . . . who speak evil against my soul. Ital. (Let) such (be) from the Signore the recompense of my adversaries; E. V. (Let) this (be) the reward of mine adversaries from the Lord.

Ps. cix., 29, the Heb. stni; Gr., those endiaballontes me; Lat., who disparage—speak evil of—me; Douay, them that detract me; Ital. and E. V., my adversaries. [We thus see that an evil speaker is a Heb. stn—a Gr. diabolos. In these two last verses, also, where the Gr., the Lat. and the Douay use a verb for the Heb. verb stn, the Ital. and E. V. use a noun.]

Prov. vi., 24, Gr., from diabole, reproach, calumny, of (a) tongue foreign, or, strange; Douay, from the flattering tongue of the stranger; Ital., from the flattery of the tongue of the strange, or foreign; E. V., from the flattery of the tongue of a strange woman.

Dan. iii., 8, Heb, . . . ate the pieces of the Jews, (metaphor., says Ges., under akl, for accused, caluminated, the Jews); Gr., diebalon [from diaballo, whence diabolos] accused, caluminated; Lat., Douay, Ital. and E. V., accused the Jews.

Dan. vi., 24, Heb., which ate the pieces of Daniel; Gr., . . . those men which, diabalountas, having accused, caluminated Daniel; Lat., Douay, Ital., and E. V., had accused Daniel.

Hosea vii., 2, Heb., . . . now have encompassed them the bad works of them; Gr., the diaboulia of them; Lat., and Douay, their own devices; Ital., the their doings; E. V., their own doings.

Hosea xi., 6, Heb., ... and they shall eat from, or, of, the counsels of them; Gr., from, or, of, the diaboulion, rash determinations, of them; Lat., and [the sword] shall eat the heads of them; Douay, shall devour their heads; Ital., and (them) shall devour because of their counsels; E. V., and devour (them) because of their counsels. [The Lat., the Ital., and the E. V. are wrong. The Ital. inserts them to help out its wrong idea of the sense, and the E. V. follows the Ital.]

Zech. iii., 1, Heb., . . . and he stn standing on right of him for stn, (an) adversary, to him; Gr, ... that diabolos . . . to be adverse to him; Lat. . . . . (a) satan . . . . that he might thwart him; Douay, and satan stood on his right hand, to be his adversary; Ital., and Satan stood at his right hand, to be to him against as party adverse; E. V., and Satan standing at his right hand to resist him.

Zech. iii., 2, Heb., And said Jehovah to he stn, reprove Jehovah at thee he stn, u, even, reprove Jehovah at thee, who [Jehovah] hath approved or, chosen, b, in, Jerusalem; Gr., And said kurios to that diabolos: reproach kurios at thee, o diabolos, who [Jehovah] having chosen, or, selected, this, or, the, Jerusalem; Lat., And said (the) Dominus to (the) satan: reprimand (the) Dominus at thee, sasalem; Lat., And said (the) Dominus to (the) satan: reprimand (the) Dominus at thee, satan, et, even, reprimand (the) Dominus at thee, who hath chosen Jerusalem; Douay, And the Lord said to satan: the Lord rebuke thee, O satan: and the Lord that chose Jerusalem rebuke thee; Ital., And the Signore said to Satan: reprimand thee the Signore, O satan: reprimand thee the Signore that hath chosen Jerusalem; E. V., And the Lord said unto Satan, the Lord rebuke thee, O Satan; even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem rebuke thee.

We have given, we believe, every passage in the Old Testament where diabolos is used in the Greek version; and in every one of them diabolos is used for the Heb. stn—adversary; which, as we have seen, is another appellation for the whisperer—serpent—the breath [for principle, or, power] of evil, symbolized by the serpent.

In but one of these passages does the Lat. version give diabolus, namely, Ps. cix., 6. The Douay Romish version embraced, in that verse, the only opportunity offered in the Old Testatment of making the orthodox devil out of diabolus. The Douay versionists seem to have thought they had better have the devil somewhere in the Old Testament; and the Latin version having used diabolus in this verse, it was thought to be the proper place to introduce that orthodox personage into the Old Testament; inasmuch as the Rheims Romish version of the New Testament, published years before, gives the devil where the Latin version has diabolus. This is is the only place in the Old Testament where even the Douay gives devil, in the singular. Devils, in the plural, is used in other places in the Old Testament, both in the Douay and in the E. V., for idols—idol gods; which were, certainly, things of evil.

THERE is no man, there is no woman, there is no boy, there is no girl, within the reach of my voice, who does not to-night recall some act that causes regret and remorse, which act was not a deliberate one, not the result of any hatred, or revenge, but simply the product of a hasty, an impulsive, and an improvident moment, when the fire burst out before he knew it. You told me that you could not help it? Oh, it is all nonsense to say that! A man can always keep his temper if he will. A woman can always say a gentle word instead of a harsh one, if she has a mind to. Why, you hold yourself in check every day, and yet, in your homes, where you should be kindest, and most charitable and gentle, you yield to pettishness, to peevishness, until it seems as though a cold north wind were blowing over your roof, and chilling the atmosphere between you and those you care for so much. Cannot help it, friends? You can, you can; but you will not. The other day I chanced to enter a friend's house. He did not know I was in the parlor, and I overheard his conversation. He was very harsh in his dealings with his child. He was out of sor.s, that morning. "The wind was east," and the east wind blew into his lungs and into his soul, and soured his mind, and soured his heart, and so like a base miscreant as he was, he vented his bad temper on his wife and children. It is a habit some men have. This man was talking in a hard, unchristian tone, talking as no father should talk. He had lost his temper. He was saying what he would be sorry for in a few moments. And then the servant announced my presence. Mind you the man would have said he could not help it: "The boy teased me! He did what I cannot endure, and, on the impulse of the moment, I spoke my anger. I could not not control myself.' There was a frown on his face; but when I was announced, being more or less of a stranger, demanding of him certain courtesies, he at once smoothed his face as though nothing had happened—as though the sun were shining brightly in the heavens, and the wind were south, and not east. He came into the room where I was, and in the most cordial and courteous way possible, gave me his hand, and smilingly bade me welcome. He could not control himself, simply because he did not think enough of his boy—because he did not sufficiently appreciate his family; and because he thought his home was a den in which he could roar with impunity, and not the great temple of God, where he should walk as priest and king. And yet, I, almost a stranger, was sufficiently strong in his presence, to cause him at once to cool down into courtesy, into affability, into politeness! I tell you, that many and many a man, and many and many a woman, in this strange world of ours, in which many things seem to go wrong, will be gentle and kind and charitab'e and full of smiles outside of their houses, with strangers, for whose opinion they do not care one jot, or one tittle, and in the house, where all the happiness of years depends upon their sweetness of soul, and where they are constantly shedding influences that will ripen into the good or bad life of boy or girl, will yield to a pettishness and peevishness, unworthy of them as men and women, and wholly unworthy of them as Christians.

The Only Rerugе

FROM "THOSE THINGS WHICH ARE COMING UPON THE EARTH."

I have just been making an extract from a writer of the twelfth century, who wrote a little thing which he denominated "De Scala Claustrali," which words you might possibly not discover at once to be, "Of the Ladder of the Cloister." "This," he says "consists of four gradations of assent—reading, meditation, prayer, contemplation. Reading inquires after spiritual happiness; meditation ascertains its nature, its importance to us, and our own utter inabilty to confer it on ourselves; prayer then asks it from Him who alone can bestow it; and, when our prayer is answered, contemplation exercises itself in the actual enjoyment of the blessing. These steps," he observes, "are few indeed; but they are of immense comprehensiveness. The lowest of them rests on the earth; but the highest penetrates to the heaven of heavens."

Soberly, I know no way of escaping "the heart-aches, and the thousand natural shocks, that flesh is heir to," but by getting as high up as possible on this ladder, which I think the old Carthusian abbot (for such he was, Dupin says, though the tract is among the works of St. Bernard) has not ill-described.

There is not in the patriarchal history a more inpressive story than that favorite one of all young readers, "Jacob's Ladder."

The forlorn pilgrim in his accommodations for the night, presents to us the extreme of solitary destitution. But what a light rises in the darkness: what a transit from the lowest of human circumstances to a magnificence before which all earthly splendor fades into inanity! It was natural for the astonished Jacob to exclaim, "How dreadful is this place! This is none other than the house of God; this is the gate of heaven." Doubtless, after this, poor and friendless, as, to human appearance, he still was, "he went on his way rejoicing." Now, what I have to say is, that whoever gets possesion of the above-described ladder, which, happily, is not that only of the cloister ("neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem," etc), and learns well how to use it, has in this the substance and essence of Jacob's ladder; and, at every stage of his pilgrimage through this world, has from this possession a real portion of that comfort and support, in his serious, settled reflections and feelings, which the patriarch felt in his ecstatic vision.

This, to mortal man, ought ever to be most interesting; but, in times like the present, when that period described by our Saviour seems almost to be approaching, when there shall be "on the earth distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming upon the earth," it is, actually, the only refuge which, not only conscience, but reason, can for a moment put up with.—Letter of Alex. Knox.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, MARCH 25, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Passover Supper.

Those among us who "keep the feast" of "Christ, our passover," or what is commonly called "The Lord's Supper," as an annual memorial of his death, will meet at the house of Br. Thomas M. Redhead, 261 Raymond street, Brooklyn, N. Y., at half past seven o'clock, Tuesday evening, April 7th. If friends in other places wish to give notice of similar meetings, let them send us notice in time for next week's paper. It must reach us by Tuesday morning, or it will be too late for insertion.

Life from the Dead.—The second thousand must be printed soon, if the project is to go on of giving them a wide circulation; and that idea seems to be the prevailing one, so far as we hear. The issuing and sending off the work much increases our labor; but give the funds and we will cheerfully give our labor and the use of our stereotype plates to accomplish so important an enterprise.

The "Defence of the Bible" is likely to be issued in pamphlet; but our friends will see that hardly half the necessary amount is yet pledged to issue the first thousand. Let us hear from all who intend to help in this matter. Send any sum you are able to, whether large or small. "Every little helps," is an old saying. If not prepared to send the amount now, tell us what can be relied on to help. An immediate response is desirable.

Omission.—On the first page of this day's issue, fourth column, eleventh line from the bottom, it now reads, "God cannot compel man to death," etc. It should read, God cannot compel man to turn from death, etc.

Obeying the Gospel.

A correspondent writes: It is very plain to my mind the apostle preached that men must believe the gospel and also obey. Right, here, you enter your protest and say, "Just you believe what I have told you about Christ's being the Life-giver, the only one that has promised life." And now, if a man was to say to you, "I believe with all my heart these truths," you would have to say to him, "My friend, this is all that the anointed One has called upon you to do: now live uprightly before the world, and by 'a patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor, and eternal life.'" It does seem to me this is a clear separation of the word of God, made known to us through his Son. . . . If Christ had only said "believe, and ye shall be saved," this would have settled the commission; but that obedience was as necessary to a compliance with his will as belief, is very clear to my mind.

And it is equally "clear to our mind" that "obedience" is as "necessary to a compliance with his will as belief;" and our friend seems to us to stultify himself. He appears to say, we do not urge believers to obedience; and yet he says, we do not tell them by a patient continuance in well doing to seek for honor, glory [immortality], eternal life. One would think that was urging obedience upon them in strong terms; yet our friend thinks that is not to obey. Does he know what it is to obey the gospel? He doubtless has his idea of what it is, but is his idea infallibly the right one? No doubt he thinks it is, but he must remember that ideas may be called in question. He practices in that way in regard to ours, and he must expect others will claim the right to call his in question.

Does our friend know what it is to obey the gospel? When the Jews asked Jesus, "What shall we do that we might work the works of God?" our Lord answered them, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." Did our Lord understand in what obedience consists? Did Paul speak advisedly when he said, "We have received grace and apostleship for obedience to the faith among all nations, for his name"? The marginal reading is, "To the obedience of faith." Rom. i., 5. See, also, Rom. xvi., 26, "Made known to all nations for the obedience of faith." The first step in obedience is faith. This is the first demand of God, of the prophets, of Christ, and of the apostles. "The just by faith, shall live again," is proclaimed throughout both the Old and New Testaments. "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Heb. xi., 6. "Without faith it is impossible to please him."

Our friend appears to think we separate the word of God because we tell believers to show their faith "by a patient continuance in well doing," and thereby go on to "seek for honor, glory, and immortality, eternal life." He seems to have some mystical sense to the terms obey and obedience; as in his estimation faith is not obedience, nor a "patient continuance in well doing," etc. All these are not obedience, in his idea of gospel obedience.

It looks as if our friend thought we are too extensive in our call for obedience, because we do not confine the idea to one act, which he and others may think is "obeying the gospel," but which the gospel itself knows nothing of in the form so often used; it never employs such a phrase in reference to that one act to which they apply it. We are not saying anything against their performing that one act, if they believe it essential to them; but we do say, that calling that "obeying the gospel" is a human invention, and a sectarian "shibboleth;" and one, too, which sometimes swallows up every other consideration of obedience, exterminating, or preventing, the existence of love to any unless of their own particular notions in the matter. How can such persons pretend they are not sectarians? They may not think themselves such, but others cannot fail to see they are.

As to what is essential to be believed in order to salvation, John shall tell you: "He that believeth not God hath made him a liar, because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son." Here is a record if a man does not believe, he treats God as "a liar:" a sin of no ordinary character. What is that record so important to salvation? Let the apostle John tell you: "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." 1 John v., 10–12.

We hope this portion of inspiration will satisfy our friend that the words he puts into our mouth "about Christ's being the Life-giver, the only one that has promised life" (he should have said that can give life), are not so very much out of the way, especially as John says, not to believe this record is to make "God a liar;" a fearful crime, surely; one that we hope God in his mercy will preserve us from committing. Better say "all men are liars," than to hint that God is such. Let us not "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel."

Br. Wendell's proposed "Discussion" with H. Mattison, in to-day's paper, we have placed in our columns by his urgent request. We differ from him as to the propriety of seeking any controversy with a man who has heretofore shown such an utter disregard of accuracy in his statements; to say nothing of other delinquencies, of which he has been guilty. But Br. W. has a right to his own view as to the propriety of his course, in this matter; and, hence, we insert the correspondence he has sent us.

Resurrection of the Wicked.—No. 3.

By Dr. N. Field.

If, as Bro. Storrs assumes, the second death (Rev. xx., 6) is allegorical, may not the whole chapter be? The first resurrection may be an allegory; but what does it allegorize? What does living and reigning with Christ a thousand years allegorize? If we make the second death allegorical we can make everything in the chapter allegorical. Hence, we may as well adopt Emanuel Swedenborg's mystic rules of interpretation, and make his book, entitled "Apocalypse Revealed," our standard.

It is admitted on all hands that the Apocalypse is a highly figurative book. But it is also true that it abounds with literal declarations. It speaks of events, persons, governments, and things, as having, or that shall have, a real and veritable existence. These literal declarations explain the figurative sense of tropes, metaphors, and allegories, which are nothing but the clothing of the ideas of the inspired writer. They are as the shadow is to the substance, and must be interpreted in harmony with the literal events which they are intended to describe.

A question of importance arises in the examination of the 20th chapter of Revelation, which must be settled, namely: Is the resurrection, as seen by John, which was future at that time, literal or figurative? If it is literal, and if it is to be true that there will be but one literal resurrection, then why is it called the first resurrection? As there is no second literal resurrection, will some one give a good reason why the resurrection of the righteous is called the first resurrection?

But if the first resurrection is figurative, is it not implied that there will be a second figurative resurrection? Will Bro. Storrs tell us what these resurrections are? What do the figures represent?

If, however, the resurrection of the righteous, as described in this chapter, is literal, then there is no evading the conclusion that the rest of the dead will live again at the end of the thousand years. The expression, "lived not again till the thousand years were finished," implies, beyond a doubt, that at the end of the period mentioned they will live again. It is on them that the second death will have power. They cannot die the second time without living the second time. There is nothing in the nature of the subject to authorize a departure from the literal interpretation here. There is nothing unreasonable or absurd in understanding the second death to be the extinction of life the second time.

Now, what is the second death, and on whom will it be inflicted? The reader will turn to Rev. xxi., 8: "But the fearful, and unbelieving, and abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake of fire and brimstone, which is the second death."

This ends their being as the penalty for their sins: "Whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." Not merely the name or memory of the sinner, but the sinner himself—the veritable murderers, idolaters, liars, etc.

If the literal resurrection of the dead is not described in the 20th chapter of Revelation, then John never had a vision of such an event, for it is nowhere else mentioned! Among all the scenes in the great drama of events, then future to him, the actual, literal resurrection of the dead saints was not one of them. He saw nothing of it. Is it probable that God would omit to give John a view of so important and consolatory an occurrence when everything else of interest to the church was so accurately and graphically portrayed?

Jeffersonville, Ind.

Response to Dr. Field.

That the book of Revelation, after chap iii., is an allegory, or, rather, a double allegory, does not admit of a doubt in our mind, and we believe but few doubt or deny it. They may differ as to what expressions in it are intended to convey a literal sense; but its general character, as allegorical, is conceded on all hands. Hence, to attempt to establish a doctrine from the language of that book, not clearly taught elsewhere, looks suspicious, always. Our friend, Dr. Field, would not, probably, allow that the devil (Rev. xx., 10) is a single, literal person; but if he did, he will not admit that the terms "tormented day and night, forever and ever," are to be understood literally; yet the opponents of his belief of the literal destruction of the wicked resort to this 10th verse to prove eternal torments, just as he resorts to other parts of the chapter to prove the resurrection of the wicked dead, and with just as much reason, and, apparently, with more.

In the first place, there is not another text in the Bible that speaks of two literal resurrections of dead men; and, whenever the resurrection is spoken of, there is no hint of but one, and that a simultaneous one; excepting, of course, the resurrection of "Christ, the first fruits."

In the second place, there is not a text in the Bible that gives a hint of two literal resurrections with any space between them of any length whatever, much less of a space of a thousand years.

Such facts ought, at least, to make us cautious of affirming such a doctrine from an allegory, or affirming that such and such expressions are to be taken in a literal sense; especially when that supposed literal sense is not only not sustained by a single text elsewhere, but is positively contradicted by other plain texts, and is opposed by the general tenor of all the other books in the Bible. Such is exactly the case here.

An allegory is a "sentence, or discourse, in which the principal subject is described by another subject resembling it in its properties and circumstances." That the phrase "second death" is allegorical, is evident from the fact that it is applied to "death and hell" in this same chapter; and even the orthodox admit, in their case, it imports their utter destruction. Certainly death and hell did not die twice, nor literally die at all; but they were utterly destroyed. Whether "the whole chapter" is allegorical, is not the question at issue; it is enough that we prove the phrase "second death" is so used in the chapter. This we have done, in the case of death and hell.

As to the book of Revelation "abounding in literal expressions," we do not assent to it. That it has some, we do not deny; but there must be something more than assumption to prove them such, and especially to admit such to be literal as are found nowhere else in the Bible. Our credulity is not large enough for that.

Whether the resurrection in Rev. xx., 4, be literal or not, does not settle the question of a resurrection of wicked dead a thousand years after. Supposing it to be literal. Who are the persons embraced in this first resurrection? Let the text tell us: . . . . "Them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads or in their hands; and they lived," etc.

Will any man say, all that will ever have eternal life are embraced in this description? Surely, if so, what becomes of all the Old Testament saints, who died in peace, who never lost their heads, and had no temptation to worship the beast or his image? And what is to become of Dr. Field and ourself, with many others, who have not yet been "beheaded" for any of the reasons named? Do not for mercy's sake, Br. Field, make it too literal, or we fear you, with us, and many other better Christians, will have to wait "till the thousand years" are "finished." That would be dreadful to think of. But even in that case, it is not the wicked dead that are to "live again;" it is us, inferior Christians; and, probably, virtuous heathen. So, after all, if you will have the text strictly literal, you do not get the wicked dead made alive; but only delay the great body of Christians, like ourselves and the virtuous heathen, to the second resurrection. Better, however, at the "second table" than not at all; is it not, Br. Field?

The idea that any who are raised from the dead, into a living existence, can "die the second time," is unwarranted by the Bible, and positively contradicted, in strictly literal language, by our Saviour himself—"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and (kai, even) the resurrection from the dead . . . . neither can they die any more . . . . and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection:" and Paul saith, "the dead are raised incorruptible." In the light of two such witnesses, we think, an inference, drawn from language employed in an allegory, that some of the resurrected dead will "die the second time," will be as the small dust in the balances of eternal truth.

To the question, "What is the second death?" we judge a sufficient reply has already been given. In the allegorical language of Revelation, it is simply exclusion from future existence; shown by death and hell having part in it: they are to be no more forever; and it is just as true of the dead wicked as of death and hell; neither of which have life given them for sensibility in the confirmed destruction. The incorrigibly wicked, who are alive, and are punished with "everlasting destruction" at Christ's coming to raise his saints, cannot have a revival into life, a thousand years after, if Paul understood what he said, and if we understand him. He clearly makes the destruction of the wicked, at Christ's coming, a final one; and gives no hint, anywhere, that they are to be made alive and "die the second time."

A Discussion Proposed for Paterson.

RUFUS WENDELL TO PROFESSOR MATTISON.

Paterson, N. J., March 2, 1868.

Rev. Hiram Mattison, D.D., Jersey City, N. J.

Dear Sir: By your published works and your pulpit utterances you stand prominently before the public, before your own denomination especially, as an opposer of the view that man is wholly mortal and that the finally impenitent will literally perish. Many years ago you proposed a written discussion with Mr. Storrs, and engaged in one through the columns of the Bible Examiner. Some ten years subsequent to the abrupt termination of that controversy you published your long-promised treatise on "The Immortality of the Soul." At a later day you issued your work on "The Resurrection of the Dead." And since the commencement of the present year there has appeared from your pen still another disquisition, entitled "The Bible Doctrine of Immortality."

Of the merits of these several publications I have at present no occasion to speak. Their existence may be accepted as conclusive proof that you profess to have a more than ordinarily thorough acquaintance with the general subject of the nature of man and the doom of the wicked. And I am quite willing to believe that such a superior mastery of the question in its various bearings is largely accorded to you in the Methodist Episcopal church. I am informed that the editor of the Christian Advocate has commended your recent pamphlet in very strong terms; and I believe that your published works have been very favorably noticed in various non-Methodist religious periodicals.

These references to your standing before the religious community are designed to justify a feeling I have that no man should be more willing than yourself to confront opposing views and arguments in fair and open discussion. To such an ordeal I hold myself at all times ready to subject the views I entertain on the question of immortality; and those views, as you long ago learned, in our personal interviews (once in Mr. Goodenough's bookstore in New York, and subsequently at the Methodist Book Concern), are fundamentally at variance with your own. This willingness of mine to maintain my sentiments on the field of controversy arises from no love of discussion for its own sake, but from a deep persuasion that debates rightly conducted are among the efficient instrumentalities employed in the work of spreading Bible truth. I am at the same time not insensible that they may be so managed as to conduce to no desirable results.

In Paterson, where I have spent the last two Sundays (my home is in Salem, Massachusetts), the immortality question is at the present time enlisting considerable attention among the various churches, and it is certain that a public oral debate on the subject would be well attended. With the cordial concurrence, therefore, of many persons residing here, and on their behalf as well as my own, I write this to invite you to take part with me in such a debate in this city; the same to occupy ten evenings, and take place on the first five week-day evenings of any two successive weeks in the month of April, proximo, that may be designated by yourself.

The question offered for your acceptance is the following:

Does the Bible teach that the dead are unconscious, and that only the righteous will have a future Life?

It is proposed that there shall be on every night of the debate six speeches of twenty minutes each in length—three by each disputant; and that on the last evening—provided that you cheerfully concur in the suggestion as conformable to usage and proper under the circumstances—the Affirmative shall have a closing speech of twenty minutes, in addition to his three regular speeches.

It is further proposed that no part of the labor or responsibility of making arrangements for the discussion—such as securing a hall, advertising, selling tickets, etc.—shall devolve upon yourself, and that you shall have no interest in or claim upon any fund that may arise from the sale of tickets of admission to the debate.

In the selection of a person or persons to preside over our discussion, we are each, of course, to have an equal voice. It will be my preference, however, that our Moderator on each evening shall be a man known to the community as holding with yourself on the question under debate.

And, finally, it is proposed that, whenever you and I shall have agreed to hold the discussion, and arranged the preliminaries to our mutual satisfaction, a friend of mine in this city will place in the hands of any resident Methodist pastor whom you may name one hundred dollars in gold, with instructions that the same shall be paid over to you at the close of our debate on the tenth evening, or on whatever earlier evening the debate shall terminate, at my instance, or by the mutual consent of the disputants.

Should you regard favorably the invitation here extended but desire some modification of anything contained in this letter, you will in your reply have the goodness to acquaint me definitely with your views, so that they may receive immediate attention. If, for instance, in lieu of the One Hundred Dollars in Gold you would prefer to share equally with myself the net avails of the admission fund, my friends having charge of the matter in its business aspects would, I doubt not, readily accede to your wish. And so on other points; state your mind fully, and we will endeavor to comply with any reasonable suggestion that you may communicate.

If we are to enter upon the public investigation herein proposed, there are several things in which I desire your previous concurrence.

First: It shall be my privilege to confine myself wholly to the affirmative work of proving from the Bible that the dead are unconscious, and that only the righteous will have a future life. And, therefore, you are not to be at liberty, in your speeches, to censure me for dereliction of duty if I judge it proper to pass unanswered the affirmative arguments that you may find time to bring forward in support of the unconditional immortality of the race, and the everlasting misery of the finally impenitent.

Secondly: It shall be your necessary business in the discussion to answer, if you can, such of my Bible arguments as you shall deem unsound and yet deserving of a reply. If you shall judge any of them too weak to merit a response, it shall be your duty to say so.

Thirdly: Should your time not be fully occupied in replying to my arguments, it will then be your additional duty to go forward in the work of proving from the Scriptures that the dead are conscious, and that the wicked will have a future life.

Fourth: It shall be my right to notice and refute, at my pleasure, any Bible arguments in behalf of the immortality of the soul and eternal suffering for the wicked with which I may be acquainted. Such rejoinders, however, to arguments on your side of the question, you will be under no obligation to notice unless you shall make said arguments your own in the debate.

Fifth: It shall be my privilege to refer at pleasure to any statements or interpretations found in your published writings and relevant to our question; and, except in those cases where you may inform me to the contrary, to assume that they represent your present views. Of course you will have a like privilege in reference to anything that you can find from my pen.

If I have overlooked any points that in your judgment ought to be included in our preliminary understanding, you will please mention them in your response to this letter. There shall be on my part no unnecessary delay in attending to anything that you may write.

Should this correspondence result in the investigation proposed it will be my earnest endeavor to refrain from any utterances repugnant to Christian kindness and courtesy, and from whatever else is calculated to mar the interest or profit of the discussion to the audiences that may honor us with a hearing.

And now, my dear sir, will you accept my invitation? You are well known, I believe, here in Paterson, and have, I am informed, preached here on the immortality of the soul. If you feel assured of your ability to answer the arguments which are constantly increasing the number of adherents to the view of man's entire mortality and the final extinction of the lost, you can count on the prospect of being listened to by a large number of deeply-interested persons. After my debate last spring with Rev. Joseph Henson, in Brooklyn, a Presiding Elder in the Troy Conference, an old friend of mine, referring to what I had written him of Mr. H.'s inability to answer my affirmative arguments, said in a letter: "I fear Henson was not the son Jesse which should have represented Israel. I ground this, however, on your modest remark that he was 'as helpless as an infant.' What now if you would try a passage-at-arms with him of Jersey City? I see he has been preaching for three evenings at Southington, Conn., on 'Modern Sadduceeism, or Annihilationism.' Pitch into him, and I will, if practicable, be a hearer."

You need not be told that by "him of Jersey City" my friend meant yourself. He evidently thinks that the task undertaken by Mr. Henson, you are among the most competent to perform. Shall he have the privilege of seeing how you would do it? I crave the opportunity of sending him word that you have consented to "represent Israel" for ten evenings in the city of Paterson. I do not doubt that he and many other ministers would do themselves the pleasure of coming to hear you.

If you accede to the proposal of this letter, it will give me pleasure to send you, at an early day, if you desire it, a list of some of the leading passages of Holy Scripture which I shall introduce, in the early part of the discussion, in support of the proposition which I offer to defend.

Should you accept the invitation here proffered, I would be willing afterwards, if desired by yourself, to meet you again, at such time and place as you might designate, and investigate a question which would require you to affirm, as the teaching of the Word of God, the immortality of the soul and the endless misery of the wicked.

Your reply to this letter, should it please you to favor me with one, may be sent by mail to my address, which is "Salem, Mass." An answer at your earliest convenience will oblige me. I shall publish this letter in the HERALD OF LIFE, and shall likewise wish to give publicity to your response.

Assuring you of my deep interest in "the Bible doctrine of immortality," I subscribe myself

Very respectfully yours,
RUFUS WENDELL.

PROFESSOR MATTISON'S REPLY.

JERSEY CITY, Sat., March 14, 1868.

REV. RUFUS WENDELL,

DEAR SIR: Returning from Baltimore yesterday, I find yours of the 2d inst. In reply I have only to say, that, aside from all the peculiarities of your invitation, it is simply impossible for me to give more attention to it than to write this brief note.

I am, as you are doubtless aware, in service as Secretary of the American and Foreign Christian Union; must visit and address two or three conferences every week; and have no time at command to devote to a public discussion.

Under circumstances that would admit of it, and with a fair statement of the issues, appropriate arrangements, and an honorable and competent disputant, it would afford me great pleasure to set forth and defend the truth of God, in opposition to your unscriptural dogmas, either in Paterson, or in any other suitable place. But, as you must have known when you wrote, it is impossible, and I "yield to the inevitable."

Very respectfully yours, etc.,
H. MATTISON.

The foregoing letter was answered by mail as follows:

SALEM, Mass., March 20, 1868.

REV. H. MATTISON, D. D.,

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 14th inst., in reply to mine of the 2d, awaited my return home on Wednesday, the 18th. Please accept my thanks for your promptness. The reason you give for being unable to accept my invitation to a public discussion is satisfactory, and I, therefore with yourself "yield to the inevitable."

Should your circumstances hereafter become such as to warrant your engaging in a discussion of our differences on the immortality question, "in Paterson, or in any other suitable place," and should you see cause for accepting me as an "honorable disputant" not wholly unworthy of your notice on the score of competency, it will give me pleasure to hear from you on the subject.

Your impeachment of the honorable intent of my letter of the 2d does not strike me as agreeing with the charity that "thinketh no evil." According to the closing sentence of your reply, I "must have known" that an acceptance on your part of my invitation would be "impossible." I might dismiss the matter with the simple inquiry, "How did you know that I "must have known" any such thing? But I will go further, and assure you that your assertion is not only gratuitous, but entirely mistaken. Your card in the Christian Advocate, which met my eye accidentally, gave me my only knowledge of your present secretaryship: and what you said in that card about being unable to accept invitations to give lectures and attend dedications led me to suppose that your daily duties would keep you in New York. In this, however, I saw no reason why you might not make ten evening trips to a place only fifteen miles from your home, to take part in the proposed discussion.

If random declarations are to be indulged in at all, they assume a somewhat grave character when employed to impugn the good faith of others. Had you not apparently lost sight of this obvious truth, there would be nothing in the tone of your letter to which I could reasonably object. As it is, I must regard you as having been at unnecessary pains to affirm what you knew nothing about. In a public discussion, you would find such a course of more than questionable utility in setting forth and defending the truth of God.

Yours sincerely,
RUFUS WENDELL.

LOOKING FOR CHRIST CONSTANTLY.

"The value of one's hope depends on its practical effect on the daily life. What is the effect of the hope of the Advent near? It certainly cannot be deleterious. The apostle assures us that he who has the hope of being made like Christ when he shall come, purifieth himself even as He is pure—1 John 3: 2, 3. Vain is the faith of him on whom it has not this influence. A realizing sense of the sublime expectation that on any day or on any hour the parting skies may reveal the glorious coming of the Son of God, who will reward every man according to the thoughts and intents of his heart, cannot but have a practical effect on the life of the believer. To realize that the words we are now speaking, the thoughts we are now thinking, the actions we are now performing, may the next moment meet us at the judgment, is a solemn consideration. Believing and loving the appearing of Christ, will beget a determination to be in continual readiness for the event. It destroys the indifference, the carnal security which insensibly comes over those who do not believe nor love the coming of the Saviour. Believing in the coming of Christ at any moment, reins Christians up to the performance of duty. They feel more that the eye of the Majesty of Heaven takes cognizance of all they say and do, and that they may have no moments for repentance. Death always looks at a distance to those in health and in the heyday of youth. They feel the blood thrilling in their veins, with indication of continuance of life. They put off the evil day, and enjoy present scenes—waiting for a more convenient season to attend to their salvation. But when Christ's coming is viewed as an event that may at any moment transpire, no present sense of security can defer his coming. The healthy beatings of our pulse, and all the outward indications of health, are no evidence that the next moment may not usher us into the presence of our descending Judge. Those who have this hope within them, will take heed to the injunction to watch, because they do not know the day or hour of the Lord's coming. They will so live that whether the Master cometh at midnight, at cock-crowing, or in the morning, they will be found watching, so that whether they are in the field, the work-shop, the bed, or on the house-top, they may be taken, and not left. While such is the result, how can any Christian feel otherwise than disposed to cherish the hope of soon seeing the Saviour in the clouds of heaven—offering up their prayers continually for the hastening of that glorious day.—Selected.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM RUFUS WENDELL.

BELOVED EDITOR: I shall be glad if you can let my Correspondence with Prof. Mattison appear in next week's paper. Friends in Paterson, and elsewhere, are looking for it with interest. It is my purpose to bring it at an early day to the notice of the Methodist ministry in and about New York City; it may stir up some of them to the importance of looking into this great Life question more deeply than they yet have done. And if it should induce some competent man to take the place offered to Prof. M., in an open investigation of our views, we will endeavor, with the Lord's help, to use the opportunity for his glory and the good of our fellow men.

I had blessed times in Springfield the last two Sundays. Prejudice is breaking away and multitudes there are learning the precious doctrine of Life in Jesus Christ. After my afternoon's discourse, last Sunday, in the Bethel chapel, I accompanied Dr. Ames to the County Jail and spoke half an hour or more on the resurrection to over fifty prisoners. Arrangements for me to go there were made with the doctor the previous Sunday evening. The doctor has been a regular Sunday-afternoon laborer in that jail for over fourteen years; and I was pleased to find that his daughter, a young woman, is also giving herself to the same noble work.

On Tuesday evening I preached in Hartford, and am to be in that city on Sundays, April 26th and May 3d.

My project of speaking to the people of Marblehead I am obliged to abandon for the present on account of more pressing calls.

Next Sunday (22d) I am to preach in Keene, N. H., a place which I have never visited. This arrangement is brought about through Br. Ladd, and I shall enter the new field with delight. The leading brother there is Dr. H. H. Darling, to whom I have sent my subjects so that he may advertise them.

Next Monday evening I shall commence at Springfield a public discussion, in Fallon Hall, with J. G. Fish, formerly a Baptist preacher. I am to be on the affirmative, and the question to be debated is as follows: "Does the Bible teach the entire mortality of man?" The debate will continue through six successive evenings.

I am to preach in Sprinfield on the 29th, and during the week following I expect to be present at the Conference in Lowell Street Chapel, Boston.

Calls for labor on the Life theme are multiplying on every hand, and I hardly know which way to go first. I have invitations from Southington and New Britain, Ct., and from Westfield and South Ashburnham in this State.

I do not forget Wilmington, but rejoice exceedingly to learn from this week's paper that our dear Brother Grim has been there to fill my "disappointment." Thank you, Jacob; it was all right that I did not abandon my Springfield appointments, and it was also just the thing for you to get a hearing in Wilmington. I accept the whole result as a new proof that the Lord knows how to overrule all things for our good. I thank you, brother Storrs, for the warm terms in which you commend brother Grim as a laborer in the gospel field, and shall be most happy to hear that he can often bestow his labors where they are needed. I will try, however, to make no more disappointments for him to fill. May the Lord help us to be humble and faithful.

I notice what my good brother Wetherbee says about my visiting Maine the coming Summer. Liberty! we will try to know what duty is when the time comes to march to the Masters's orders.

But I am making a long note of this. God bless you, dear Brother Storrs. Pray for your sons in the gospel.

Always affectionately, R. W.
Salem, Mass., March 20, 1868.

FROM ELD. S. L. WALTER.

CENTRALIA, ILLS., March 9, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I have been proclaiming Life only in Christ; but, under restraint, as I preached for the colored Baptists. But we have succeeded in getting a hall. I pray the Lord to help me, by his Holy Spirit. I propose to show that Bible truths are the only antidote against "spiritism." I expect to get the cold shoulder from priests of immortal-soulism. They are crying out about the tendency to infidelity among the people, from light literature; and, as they call it, "no future punishment," etc. I wish to tell them, that the doctrine of inherent immortality and eternal torments has made all the infidels we have; and the want of unity in what is called "the church of God." They have their union meetings but they cannot come together; the Presbyterians, Congregationalists, etc. All of that great family of Presbyterians held a convention for two days in this city; and it was indeed painful to see the agony many of the ministers exhibited while pleading for union. They seemed as if they could and would make any sacrifice to gain union; but, alas, their conscience would not let one unite, because they all did not sing Psalms, and nothing else. Another could not give up the Westminster Confession of Faith, and the sovereignty of God, etc., to the end of the chapter. One brother thought they could not be united till they were all "baptized by the one Spirit into the One Body," which is Christ; and others thought the grand principle of union was, "love," etc. But they closed as far asunder as when they met. They thought that the separation of the Old and New School was a greater blessing, and enabled them to do more good apart than united; and yet they wanted that "blessing" removed, and to be back on old ground! I pray that the time may come when the watchman shall see eye to eye.

FROM S. S. CALL.

ELLIOTA, MINN., March 15, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Once more, I express my gratitude to God for his abundant mercy to me, in that he has seen fit to enlighten me, so that I can work by the spirit of love. O how good it is to sit and learn at Jesus' feet. I now see that I was striving about words to no profit; and the work could be hetter accomplished by gentle means. For instance, you you meet a child with its hands full of playthings; you discover some that are dangerous for it to play with; and you wish to get them from the child without offending it. Well, just present something nice, something beautiful; get the child's attention; hold out the present to him; he looks; his hands are already full; it cannot hold both; it considers a moment; drops whatever it has, and reaches out its hands and takes the present with a smiling face. "Except ye become as a little child, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."

The last week has been one of the happiest of my life. From Tuesday night till Wednesday night, it was the happiest twenty-four hours I ever witnessed. Blessed be God. Then came the reaction; eighteen hours of trial, which has proved the greater blessing of the two. The gold that is left, after the dross is removed, is all the better.

I have been holding meetings with Br. Billings, at Bluffton, Iowa, where the Lord met with us and blessed the labors, and gave the increase. Many were inquiring the way of life, and saying, I never saw it after this fashion. God bless them. We were under the necessity of stopping our meetings, for the Methodist minister; he having previously left an appointment for Wednesday evening and the remainder of the week. As soon as he has done with the house, we expect to return to them. They could hardly consent to let us leave; but we thought it best to let him present his views; then they would be better prepared to judge. Truly the work is prospering here. Br. Billings, by the way, is a self-learned man; one whom Christ has made free; and he is free indeed. He is a believer in "Life only in Christ." God bless him.

Your brother in Christ; expecting soon the LIFE-GIVER.

FROM MRS. M. DUMAY.

EAST HAMPTON, CONN., March 11, 1868.

BR. STORRS: I am a stranger to you, having never seen you. Permit me to say that I have your old original Six Sermons, on the non-immortality of the wicked, but never gave serious attention to the subject until about three years ago, when I was especially awakened to examine the Life and death question seriously. I procured all the books I could obtain that were calculated to give light on the important subject; and with the rest came Eld. Grant's "Discussion" with Jos. T. Curry on the non-resurrection of the wicked. This gave me some light and strength; but I was not satisfied. There stood positive declarations of our Saviour against the position. I so much wished and prayed for the truth, I wrote to Br. Grant, asking him to give me the address of the Bible Examiner. He replied, that it was not printed now. Alas, for any that should wish the truth of God's word should be concealed! I then concluded that if you had given up the doctrine, it was surely gone overboard. Still studying and examining to the best of my ability, I was aroused from my reverie by the sudden appearance of good old Br. H. Rockwell, strong in the faith, and to all appearance certainly ten years younger than he was two years ago. His visit to us (surrounded as we are by hell-fire Christians), was as refreshing as cold water to a thirsty soul; and I ceased to wonder why he was growing younger, when I learned from him that he was truly converted to the faith once delivered to the saints, and had become a little child again. He also told me where I could obtain the HERALD OF LIFE, and gave me your address. God bless him, and give him an abundant entrance into life eternal. Now, dear brother, if you publish the HERALD OF LIFE, will you please send me some specimen copies, with terms of subscription. I shall want some books, also; the strongest arguments and explanations; as I feel that every stumbling-block must be taken out of the way. I am poor, and have very little means to purchase books or papers; yet they are as necessary to me as my daily bread. Oh that rich Christians knew that there was a famine in the land; not a famine for bread, but for the word of God.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We have sent you what you ask, and the pamphlet "LIFE FROM THE DEAD: or the righteous only will live again." Do not be discouraged because some men will neither give you light nor let you know where to address those who will. The Lord knoweth who are pining to know the truth; and if some will not give it, and try to hide it, the Lord can and will in some way send along some good old pilgrim, like Eld. Rockwell, to open the way.

ELD. J. LEWIS, Oconee, Ill., writes: I send $1 to help publish LIFE FROM THE DEAD, and DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE, a good and noble undertaking. Let them be published by thousands. The "DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE" is the very thing we want out here, where the truth of the Bible has been perverted by false and blind guides, so that Infidelity is fast gaining ground; we see it and feel most deeply; and are resolved to do all we can to stop the current. We pledge ourself to circulate all the tracts the friends will send us, and we will send all the money we can to help keep the work a going; though, personally, we have little to spare. We are now preaching in this place, but will keep the brethren posted as to our whereabouts, so that if Brn. Osborn, Walter, or other preachers, wish to join us in our Summer campaign they may know where we are. Our Post Office address is, MODE, Ill., till further notice.

D. J. ELLSWORTH, Windsor, Conn., writes: I heartily join with you and the brethren in the effort to spread the glorious truths contained in the proposed tracts of "LIFE FROM THE DEAD" and the "DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE." Let us scatter them with a liberal hand. I send herewith $4 to be equally divided in publishing them.

MRS. D. O. HOPKINS, North Foster, R. I., writes: Two have come out decided that the wicked dead will live no more forever; and others are looking at the question. My husband, after long searching, has come out on the blessed truth, and intends to preach it as the door is opened. There is much prejudice, and some turn the cold shoulder and almost disfellowship him; but others are anxious to hear.

G. L. HART, New Britain, Conn., writes: Truth needs to be sustained by all lovers of Jesus, and I am established in the doctrine of Life from the dead only to believers: therefore the HERALD OF LIFE is a welcome visitor.

I have been led to examine the subject of a personal spirit devil, and think we may be able to learn where to look for the enemy of righteousness; and by so doing know where to establish a basis of action against his stronghold. But his empire has almost ended. The dominion of sin and death is almost over. Victory is at the resurrection of the just, when Jesus shall deliver the kingdom from all that sin hath wrought, and the first dominion restored. May it be my lot to have an inheritance with all the saved.

GEO. W. RUST, Washington, N. Y., writes: Having a new subscriber for the HERALD OF LIFE, I take occasion to say, in our part of the country the people seem to care very little about the things that are coming to pass. I like the paper very much, as in it I get all the preaching that I approve; for our orthodox churches have so much "Immortal soul," and "going to heaven at death" that I am not edified; but I suppose they are honest in their belief, and I must have charity.

JOSEPH L. SEWALL, Rockport, Mass., writes: The HERALD is more precious than ever to me. I am spreading it over the town, and it is beginning to take root. I shall send some money as soon as I can get it. I trust the good Lord will give me some chance to get it soon. There has never been an Advent sermon on the Cape for seventeen years: this is during my sojourn here; and I know not that there ever was one. I have been alone until the last year; but now, thank the Lord, there are four strong in the faith of "No life out of Christ."

ELD. S. L. WALTER writes from Lebanon, Ill., under date of March 16th: I left Centralia on the 14th. I like the proposition to print LIFE FROM THE DEAD and also the DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE. I am sure it will result in great good to many that cannot be reached in any other way; and in them they have all their objections answered, leaving them without any foundation to stand on, because they clear away the refuges where they rest. I am rejoiced to see the friends of truth, and of man, respond so cheerfully to the call for the one thing needful to keep the press in motion. God loves a cheerful giver. My post office is still Hornsby, Ill. Anything sent there I will get. I shall write again soon and let you know how the work is getting along, and the result of the glorious truth "No immortality out of Christ," etc.

ROSWELL HART, Plainville, Conn., writes: I am glad that your pamphlet, LIFE FROM THE DEAD, is issued in the cheap form. I think no one can read that work without acknowledging it may be the truth. I am satisfied the righteous only will have life from the dead. "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. I will ransom them from the power of the grave." So then all that are in Christ will live again. "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God." Amen. I send $1, for the work. Send me ten copies. The remainder do with as you please.

MRS. LOUISA J. BEACH, New Britain, Conn., writes: I am glad to know that the DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE is to be published for circulation. It is what is needed. I have read it with much interest, and the Convention has been very vividly brought up to mind, having been present most of the time. There was a signal triumph on the side of truth; and error never looked so contemptible, nor its votaries more crest-fallen. It seemed as if you and Br. T. were inspired of God, and these words often ran through my mind, "He spake as one that had authority, and not as the Scribes."

I send $1 toward defraying the expenses of publication, and am sorry I am not able to do more.

MRS. HELEN E. WALKER, Hyannis, Mass., writes: Having been much interested and benefitted in reading your works, especially the one entitled LIFE FROM THE DEAD, I am very glad it is to be furnished so cheap for circulation. I think it is just the work needed. Enclosed find one dollar for printing the same. Send me as many as the money will pay for, after deducting the postage. I will try to get as many to read the work as I can in this place, where Universalism and Spiritualism prevail to an alarming extent. Hoping you may be blessed with health and strength, I remain your sister, hoping for life through Christ.

S. D. MORSE wishes us to say his address is "No. 3 Print Works Corporation, Manchester, N. H."

THE DISCOVERIES IN JERUSALEM.

The London Times publishes an interesting letter in regard to the discoveries in progress at Jerusalem, from which we select the following:

The collossal foundations of the temple wall, which are "stones of ten cubits and stones of eight cubits," laid by Solomon, are now being laid bare at the enormous depth of ninety feet and more beneath the present surface. The bridge that once spanned the ravine between the palace on Zion and the temple on Moriah, is now proved to have been upward of one hundred and fifty feet high. If this be, as it seems, the ascent to the house of the Lord which Solomon showed to the Queen of Sheba, we cannot wonder that on seeing it there was no more spirit in her. The pinnacle of the temple on which the tempter placed the Saviour, has just been uncovered to the base, and is found still to have an elevation of 136 feet. The statement of Josephus is therefore no exaggeration. "If any one looked from the battlements into the valley he would be giddy, while his sight could not reach to such an immense depth." Sections of the ancient wall of Ophel have been exhumed, showing that, as Josephus says, it was joined to the south-east angle of the temple. Aqueducts, cisterns, rock-hewn channels and passages, have also been discovered within and around the harem, throwing new light on the buildings, the arrangements, and the services of the temple.

The great work of a complete exploration of ancient Jerusalem is thus fairly and auspiciously commenced. The opportune visit of the Sultan and Grand Vizier to this country, and the representations made to the latter by the Archbishop of York, followed up as they have been by the energy, the wisdom and tact of Lieutenant Warren and his admirable staff, have smoothed down Moslem prejudice, removed local opposition, and thus brought about opportunities for excavation and exploration such as never occurred before; and beside, large numbers of Arab laborers have been trained to the work and are eager to be employed; and the exact points for successful exploration are now well known.

OBITUARY.

ON Thursday evening, Feb. 6, 1868, Sister ANNIE MARTIN, wife of Elder Joseph BURKEITT, at her residence in Blackwoodtown, N. J., resignedly "fell asleep in Jesus," full of faith in a joyful resurrection with the righteous, at "the last day."

Sister B. had long been in a suffering condition of health, and her complaint (consumption) was of that nature to array her mind to meet the "King of terrors" with the faith of Christ's promise, that the law of Life would be revived; and that she would, again, meet her beloved husband and the saints at the "General Assembly of the Church of the First Born." Truly, we can say of our sister, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth." And her husband, Bro. Joseph, mourneth not as those "which have no hope." B.

"NOT DEAD, BUT SLEEPETH."

FELL ASLEEP, in Westford, Mass., on the 13th of March, 4 o'clock P. M., Sister BELINDA S., wife of Elder JOHN CRAIG, aged 54 years and 6 months. The most direct cause of Sister Craig's present sleep, was a rose (or stone) cancer, from which she has been suffering the past eight years. The last three years her suffering has been beyond what we might suppose human nature was able to endure. Said one, who was with her and administered to her wants, "She was the greatest sufferer I have ever seen; and, also, the most patient." In all these sufferings the love of God, shed abroad in the heart, enabled her to triumph over the ills of the flesh, and rejoice in the spirit. She was wholly resigned to sleep, and was joyous in her last wakeful moments. When asked, just before she slept, if Jesus was precious? Do you love Jesus? Do you feel that he loves you? She answered all in the affirmative; and when the tongue could no longer do its office, other manifestations gave the same comforting assurance that she now sleeps in Christ; soon, soon to awake at the morning call; and, under the direction and protection of our great LIFE-GIVER, share with the saints of all ages the purity and the happiness of triumphant immortality, over all adverse powers; and that, without end. Sermon by Br. Isaac Newton, from 1 Thess. iv., 18. "Asleep in Jesus; blessed sleep, from which none ever wake to weep."

Those who have had the privilege, and have felt the justification of the Spirit in administering to the comfort of this sleeping sister, will rejoice to be able to speak or write to, or pray for our much-afflicted brother and his family in this time of deep trial. Please read the kind instruction of the Master, and the condition, as given in Matt. vii., 7–12; and we shall the more readily bear each others burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ.

Will the Voice of the West and the Herald of the Bridegroom please copy, and send a paper containing the same to Br. Craig, Westford, Mass.

Poetry.

The Soul.

It is the being made of clay,
God calls a living soul,
And not the breath he takes away,
But Adam as a whole.

The soul is not an entity,
When mortals droop and die,
That soars above with God to be,
With angels in the sky.

The soul is not immortal, no:
That sinks to conscious wo,
When sinners drop this mortal coil,
To fiery realms below.

The soul is the entire man,
The Bible do declare,
Turn read the record, there you find
The truth is written there.

O, hasten sinner, to the Lord,
Fly quick to Jesus, fly:
Read what is written in God's word,
The soul that sins shall die.

A Highland Snow Storm.

THE WIDOW AND HER SON.

A widow who, I have heard, was much loved for her "meek and quiet spirit," left her home in the parish early one morning, in order to reach before evening the residence of a kinsman who had promised to assist her to pay her rent. She carried on her back her only child. The mountain track she pursued passes along the shore of a beautiful salt-water loch; then through a green valley watered by a peaceful stream which flows from a neighboring lake. It afterwards winds along the margin of this solitary lake until, near its further end, it suddenly turns into an extensive copse of wood, oak and birch. From this it emerges half-way up a rugged mountain side; and, entering a dark glen through which a torrent rushes amid great masses of granite, it conducts the traveller at last by a zig-zag assent up to a narrow gorge, which is hemmed in upon every side by giant precipices, with a strip of blue sky overhead, all below being dark and gloomy.

From this mountain pass the widow's dwellings was ten miles distant. She had undertaken a long journey, but her rent was some weeks overdue, and the subfactor had threatened to dispossess her.

The morning on which she had left her home gave promise of a peaceful day. Before noon, however, a sudden change took place in the weather. To the northward the sky became black and lowering. Masses of clouds fell down upon the hills. Suddenly gusts of wind began to whistle among the rocks, and with black squalls to ruffle the surface of the lake. The wind was succeeded by rain, and the rain by sleet, and the sleet by a heavy fall of snow. It was the month of May, and that storm is yet remembered as the "great May storm." The wildest day in Winter never saw snow fall faster, or whirling with more fury through the mountain pass, filling every hollow and whitening every rock.

Little anxiety about the widow was felt by the villagers, as many ways were pointed out by which she might have escaped from the fury of the storm. She could have halted at the steading of this farm, or the shieling of that shepherd, before it had become dangerous to cross the hill. But early in the morning of the succeeding day they were alarmed to hear from a person who had come from the place to which the widow was travelling, that she had not made her appearance there.

In a short time about a dozen mustered to search for the missing woman. At each house on the track they heard with increasing fear that she had been seen pursuing her journey the day before. The shepherd on the mountain could give no information concerning her. Beyond his hut there was no shelter; nothing but deep snow; and between the range of rocks, the summit of the pass, the drift lay thickest. There the storm must have blown with a fierce and bitter blast. It was by no means an easy task to examine the deep wreaths which filled up every hollow. At last a cry from one of the seachers attracted the rest, and there crouched beneath a huge granite boulder they discovered the dead body of the widow.

She was entombed by the snow. A portion of the tartan cloak which appeared above its surface led to her discovery. But what had become of the child? Nay, what had become of the widow's clothes? for all were gone except the miserable tattered garment which covered her nakedness. That she had been murdered and stripped, was the first conjecture suggested by the strange discovery. But being in a country in which only one murder had occurred within the memory of man, the notion was soon dismissed from their thoughts. She had evidently died where she sat, bent almost double; but as yet all was mystery as to her boy and her clothing. Very soon, however, the mystery was cleared up. A shepherd found the boy alive in a sheltered nook in the rock, very near the spot where his mother sat cold and stiff in death. He lay in a bed of heather and fern, and round him were swathed all the clothes which the mother had stripped off herself to save her child! The story of her self-sacrificing love was easily read.

The incident lived fresh in the memory of many in the parish; and the old people who were present in the empty hut of the widow when her body was laid in it, never forgot the minister's address and prayers as they stood beside the dead. He was hardly able to speak for tears, as he endeavored to express his sense of that woman's worth and love, and to pray for her poor orphan boy.

More than fifty years had passed way when the oldest son of "the manse," then old and gray headed, went to preach to his Highland congregation in Glasgow, on the Sunday previous to that on which the Lord's supper was to be dispened. He found a comparatively small congregation assembled, for snow was falling heavily and threatened to continue all day. Suddenly he recalled the story of the widow and her son, and this again recalled to his memory the text, "He shall be as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." He resolved to address his people from these words, although he had carefully prepared a sermon on another subject.

In the course of his remarks he narrated the circumstances of the death of the Highland widow, whom he had himself known in his boyhood. And having done so, he asked, "If that child was now alive, what would he think of his heart if it did not cherish an affection for his mother's memory? And what would you think of him if the sight of her clothes, which she had wrapped around him to save his life at the cost of her own, did not touch his heart with gratitude and love too deep for words? Yet what hearts have you, my friends, if, over the memorials of your Saviour's sacrifice of himself, which you are to witness next Sunday, you do not feel them glow with deepest love and with adoring gratitude?"

Some time after this a messenger was sent by a dying man with a request to see the minister. This was speedily complied with. The sick man seized him by the hand, and as he seated himself beside the bed, and gazing intently in his face, said, "Sir, you do not, cannot recognize me. But I know you and knew your father before you. I have been a wanderer in many lands. I have visited every quarter of the globe, and have fought and bled for my king and country. But while serving my king I forgot my God. Though I have been some years in this city, I never entered a church. But the other Sunday as I was walking along the street I happened to pass your church door when a heavy shower of snow came on, and I entered the lobby for shelter, but I am ashamed to say, not with the intention of worshipping God, or of hearing a sermon. But as I heard the singing of psalms, I went into a seat near the door; then you preached and I heard you tell of the widow and her son." Here the voice of the old soldier faltered, his emotion almost choking his utterance; but recovering himself for a moment, he cried, "I am that son!" and burst into a flood of tears. "Yes," he continued, "I am that son! Never did I forget my mother's love. Well might you ask what a heart would mine have been if she had been forgotten by me! Though I never saw her; dear to me is her memory, and my only desire now is to lay my bones beside hers in the old churchyard among the hills. But, sir, what breaks my heart and covers me with shame is this—that I never saw the love of Christ in giving himself for me—a poor, lost, hell-deserving sinner. I confess it!" he cried, looking up to heaven, his eyes streaming with tears. Then pressing the minister's hand close to his heart, he added, "It was God made you tell that story. Praise be to his holy name, that my dear mother did not die in vain, and that the prayers which I was told she used to offer for me have been at last answered; for the love of my mother has been blessed by the Holy Spirit for making me see as I never saw before the love of my Saviour. I see it! I believe it! I have found deliverance now where I found it in my childhood—in the cleft of the rock—the Rock of Ages!" and, clasping his hands, he repeated with intense fervor, "Can a mother forget her sucking child, that she could not have compassion on the son of her womb? She may forget; yet will I not forget thee!". He died in peace.—Reminiscences of a Highland Parish. By Norman McLeod, D. D.

Will the Wicked Dead Lvie Again?

We think Christ's answer to the Sadducees should forever settle this question. See this subject as recorded by Matt. xxii., 23–32; Mark xii., 18–27: Luke xx., 27–38. Here are two classes spoken of; one to whom Abraham, Isaac and Jacob belong; whom God calls himself "their God;" and another class styled "the dead," whom Christ says he is not the God of. To this class Paul refers as being "without God and without hope in the world." Job, also, we think, has these two classes in view in chap. xiv.

The truthfulness of the doctrine of the resurrection is based on the fact of their recognition by God; and they are spoken of as alive (being such in his purpose) although dead. This declaration, "I am the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob," demonstrates, or establishes, rather, the certainty of their being raised to life again; does it not? Yes. As conclusively does the assertion of Christ, "he is not the God of the dead, but of the living," declare and make sure the eternal sleep of the wicked dead; and an additional proof is found in the Saviour's words, "for all live unto him." All who? Evidently all who live again—all God's people. The connection, we think allows no other meaning. Br. W., in his Salem discussion last Winter with Br. P., brought out this subject in a most forcible light, and we think a sermon from him in the Herald of Life on the above Scripture would be "meet in due season."

Were it not that tradition has made the penalty for sin one of malevolence, instead of a necessity and merciful provision under the circumstances, (a loss forever of a life, the tendency of which would be only evil), it seems to me men could not fail to see that Jesus' coming the first time was not to aggravate, or change the Divine penalty, "dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou return;" but to give life in a higher, nobler way, and to man only as an agent, a creature of volition, and as a gift for his acceptance. This doctrine is so fully taught by Jesus, we say, were it not for tradition and the blinding effects of sin, all would most heartily receive it. How beautiful, how harmonious is God's plan in Eden, and Christ's plan with man in exile. As man is related to the one or the other so will be his future condition. Having a blood connection with Adam the first, a believer dies not as a sinner condemned; but as a necessity of this relationship; yet being justified by faith in Christ (i. e., free from condemnation) he is entitled to a life through, or by Christ; hence is raised up again; not as he fell in the first Adam, which life has had its purpose accomplished, which was to bring him to Christ the second Adam, in whom he lives as his son, having the angelical, divine, or immortal nature; which may we all attain to through Jesus our Life-giver.

Persecution—Rev. xiv., 6–12.

"And I saw another angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth; and to every nation, kindred tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, 'Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.'"

What a grand, and striking fulfilment has this passage had in the great Advent movement (so called) that has been going on for the last twenty five years.

The language, the movement, the earnestness, the extent, all, every jot and tittle, so completely acted, and acting out. What next? "And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her persecution." Has this been fulfilled? If so, where, and when? What is Babylon? "I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast full of names of blasphemy." (Rev. xvii., 3). "And upon her forehead was a name written Mystery, Babylon the great." . . . "The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth." "And the woman which thou sawest, is that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth." (Rev. xvii). These quotations show what Babylon is, viz.—the church, or hierarchy of Rome. But has it fallen? No, indeed. Though its fall is evidently very near, and the whole religious world, as well as others, are watching with eager interest the progress of events connected with its unavoidable fate. Its fall has not come. When it does come, we learn from this prophecy, it will occasion a mighty stir, and the startling fact will be proclaimed in loud and earnest tones, by unnumbered voices, throughout the world. Close behind the retreating form of the second messenger appears another, who, with a loud voice, gives utterance to one of the most terrific threats recorded in the book of God. "If any man worship the beast, and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name." What is the occasion of this awful threatening? Why, the two-horned beast has arisen, deceived the earth with his wonders, got an image made to the first beast, given life to the image, which has now spoken and caused that all who will not worship it shall be killed, and God, seeing that the church, after their long season of prosperity and quiet, are poorly prepared to meet the terrible emergency, sends forth a class of servants to make known the dreadful consequences of yielding to the impious demands and blasphemous threats of this hellish power. And then, while many, to save their lives by complying, will eternally lose them, and others, by the help of God's blessed Spirit stand up for Jesus, and his precious truth, and love not their lives unto death, and so save them unto life eternal; the body of the church will, by the help of the great eagle's wings (chap. xii., 14) fly away into the wilderness, and escape the devil's wrath. And there, in the midst of these scenes of danger, trial and death, will be fulfilled the concluding word of this particular part of the great drama. "Here is the patience of the saints. Here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."

I could say much more on this, to me, deeply interesting subject; but these few, brief and imperfectly-expressed thoughts must suffice for the present. If I am mistaken it will soon be known, but if not, what a day awaits us, and what need there is that we examine the foundation of our faith and hope, and see that it is on the rock, that we may abide the storm, and if necessary be ready to lose our lives for Christ's and the gospel's sake, that we may find them unto life eternal. Amen.

C. L. Percival.

Massawippi, P. Q., March 8, 1868.

Remarks by the Editor.—We are still compelled to say, as we said twenty years ago, that the angel's messages, of Rev. xiv. 6–12, belonged not to the advent movement of the present century; but that they commenced with the "Reformation" under Luther and his fellow-laborers, and continued onward till the papal worshippers were brought into a state of torment described Rev. xiv., 10, 11; which torment will not be removed till its final overthrow and perdition; but, just prior to her final catastrophe she will fancy herself sitting as a queen, riding on the scarlet-colored beast (the Napoleon dynasty), but is in reality going to her final destruction; on the very verge of which she now is. But time will soon determine these matters. Let us continue to proclaim life through Christ, and be looking for him "from heaven;" so shall we be ready for whatever we may be called to pass through; for God's grace is sufficient for us. Let us not burden ourselves, to-day, about trials that may come to-morrow, or may never come at all.

Dr. Chalmers and his Visitor.—While very busily engaged one forenoon in his study, a man entered, who at once propitiated him under the provocation of an unexpected interruption by telling him that he called under distress of mind. "Sit down, sir; be good enough to be seated," said Dr. Chalmers, turning eagerly and full of interest from his writing-table. The visitor explained to him that he was troubled with doubts about the divine origin of the Christian religion; and, being kindly questioned as to what these were, he gave among others what is said in the Bible about Melchizedek being without father and without mother, etc. Patiently and anxiously Dr. Chalmers sought to clear away each successive difficulty as it was stated. Expressing himself as if greatly relieved in mind, and imagining that he had gained his end, "Doctor," said the visitor, "I am in great want of a little money at present, and perhaps you could help me in that way." At once the object of his visit was seen. A perfect tornado of indignation burst upon the deceiver, driving him in very quick retreat from the study to the street-door, these words escaping among others: "Not a penny, sir; not a penny. It is too bad, it is too bad; and to haul in your hypocrisy upon the shoulders of Melchizedek!"—Selected.

Extemporary Preaching.—A minister says, I wished to abandon the practice of reading my sermons, and adopt that of preaching them extemporarily; but being nervous and having a profound distrust of myself, and fearing that I should make a mortifying failure, I opened the Bible at the first chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel, and announced to the congregation that it was my intention in a series of discourses to expound continuously the whole of that gospel. I was sure that I should have something to say upon every paragraph, and that I would be able to say it; and I trusted that as from Sabbath to Sabbath I went on, I should require less and less of the text for my half hour's expository sermon. I was not disappointed. Before I got through St. Matthew's Gospel, I found myself able to preach from no more verses than I should have chosen for one of my written sermons. And now although I have no natural aptitude for speaking, I can preach extemporarily as clearly and accurately as I can write, and with much greater acceptance and power. My brother, would it not be well if you should try to do the same thing—exchange sermon reading, for sermon preaching?

If parents spoil their children by indulgence it is not because they love, but because their love is not balanced and directed by reason. God loves us too wisely and too well to carry us forever in his arms, and caress us into helplessness, humoring every mood and gratifying every desire of our childish minds. He loves us too wisely and too well to make the world a great play-house for our amusement, a banquet-hall for our feasting, or a couch for our indolent repose. The very hardships, trials, sorrows and griefs of life are all parts of the perfect system of training by which he is fitting us for a joy and glory otherwise impossible. Just as the wind and storm, the burning sun, and the blighting frost and the pinching drought drive the roots of the oak deeper down and further out into the tough soil to draw up richer substance and build a fibre and a nobler stock, so the hardships and adversities of life, the bleak days, and blasts of evil, are the methods which infinite love adopts to make souls of the noblest pattern.

The past winter has been one of the severest ever known, both in this and other countries In Algiers the suffering has been very great. In Russia, as we learn from a letter in a Paris paper, the cold was intense. Coachmen were frozen upon their seats, the gas refused to burn, and the dogs howled most piteously. Men on horseback went through the streets of St. Petersburg and Moscow, carrying aid to the unfortunate, and the nobility distributed hot tea in front of their palaces.

Letters and Extracts.

From Samuel Brown.

Milwaukee, Wis., March 10, 1868.

Br. Storrs: In the last number of the Herald of Life I saw an artcle from the pen of "W. M.," in relation to publishing the "Defence of the Bible" in pamphlet form, for distribution. He says, he has read it three times. I can say that I have read it more times than that, and every time it is more interesting. I thought, while reading it this last time, if we could have it as a tract to circulate, how much good there might be done. Every thought uttered in those few lines, by that brother, had revolved in my mind; but I did not know that any other heart was in unison with mine on the subject. When I read that, I could wait no longer. I turned to my desk and said, I must second that motion. Now can we not raise enough to get it out in tract or pamphlet form, and have thousands of them circulated? I will give five dollars; if that is not enough, I will give ten. If there are any more who feel in the same way, speak out, and let it be known.

I should like to see a part or the whole of Joseph Barker's letter of recantation from infidelity, to Christ the Saviour of lost men; for I think he received the death blow to his infidelity at that time when God enabled you to defend his word. Truly God's eternal truth is a sword that cuts both ways; and infidelity cannot stand against it, only as it stands off, and lets it alone. If it comes in contact with it, it is swept as with the besom of destruction. It may stand off, like the uncircumcised Philistine, and defy the armies of the living God; but when they dare come out, and meet the stripling with five smooth stones from the brook, with his sling, which is the word of God, he receives a deadly wound between the joints of his harness, and falls. He may not, like the Philistine, have his head cut off at once: but he receives a wound that is fatal; he can never recover, unless he flees to Jesus, the Life-giver; otherwise he perishes like the uncircumcised Philistine. So with all God's enemies, they must come to Christ or perish. Who would have it otherwise if they could? We would like to see all men come to Christ and receive everlasting life: but if they will not, then the next best wish for them is, that they may perish.

From Albert J. Hart.

Unionville, Conn., March 15, 1868.

Br. Storrs: My father and his sons are, and have been firm believers in the "No life out of Christ" doctrine for some three years, and we feel interested in gaining all the information we can upon this subject. Father has taken your paper for some time, and kindly lends it to me after reading it himself. We have no preaching except the paper, and the good old Bible; but having studied to know the tuth, we feel confident that we can vindicate this blessed truth, "Life from the dead only through Christ."

I wish to inquire of my brethren (believing in a mortal resurrection) if Christ did not suffer the penalty of the law in order to redeem those that believed on him? Nearly every Adventist will admit this to be a fact. Well then, if this be a fact, please tell me where I can find the account of Christ's dying, being raised again, then dying the second time, and again being raised from the dead? This he must have done if the penalty of the law is to die the Adamic death, then to have a mortal resurrection, then to suffer the second death, and after that to be raised to immortality.

To Br. Wm. H. Fisher, Windsor, Conn. (a late convert to our Life views.) Dear Brother: Your notice of us in the Herald of Life some time since, is the occasion of this letter; not that we felt grieved by your hasty remarks, for we thought little of them at the time, and they soon went from us no more to be thought of; we feel thankful that you have been led to see your error and embrace the truth on the Life theme. Let your experience on this, as well as on other kindred subjects, lead you to be suspicious of your judgment, and also to exercise a feeling of forbearance toward others of a different faith. It does seem as if our Advent brethren had an experience sufficient to make them the most long-suffering and charitable of any: for many have been the cherished views we have been led to relinquish for others more in harmony with the living Word. While we justify our course by the prophecy, "Knowledge shall be increased," let us remember we are not yet at the end of the Book; and we should still keep the teachable spirit, not only to learn for ourselves, but that we may properly instruct the ignorant. As we are never forced into truth, so we should never drive others, but with all meekness and forbearance of love show them the beauty and loveliness of the truth which we defend. Avoid, my brother, the two extremes of thrusting the truth into every one's face, casting pearls before swine, or of putting your light under a bushel. If any class need the wisdom of a serpent coupled with the harmlessness of the dove, it is those who lead in reforms. How ready are opposers to catch at straws. Yes, and those, too, are in the house of our friends! How important, then, that our position should be fortified by a blameless life; that our stand-point in grace should equal that in knowledge; then shall we not fail of success, though we may have to suffer many things, and have a great trial of our faith and patience. That you may thus abound in the knowledge and grace of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord, ever prays your brother,

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post. D. D., St. Louis, Mo. Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"They which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead . . . are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

AN EVIL INFLUENCE.

WHAT is it that has an evil infinence? We answer—The common theory of inherent immortality, and of endless being in sin and suffering.

It sustains the mischievous practice of mystifying, or making the Scriptures to have a secret, or hidden meaning, in the plainest texts.

This mischievous practice was brought into the church almost as soon as the apostles had left the world. The converts from heathenism seemed intent on uniting heathen philiosophy with Christianity. Hence they must find an abundance of mysteries in the Scriptures; and the practice of allegorizing, i. e., making the language to contain something that does not appear in the words, commenced, and generally prevailed, before the third century. This was done, doubtless, with a view to lead heathen philosophers to embrace Christianity, as affording them a fruitful field for their researches. But it led the church astray into the wild fields of conjecture, and every lively imagination could find hidden wonders in the Bible, while the plain literal meaning of the text was disregarded. That fatal practice increased from age to age, till the simplicity of the gospel was totally eclipsed, and the obscuration has not wholly disappeared to this day.

This practice has given occasion to honest people, as well as to infidels, to say, "You can make anything out of the Bible," or "play any tune upon it." And this is true, if men are to be allowed to take texts which have a plain, obvious, and literal signification, and call them mystical or figurative, when there is not a clear necessity for doing so. The Scriptures themselves often notify us when the language is to be understood figuratively; and frequently those figures are explained, and the literal interpretation given.

The common method of making the terms life and death mystical, or figurative, i. e., to mean something more, and far different from what appears in the literal and obvious signification of the words, we conceive is unwarranted by the Scriptures, and tends only to throw confusion upon the plainest subjects of the Bible, and also to take away the force and beauty of very many otherwise clear and intelligible portions of God's word.

Let us call your attention to texts, the beauty and force of which are greatly weakened and obscured by such a course.

Deut. xxx., 15, "I have set life and death before you, therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live." Again, Ps. xvi., 11, "Thou wilt show me the path of life; in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore."

Now let us contemplate some portions of the New Testament, in view of the theory we oppose, and the one we advocate, and see on which they have most force and the clearest meaning. Look at the young man who came to our Saviour with an important inquiry, Math. xix., 16—What does he say? Is it his inquiry, "What shall I do to escape endless misery or suffering?" No, but, "What shall I do that I may have eternal life?" How plain the question, on the theory we advocate, and how appropriate the answer, "If thou wilt enter into life," etc. Not—if thou wilt escape endless life in torments—not, if thou wilt have a "happy eternal life," but simply If thou wilt enter into life. What simplicity, beauty and force! all is natural and easy to be understood.

Again, John iii., 15, 16, "That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." All here, again, is natural, easy and forcible, on the theory that the wicked are actually to die or perish, if found rejecting Christ, who only has eternal life to give. But on the theory we oppse, we must have a whole sermon to explain the meaning of the term perish, and make it appear that it does not mean "extinction of being," but eternal life in sin and misery! We once heard a doctor of divinity in New York preach a whole sermon on that one point; and that, too, after he had admitted that the primary meaning of the term is "extinction of being." It seems to us it is taking quite too much pains to make obscure the meaning of a word, that of itself is easy to be understood.

In the same chapter, at the 36th verse, it is said, "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." He is already condemned to death, and is dying; eternal life is offered in the Son of God; he that will not accept it, through him, shall not possess life, but the wrath of God shall abide on him to the full execution of the penalty, which is "death, the wages of sin."

John v., 3,9 40: "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they that testify of me; and ye will not come to me that ye might have life."

They were looking, not for eternal happiness merely, or an escape from eteanal torments, but for eternal life. Yet when the only physician who could give that priceless blessing calls them to come to him for it, they would not come, and, as a matter of course, they are not saved "from death." Look at the following texts, John vi: "Labor for the meat that endureth unto everlasting life. For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. I am the bread of life. And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life. He that believeth on me hath everlasting life. I am that bread of life. This is that bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die. If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever. The words I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life. Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life."

That simple life and death are put in opposition, or clearly implied in these texts, is too plain not to be seen by any person of common attention. "Not die—eternal life." Now, a man shall "not die," if the theory we oppose is true, whether he come to Christ or not, and it would have been just as easy to have expressed the doctrine of eternal being in sin and suffering by unequivocal language, as in that, the literal interpretation of which must necessarily lead astray, if that doctrine be true.

Again, John viii., 12, "He thatfolloweth me shall have the light of life." And at the 51st verse, "If a man keep my sayings he shall never see death." Again, in chapter x., "I am come that ye might have life. My sheep hear my voice . . . . and they follow me, and I give unto them eternal life—and they shall never perish," etc. Does not this language clearly imply that those who do not follow Christ will perish? Yes, says the objector, their happiness will perish! But we ask if such an interpretation is not forced and unnatural? Our Saviour says no such thing. Perish is put in opposition to life. By the simple and natural meaning of the terms there is great beauty and force in the language. Besides, to admit of a departure from the literal meaning of the term perish, throws us into the regions of uncertainty; and if one man may say it means his happiness shall perish, another may say it means his sins shall perish, and so on. But if it signifies simply what the word imports—a destruction of being—then his happiness and his sins perish with him, as a matter of course, and there is no obscurity about it.

Again, John xi., 25, 26, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." How forcible and full of power are these words, literally understood! But say to die means loss of happiness, though the person still lives, and you at once strip the expression of our Lord of the energy which it possesses in its plain and obvious meaning.

Again, John xiv., 6—"I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me."

Also, Rom. v. 17—"If by one man's offence death reigned by one, much more they which receive abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteousness, shall reign in life by one Jesus Christ; therefore, as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation [i.e., unto death], even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men [i. e., in its offer], unto justification of life. That as sin hath reigned unto death [i. e, unto condemnation to death], even so might grace reign, through righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord."

That the death spoken of here is a literal death, the context clearly shows; it was that death that came into the world by one man's sin (verse 12), and which "reigned from Adam to Moses, even over those that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression;" (verse 14.) If, then, the death is literal, so is the life offered and promised; and that life is only to be obtained "through righteousness," or becoming righteous, and by "Jesus Christ."

Now look at such expressions as the following: "The crown of life—The word of life—The grace of life. He that hath the Son hath life—he that hath not the Son of God hath not life—The water of life—Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life. This do and thou shalt live. Because I live ye shall live also. We shall also live with him. Be in subjection unto the Father of spirits and live. God sent his Son that we might live through him. If one died for all, then were all dead," i. e., dying, doomed to die; as the body is dead because of sin, i. e., doomed to die, though not yet actually dead. "Who died for us, that we should live together with him." These, and a multitude of other texts of Scripture, all speak in p'ain and unequivocal language, if the view we take of the final destiny of the wicked is correct; otherwise, and if figurative, the imagination must be employed to explain them, and then we find ourselves let loose in the wild fields of fancy; and who shall decide where we shall stop?

Say we not truly, then, when we say that a theory which converts these, and many other plain texts of Scripture, into mere figures of speech, is evil in its influence? Truly, it is "evil, and only evil, and that continually." May the Lord enable us to hold fast to "the form of sound words," and not suffer our minds to be perverted by the traditions of men any more.

DISHONORING GOD.

ANY theory or system of teaching which presents the character of God in any other light than that of its infinite loveliness, greatly dishonors him. When, therefore, any preacher labors in his public ministrations to make most prominent of all things else the assured fact that God delights in pouring his vindictive wrath on the heads of his enemies, by so doing he dishonors God, by so misrepresenting his character as to make it appear altogether unlovely.

This train of thought was enforced upon my mind a few evenings since while listening to a sermon preached in New York Cityby an Advent preacher. So far as his sermon was concerned, no one would know that he saw anything in the least degree lovely in the character of God. So far from it, one would suppose that he only saw God as a severe, relentless tyrant, bent on making a most sublime display of his divine indignation, and then laughing in malignant glee over the dire calamities that had fallen on the unsheltered heads of the incorrigible. That God will vindicate the justice of his own law by visiting its penalty on the sinner, no one ought to deny. But that he will derive pleasure from such infliction of divine penalty, is plainly in contradiction of his own word. God has made a most positive assertion that "As surely as I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." Consequently, God does not laugh at the calamity of the finally lost in the sense of rejoicing over their awful doom. Every vindication of divine justice must also demonstrate the truthfulness of the assertion of the inspired John that "God is love," else God's justice and his mercy are antagonistic. Whenever we hold a theory that makes two of God's attributes to be at war with each other, that theory must be wrong, or God is not God. To suppose that the infinite God can take delight in the bare abstract of suffering, is to suppose him to be an infinite fiend, wholly divested of love and mercy.

That God's mercy and goodness are as much concerned in the penal sanctions of his law as his justice, the Scriptures plainly assert. While "justice and judgment are the habitation of his throne," it is just as certainly true that "mercy and truth shall go before his face." While it is true that none can break his law with impunity, it is also just as true that "The Lord is gracious, and full of compassion, slow to anger, and of great mercy." It is true that God has executed judgment on nations and peoples in the past, but still "his mercy endureth forever." It is true that he "overthrew Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea;" that he "smote great kings," and "slew famous kings," still "his mercy endureth forever." And in these identical acts, while he vindicates his justice, he displays his mercy and demonstrates his love. These nations had so corrupted themselves in sin that the best that could possibly be done for them was to let them pass into death. It is true that there is a solemn day in the future, when an entire race of men shall, at the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, perish in the fires of the last day. But in this last act of executive judgment, God will not only vindicate his justice, but he will also display his infinite mercy. Those rebels against his government, having failed to secure an incorruptible life, are left to the direct tendencies of a corruptible nature, and therefore must perish. And it is a mercy to let them perish. If they were taken into the kingdom of God, they would be most terribly miserable. Surely, if the Jews could not look on the face of Moses when it reflected a little of the glory of God, and if when barely an angel visited the earth to give instructions to Daniel, a great quaking fell on the men who were with him, so that they ran and hid themselves, and the godly Daniel fell, with his strength entirely exhausted, his comeliness turned in him to corruption, in an almost deathlike sleep on his face upon the ground; if barely the glory that surrounded the angel when he came down to roll the stone away from the mouth of the sepulchre caused the keepers to shake and become as dead men; if these slight manifestations of the glory of God have produced such wonderful effects, what horror must seize on the heart of any mortal who should be made to dwell in an earth filled with the glory of God; to be placed where he would be compelled to look on the face of God's anointed, where he sits enthroned, not only in his own glory, but in the glory of his Father and the holy angels. Surely no mortal can ever live in the presence of such glory, and for God to take the impenitent into the coming kingdom would be only to force upon them a more cruel death than to let them pass away in the fires of the last day, with all things else that are corruptible. Thus, when the "appointed" time shall come for the renewing of the earth, the establishing of the kingdom of God, it will be a great mercy to all men unprepared for an endless life to be left to perish in the general doom of all things corruptible. Amen. S. W. BISHOP.

RESPONSES IN MEETING.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

IN almost everything people are inclined to go to extremes, either on the one side or the other. While it is always unpleasant to have a meeting turned into a religious pow-wow, still it does not follow, necessarily, that a well-timed, hearty response to truth is objectionable. I am well aware of the fact that with some people responding, shouting, etc., is nothing more than a mere habit. But with others it is altogether a different thing. There are numerous instances where responding in meeting seems to be almost entirely an involuntary act. When under the powerful influence of truth, preached with the "Holy Ghost sent down from heaven," people shout because they cannot well avoid it. A blessed season of this character we once had the privilege of witnessing at the Wilbraham campmeeting. Our venerable editor preached a discourse on the judgment. That discourse was attended by an uncommon display of the divine power. Three times during that memorable sermon there went up from that encampment an almost universal shout, and that shout was an intuitive outburst from hearts deeply affected by the divine power of truth. To my ear it was heavenly music. And it causes me no humiliation of feeling to acknowledge that I found myself caught in the gale, and helping to swell the joyful sound.

There are some men who feel that "woe is me if I preach not the gospel," who are so constituted that a hearty response from good brethren does them a world of good. Some men are very diffident, and though they have been laborers in the vineyard for years, still they never stand before an audience except with fear and trembling. A good, hearty amen, done in the Spirit of God, and by men and women who know what they say amen to, does such a man more good than language can tell. He feels that his labors are appreciated; that those to whom he is endeavoring to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ are being blessed under his ministrations. I know that some preachers do not like to hear responses when they preach; but if I am not mistaken, such preachers never make people shout much, any way; so that they are not very likely to be disturbed, unless they happen to get into somebody else's meeting, and then of course they can forego their own feelings for a time, for the general good. I think that every new sect of Christians that has separated from the parent church, have, in the days of their humility, when they walked the most carefully before the Lord, been most filled with the spirit of praise, and consequently most given to responding in meeting. I do not wish to convey the idea that I would have noise in meeting, or anywhere else, for the sake of noise; but if the children of our common faith do get their hearts filled with the love and power of the truth, and with the Holy Spirit of God to such an extent that it causes them, like the Psalmist, to "praise God with a loud voice," I shall not "command that these hold their peace." And if I am preaching, and they drown my voice, I can afford to wait for them. But one thing seems very evident to me, viz., there is no possible need that many of our congregations should be exhorted "not to shout." As almost a universal rule they are sufficiently quiet to satisfy the most ardent sticklers for still meetings. For my own part, I would much rather see more spiritual life among us; more of the divine unction, even if some noise was the result. I love intellectuality, but intellectuality is not spirituality. It is a mistaken idea that high-toned spirituality is opposed to intellectuality. I had rather hear a preacher, provided he preaches the truth, end every sentence with a moderately loud hallelujah, or some other exclamation of praise, than that his sermon should be as dry as the sand on the Arabian desert. I, for one, had much rather a preacher would shout loud enough to make my head ache, than to see him act so lazy in the sacred desk that you feel all the time as though he ought to be bolstered up with pillows. The great lack with our people in spreading abroad, to saving effect, the most glorious principles of truth that have ever been brought before the people since the apostolic age, is a want of a holy, ardent, uncompromising zeal; a heart filled with the power of the Spirit of God. A genuine, holy, gospel faith that will find its corresponding action in an every day life, that is in harmony with the gospel of Christ. This holy zeal, and power, and faith, were what gave such men as Luther, Wesley, and a host of others, such amazing success. But as near as I can learn from the word of God, there is to be considerable shouting done by somebody in the future. And when that mighty, melodious shout shall go up from the redeemed host that shall be "like the voice of many waters, and mighty thunderings, saying, Allelulia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth," may we all be ready, with our harps all strung, to join the celestial anthem that introduces us to our everlasting home of peace in the blooming paradise of God.

NAPOLEON AND THE BONAPARTE FAMILY.

LOUIS NAPOLEON for several years has endeavored to establish another similarity between himself and the first Napoleon by obtaining a Cardinal's hat for a member of the Bonaparte family. The ready compliance of the Popes with the requests of the two Napoleons shows what worldly and unworthy motives constantly influence the government of the Church of Rome. The dignity of a Cardinal is the highest in the Roman Catholic Church, next to that of the Pope, and one might expect, that the Pope in making the appointment would be simply moved by considerations of the services rendered to the church by the candidates for the "red hat." But such, as the whole history of the Papacy shows, has rarely been the case. Few of the eminent men of the Church of Rome have been members of the College of Cardinals, and, on the other hand, hardly ever has a member of a sovereign house become a priest, without having, in course of time, been raised to the dignity of a Cardinal, however unworthy he might be on personal grounds.

Thus it has been in the case of two cardinals of the Bonaparte family. Cardinal Fesch, the uncle of the first Napoleon, was a man distinguished neither for science, nor for zeal, nor for eminence of Christian character. But for his relationship to the Bonapartes, his name would have been unknown to history. It was only as the uncle of Napoleon, that his appointment as Cardinal and Archbishop of Lyons was urged upon the Pope and accepted by the latter. In return for having promoted him to so high a position, Napoleon expected from Cardinal Fesch that he should use his ecclesiastical position in the interest of the Napoleonic dynasty. The Cardinal, a man without any strong convictions, tried to meet the expectations of his imperial nephew so far as it could be done without placing himself in open opposition to the church. Napoleon only followed the example of the immense majority of Roman Catholic sovereigns, in endeavoring to turn the social influence which the church of Rome retains over the masses of ignorant millions to the advantage of his dynasty, by intruding his creatures into the highest places of the church. That the Pope, though fully aware of this scheme, readily entered into it, in the hope of gaining the support of the mighty Napoleon for the hierarchical schemes of the Court of Rome, shows the secular, anti-spiritual influences which generally determine the acts of the Popes.

Louis Napoleon has just obtained a cardinal's hat for another Bonaparte—the Pope, on Saturday of last week, having appointed Cardinal Prince Lucien Bonaparte, a grandson of Lucien Bonaparte, the only brother of the first Napoleon who remained faithful to republican principles, and declined the offer of a crown. Cardinal Lucien Bonaparte was born in 1828; he is, therefore, now in his fortieth year, and is, we believe, one of the youngest members of the College of Cardinals. Little has thus far been known of him. In the literary world he has never made his appearance. If he had been of lowly origin, few probably would have heard of him outside of the circle of those who have been in connection with him as priest. As he is a priest, the press, occasionally, has spoken of him chiefly in connection with his prospect of asnding at some day, the Papal chair. As far as we know, his moral character is unimpeachable. He is said to be an uncompromising champion of all the Papal claims, and in cases when the Pope and the French government were at variance, never to have hesitated to declare in favor of the Pope.

Be this as it may, the fact remains undisputed that he owes his elevation to the cardinalate entirely to the patronage of the French Emperor. And no one who knows the history of Louis Napoleon can doubt the motives which have prompted him. The appointment of a Bonaparte Cardinal is alone a great stroke of Napoleonic policy. It must greatly strengthen the attachment to the Napoleonic throne of the lower classes of the French people, whose fanaticism and ignorance have all along been the chief support of Louis Napoleon. And how much more will this be the case, if his influence should ever succeed in causing the elevation of a member of his family to the Papal chair? Louis Napoleon, thoroughout his reign, has shown that he knows much better than his uncle, and Roman Catholic princes generally, how to use the Church of Rome for his selfish ends. The appointment of a Bonaparte as a Cardinal is a part of this policy, and, therefore, a matter of considerable importance to the State as well as the Church.—The Methodist.

SOME CAUSES OF EXCESSIVE WICKEDNESS.

GOING BEFORE THEY WERE SENT, AND WITH THE WRONG MESSAGE.

"I HAVE not sent these prophets; yet they ran; I have not spoken to them; yet they prophesied. But if they had stood in my counsel, and caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings." Jer. xxiii., 21, 22.

This Scripture is suggestive of several things; but is herewith presented for the sake of one thought, plainly declared; that is, if these unsent prophets, referred to, had run with God's word and testimony, the people would have repented of their evil ways; in which event they and their city, and polity, would have been spared; notwithstanding they were unsent messengers.

The sects, claiming to be orthodox, bring a woful objection to the doctrine that the impenitent are to "die—perish—be destroyed," instead of "dying, and yet never die," as they sing,

> Linger in eternal pain,
> And yet forbid to die.

The objection is, that the whole world would be demoralized by the teachings of prophets and apostles. A thing not very extensively tried of late years. This objection is common with the advocates of eternal torments.

Notwithstanding the trial of their theory of retribution upon the world, by the Papists a thousand years or more; and then by the Protestants for more than three hundred years, with increasing facilities to help forward their work, and no success, ("to the end, crawns the work,") not even having come to the "knowledge of the truth," and the world spoiled on their hands; old crimes and new ones, refined to their keenest intensity, increasing on every side: the penalty pronounced by these preachers upon the wicked, in their most solemn mood, is made the subject of witticism by the profane and waggish, in bar-room and forecastle, as well as in circles more refined; and yet another shameful result, which God can forgive up to some point of strain upon his forbearance, but who can promise impunity a moment after so long a time? That other result is, that preaching "damnation in eternal misery," with all the associated terms and horrid figures, images, and representations, narrations, and illustrations, have formed the basis of all the profanity in Christendom.

Only think for a moment! The pulpit unwittingly suggesting lessons of profanity! Can this be a passable truth? I do not love to have it so. But take the following incident. Some forty or more years since, the Methodists had a successful mission among the Indians. Several trophies of converted savages were present at a missionary meeting. I had the pleasure of attending. Among the things reported by the missionary was, that "The Indians use no profane language,"—for the reason, their theology furnished them with no convenient words for such a bad purpose.

To the credit and glory of the Bible, (our Text Book) if properly represented, be it said; 1st. No profanity would be suggested. 2d. God would be universally reverenced; for none could complain of his government and laws. Had our translators left the softer words in the text, instead of those hard ones, now in use, condemnation, and not damnation; hades—gehenna—sheol, and not hell; which the people have come to associate with a penalty that can never be satisfied, the dreadful result had not been.

When the doctrines of eternal life (to believers) through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and the consequent, unavoidable, death extreme, to unbelievers becomes liable to any objection, such as the orthodox is to every objection, they may begin to speak of its damaging effects.

If the text above tells the truth, the orthodox need look no further for proof, 1st. That God never sent them. 2d. That he can do without their services altogether. 3d. That they are responsible (however unfortunate in the case) for the great prevailing wickedness of these times; for it is plainly declared, "That if they had stood in God's counsel, and caused the people to hear his words, the people would have repented, and turned from their evil ways;" and that is not the worst thing in the case. See Matt. xxii., 13. "Preach the word: for the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine." Paul.

Yours, in hope, B. MATTHIAS.

THE COMING OF CHRIST.

"THAT ye come behind in no gift; waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. i. 7.

That the coming of Christ is a great practical doctrine, is both reasonable and Scriptural. It is true, indeed, that other and very important items of truth have employed the pen of inspiration—facts which are glorious in their grand results to a lost and ruined race. But these parts of the one great system of truth are of no practical importance to the church only on the ground that Christ shall come the second time. It is true that man in his natural state, in his essential nature, is wholly mortal. But to know this can be of no possible worth to the believer, only as he can with the certainty of a genuine faith look forward to a time when "mortality shall be swallowed up of life." And that time is at the appearing of Jesus Christ. It is also true that God has devised a plan through Jesus Christ to give a future endless life to all the good. But that plan would be worthless to all of Adam's race, if there was no time when it should be consummated. The day of consummation comes not, till our Lord shall appear in his glory. It is a fact, revealed in the word of God, that those who sleep in Jesus shall come forth from the prison-house of death, incorruptible, to die no more, to be equal to the angels, to be the children of God in the world to-come. But if our Lord Jesus never descends from heaven, no resurrection morn will ever dawn. We love to contemplate the glorious fact that God will "make all things new"—that this earth, now so deeply cursed with sin—shall one day be made to bloom in beauty, like the garden of God. Its evils all be taken away forever. That God will spread over it a carpet of perpetual green, clothe it in perennial beauty and deck it in untold loveliness, and fill it with glory as the waters cover the sea. But the "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away," can never be entered on by the redeemed host until "descending on his azure throne" our King shall come in the majesty of his power. We love to look forward to that time when "the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed; when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." But that glorious era when "a King shall reign in righteousness," can never dawn, till he who is appointed heir of all things, shall come, and claim his rightful throne, and wear his "many crowns." When we have looked abroad over this dark, ruined creation, and seen its wars and strifes—man imbruing his hands in the blood of his brother man—the dreadful carnage of the battlefield—where foul beasts and birds of prey have held horrid carnivals, and feasted on the flesh of slaughtered men, we have sighed for that happy day when war and strife shall cease, and when, in a glorious resting-place, on the other shore, we shall delight ourselves in the abundance of peace, forever. But that peaceful morn can never break, till the Prince of Peace shall come to reign on David's throne. We contemplate with holy joy that glad hour, marked in the Word of God, when "God shall wipe away all tears from our eyes; and there shall be no more death; neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." But till Jesus comes our tears will continue to run down our faces, death will deal its dreadful blows, and lay our kindred in the dust; sorrow and anguish will wring our hearts. All we read or know of future everlasting good, promised to the church, is to be given, in its consummated fulness, when "he who is our life shall appear."

No wonder, then, that so often in the writings of the inspired apostles they speak of that glorious event. No wonder that the beloved John, when wrapt in holy vision, as he heard falling from the lips of that heavenly messenger, who was mouth-piece for the King of kings, "Behold I come quickly," exclaimed in an ecstasy of joy, "Amen. Even so come Lord Jesus." No wonder that the church in all ages have looked forward to the day of his coming with hearts filled with holy joy, as the time when they shall receive their great reward. No wonder that a love for Christ's appearing is made to be the great Christian characteristic that shall entitle us to wear the victor's crown.

And as page after page of the prophetic word, by its fulfilment, becomes past history, until to-day we are standing in a little circle beyond which we can never pass till we see the King in his beauty: no wonder that the well-instructed prophetic student should place that event first in importance in his religious creed—the great leading truth of the present age, and delight in it more than in any one thing else. Yes, dear reader, that all-important day—that day fraught with such tremendous consequences to the inhabitants of earth, is only a little way in the future.

All the sublime realities of the glorious future world will soon be gained or lost forever. The fadeless beauties of the paradise of God will soon greet our admiring gaze, and gladden our satisfied hearts; or our eyes must be closed, and the throbbings of our hearts be stilled in eternal death.

If we would share the glory of that beautiful world promised to the faithful; if we would escape the awful doom of perpetual banishment out of life, we must be pure in heart. May God in his infinite mercy enable us ever to remember that nothing short of a gospel preparation will insure us a lot of eternal life in the Kingdom promised to the saints. May we possess that preparation in all our hearts; then shall we stand ready and waiting, to welcome back to earth her rightful King, and share his reign forever.

THE PASSOVER SUPPER.

THE annual celebration of our Lord's death, in what is commonly called the "Lord's Supper," will take place in Brooklyn, N. Y., at half past seven o'clock in the evening, on the 7th instant (Tuesday next), at the house of Br. Thomas M. Redhead, 261 Raymond Street; the same place where we held it a year ago. Any who feel it to be a privilege to partake with us are cordially invited to meet at that time and place. We do not believe it necessary that you should go from your own houses to celebrate this event; yet it is agreeable to unite with others in it, where it is practicable. We shall therefore be happy to see as many as can be present at this passover feast.

THE PASSOVER FEAST IN PHILADELPHIA.

THE friends in Philadelphia and vicinity, wishing to observe the Memorial Supper of our Lord, are invited to meet at the house of Br. J. L. BOYD, No. 1,705 N. Thirteenth st., on the anniversary of the Passover, Tuesday evening, April 7th, at 7½ o'clock.

"LIFE FROM THE DEAD."

THE first thousand of this work (cheap edition) are all gone; but the second thousand, it is likely, will go to press next week, and be ready the week following to answer orders. Only think! a work of 96 pages, with covers, issued at five cents per copy! A work presenting the most important positions of the faith of Life only through Christ, that was ever given to the public. Shall the work now begun, to give it wings, be continued? It is for you to say who have the funds to pay the printer; and for you who have no funds, but have time and opportunity to scatter the work. There is no thing more necessary to spread widely at this time than this, because it presents the crowning truth of the entire Life theme.

We trust the work of sending it out—far and wide—is but just begun. How can believers in the views maintained in this pamphlet, spread the truth it contains at so little cost, and so widely, as by seizing this time and opportunity to help sound it out to the ends of the land. Send all the funds you can; but especially send for as many copies as you can circulate, whether you have any funds to send or not; but we must be assured you will circulate them faithfully. If they are sent you by mail, please send money enough to pay the postage; which is, for a single copy, 2 cents; for three copies, to one addres, 4 cents: ten copies, 12 cents: eighteen copies, 20 cents. If sent by express, you will pay the charges on delivery to you. Determine at once what you, each, will do in the matter, and let us know, without delay.

"A DEFENCE OF THE BIBLE."

THIS work is in the hands of the stereotyper, and will go to press next week, probably. We have before stated that the cost of the first edition of 1,000 copies would be in the vicinity of from $70 to $90, or from 7 to 9 cents per copy. We cannot say more definitely this week; but nothing above the cost will be charged for it, when out, and we shall shortly know what that is. Many there are who will be glad to circulate them gratuitously; but we must have funds to furnish them to their hands. You see, by the amount pledged, that we are not yet in possession of sufficient to meet the actual expense of the first 1,000 copies; but we have been urged to put it to press, at once, in the confidence that the means will be forthcoming for that purpose. We have yielded to this pressure. Now let those who have made pledges, and others who have not, but who intend to help, remit what they can immediately for this object.

Our labor increases on our hands; but we shall perform it cheerfully while our gracious Lord gives us health and strength. Help us, all you can, friends and brethren. Let us all "work while it is day."

"NOT."—This is a very short word and a very ugly one when it gets into the wrong place, as it did last week in our editorial on "OBEYING THE GOSPEL." In our remarks on what our correspondent said, in the sixth line, for "we do not tell them," read, we do tell them. We avoid troubling readers with these mistakes whenever we can; but when it makes one say exactly what he does not mean, it seems necessary to correct them. Week before last, in the first quotation from John the Baptist's testimony, on the subject of "eternal torments," this mischief-making "not" deserted his post, and made John say, "Every tree that bringeth forth good fruit is hewn down and cast into the fire." But every reader of the Bible would see that "not" was missing, and would compel him to return to his post. This sentinel is a "little one," but when he is in the right place he is of mighty importance; but out of his place is a great mischief-maker.

THE MOUNTAIN AND THE STONE.

YOUR motto is, the "HERALD OF LIFE and the Coming Kingdom." Will you indulge me in an inquiry? In Dan. ii., 45, we read, "Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter," etc. Now what I want to know is, what the stone represents, and what the mountain represents that is as much larger than the stone as a mountain exceeds a stone in size; and by what means the stone becomes a great mountain and fills the whole earth?

J. G.

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR.

The foregoing inquiries have a vastness in them that we feel a sort of reluctance to attempt to explore, especially as there are, and may be, so many and various opinions on some of the points involved in them. One thing, however, is certain; the kingdoms of Gentile rule, from the days of the then reigning king of Babylon down to the time of the establishment of the universal kingdom of God on earth, is the subject of the prophecy of this chapter.

In our remarks which are to follow, we design to meet these questions as if we never had formed or expressed an opinion on the subjects presented, whether they agree or not with our own or others' previous views. Our object shall be to endeavor to know the mind of God in the matter.

A mountain, then, represents a kingdom; or, rather, we should say, it represents the Ruler, or body of rulers, of a kingdom. This figure is employed because of their exalted position. The term mountain is applied to obstructions, or that which stands in the way of the accomplishment of an object, as resisting or obstructing God's purposes; such mountains are spoken of, as being rolled down, melted, burned, etc. See Jer. li., 24–26.

In the text, Dan. ii., 45, it is quite evident it refers to a kingdom, or body of rulers. Hence the question arises, From what kingdom, or body of rulers, is the stone cut out—or "rent from," as the Septuagint reads.

As none of the kingdoms, or body of rulers, represented by the image in this chapter are called mountains, but, en masse, are a terrific "image," instead of goverments in harmony with God, we must look elsewhere for the mountain, or body of rulers, out of which the stone was cut, or rent. That the government God instituted for Israel—that kingdom, or body of rulers—was represented by a mountain is abundantly manifest in the Bible. David says, "By thy favor thou hast made my mountain to stand strong." Psa. xxx., 7. That kingdom when depressed was represented in language like the following—"The mountain of Zion is desolate." Lam. v., 18. "Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest." Micah iii., 12. See also Jer. xxvi., 18. In its desolation, Daniel prayed God to let his anger be turned away from his "holy mountain," and said, while he was praying "for the holy mountain," etc. Dan. ix.

When the kingdom of Israel was under the Theocracy government, and after the people called for a king like other nations, if they walked in obedience to God they were a highly exalted nation, and stood like a mountain above all other people, hence their government was as a mountain, and its glory was seen afar off. This was specially the case in the days of David and Solomon. But by the wickedness of kings who came afterward they brought judgments on the government and nation or kingdom, till God said, "Remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same: exalt the low;" [other kingdoms] "and abase the high;" [the kingdom or government of Israel;] "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it;" [the government or kingdom of Israel;] "and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him."

Thus the mountain of the Lord's house, or the kingdom of Israel, was abased, and was made subject to the kingdoms, or bodies of rulers symbolized by the image, Dan. ii. But this subjection was not to last always. There was to be "a stone," a Ruler, who, as the seed of David, had the "right" to David's throne. The king of Babylon, in his vision of the image, saw first the four universal monarchies that were to arise and bear rule over the earth; and at the same time he saw "a stone cut out of the mountain without hands." No human power produced it; God produced it without man's aid, or the aid of any of the four Gentile monarchies, or their fragmentary governments, and in spite of their opposition in the latter times. Small in its first appearance, but it was a stone taken out of the ancient Royalty, kingdom, or mountain of Israel; and it was that, to whom God had promised to give the "diadem and crown" which had been taken from "the high" mountain, or kingdom of Israel; but the four earth-born monarchies were first to complete their rule, and show how perfectly incapable the best of them were to govern the world, and give peace and prosperity to the earth. Nor was this the only reason why there was a delay in the re-establishment of the kingdom which had been overturned. A body of associate rulers were to be prepared, to be united with the "King" who would "reign and prosper, and execute judgment and justice in the earth." Jer. xxiii., 5. When that number of associates is completed, or made up, then is the time for the stone power to commence the smiting process, which is to ultimate in the entire demolition of the earth-born governments, symbolized by the image. It smote the image upon the feet—the last, or subdivisions of the fourth body of rulers on the earth. The smiting process, it is not likely, is instantaneous, or all completed at once. It may be partially accomplished before the full manifestation of the chief Ruler and his associates. That point is the crisis, when all the "corrupters of the earth" by their unholy rule, will be cut off and rooted out of the earth; and they being all "broken to pieces," will disappear, as "the chaff which the wind driveth away."

"The mountain of the house of the Lord" is to be re-established on a permament basis, under immortal rulers, so that the kingdom "shall not be left to other people," nor ever pass away. This fact is often referred to in the Bible. The Lord saith, "It shall come to pass in the last days, the mountain of the LORD'S house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it." Isa. ii., 2. Here is the "stone" exalted into "a great mountain and filled the whole earth." Dan. ii., 35. The "dominion is from the river [Euphrates], to the ends of the earth."

Micah bears the same testimony that Isaiah ii. does, and in nearly the same words. See chap. iv., 1, and onward. Isaiah, speaking in the name of the Lord, utters nearly the same language of Dan. ii., where, speaking of the people of Jacob, the following language occurs—"Thou, Israel, my servant, Jacob, whom I have chosen . . . . fear thou not; for I am with thee . . . . Behold all they that were incensed against thee shall be ashamed . . . . thou shalt seek them and shall not find them . . . . they that war against thee shall be as nothing . . . for I the LORD thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not, I will help thee . . . . I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument" [the stone cut out of the mountain] "having teeth; thou shalt thresh the mountains" [the gentile monarchies, or the rulers symbolized by the image, Dan. ii.,] and "beat them small, and shalt make the hills" [the subdivisions of the last kingdom of Dan. ii.] "chaff: thou shalt fan them, and the wind shall carry them away, and the whirlwind shall scatter them." Isa. xli., 8–16. All this is a perfect parallel to the description of the smiting, Dan. ii.

The return of the kingdom to Israel's king is thus spoken of, Zech. viii., 3, "Thus saith the LORD; I am returned to Zion, and I will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem: and Jerusalem shall be called a city of truth; and the mountain of the LORD of hosts the holy mountain." Here is the "great mountain," Dan. ii., 35, and it will "fill the whole earth," making but one empire for all the inhabitants thereof. Here comes in, in its fulness, the prophecy of Isa., xxv., 6–8, "And in this mountain shall the LORD of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, and wine on the lees well refined: and he will destroy in this mountain [under this government] the face of the covering cast over all people, [which has so long kept them in the bondage of superstition, bigotry, traditions, and will-worship], and the veil that is spread over all nations [by the claims and acts of "lords over God's heritage," both civil and ecclesiastical.] He will swallow up death in victory; [here is the resurrection of the saints of all ages]; and the Lord GOD will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the LORD hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God, [Ruler] we have waited for him," etc. Read to the end of the chapter. Here again is the Stone, now become a mountain, filling the whole earth.

Another figure is employed in Isa. xi., "A rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots . . . . with righteousness shall he judge the poor . . . he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked: and righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins . . . they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the LORD, as the waters cover the sea."

Here is the same result as in Dan. ii., and here the mountain kingdom is established over all the earth. The "rod," or "stone" has attained to universal dominion and displaced every vestige of the image kingdoms, and the Mountain kingdom, or body of rulers, succeeds to universal empire over all the earth. In that day, "The moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed when the LORD of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously." Isa. xxiv., 23. It is at that time God will "set my king upon my holy hill of Zion;" and the "kings and judges of the earth," who have refused submission to him, and have persecuted those he was preparing to "reign with him," will be "broken with a rod of iron," and "dashed to pieces like a potter's vessel." Psa. ii.

Here, again, we have the same result as in Dan. ii., 35, 45. The same events are symbolized in Rev. vi. 12–17, and xi. 15–19; also xix., 11–21; which, please read.

Some further remarks on the stone, to determine beyond a doubt who, or what is intended by it in Dan. ii., may be of use. The LORD said, "Behold I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation," etc. Isa. xxviii., 16, and onward. "The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner: this is the LORD'S doing:" etc. Psa. cxviii. 22. This stone, not only the Jewish builders of government refused, but it has been refused by all the image governments of earth; and they have sought by every possible means to destroy it, either by utterly rejecting it, or only tolerating it when its principles were corrupted, or its professed adherents compromised its claims with the claims of the earth-born image worshippers.

This last text, Psa. cxviii., our Lord Jesus applies to himself, Matt. xxi. 42; and Peter said, Acts iv., ii, speaking of Christ "raised from the dead"—"This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders;" and Paul quotes the text Isa. xxviii., 16, and applies in like manner, Rom. ix., 32, 33. Our Lord Jesus saith, On whomsoever this stone shall fall it will grind him to powder; Luke xx., 18; thus fully representing the breaking in pieces of the image governments, as stated Dan. ii., 34, 35, 44, 45.

But a remarkable testimony is given of this stone-power, in Gen. xlix., 24, speaking of Jacob, it is said, "From thence is the Shepherd, the stone of Israel." There can be no doubt this prophetic utterance related to the then future "Shiloh," or Messiah. He is first presented as a Shepherd, to care for, protect, and provide for his flock. Then he is the "Stone of Israel," in due time to break in pieces the oppressive image dynasties, and destroy them from off the earth, the saints' inheritance; because God has determined that "The kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven [not above it], shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii. 27.

This is the kingdom which "the God of heaven shall set up, which shall never be destroyed," and which "shall stand forever;" sweeping away all other rule on earth. Dan. ii., 44.

As to the exact means God will employ to bring this kingdom to its full maturity, so as to fill the whole earth, we do not know; and there has been sufficient speculation about it to make "the wise" more cautious in views on the subject. That the work will be accomplished in God's own good time, and by such means as he shall choose, we need not doubt. Because we cannot fathom the whole programme, we need not be disquieted or doubt the perfect fulfilment of all that God has spoken; for his word will "not return void, but will accomplish that which he" hath spoken.

Let us, then, wait for developments, rather than to be too inquisitive as to how things are to be done. Faith accepts the testimony God has given; and where the means to accomplish may seem too inadequate and unlikely to bring about the end specified, we may rest assured that infinite wisdom and power is at no loss to fulfil all that God hath spoken. Here let our faith rest, keeping our eyes open to see the salvation of God.

OUR DEAR BR., DR. TREVER, of Lockport, N. Y., writes us that his oldest son has been suffering for several weeks past from a spinal affection and paralysis in his lower limbs, and no expectation of his recovery: but his faith in Christ is strong and unwavering; and that to a minister, who visited him, he said, with emphasis: "I wish to confess to you, and to all Christians within my reach, my firm belief that life, eternal life, is only attainable through Jesus Christ." Br. Trever says, "These words were spoken with such emphasis, although he is very weak, that tears of joy gushed from my eyes." We know the joy you felt, Br. Trever. No wonder you blessed God for them. Br. Trever adds, "Let me beg your earnest prayers that my dear son may be kept steadfast in the faith once delivered to the saints unto the end. He has for years believed with me that immortality is only attainable at the resurrection." May the Lord sustain you, dear Br. Trever, and your son unto the end: and we know He will: blessed be His heavenly name.

"SHADOW AND SUBSTANCE."

A WRITER in the Voice of the West, of last week, labors in a commendable manner to have "brethren all speak the same thing, that there be no divisions among" them. His subject is, "A Few Thoughts on Baptism." He opens with the following paragraph:

> That water-baptism is taught in the Scriptures, and enjoined on the followers of our Lord and Master, is not with me a question: nor would I in what I may say on this subject weaken the impression on any mind that all the commands of Christ should be obeyed. Far from it. I believe we should be "as obedient children" in all things. Nevertheless, there is a question concerning this matter on which we all are not agreed; and the promulgation of the opinions of each makes more or less confusion in the churches. I mean whether water-baptism is for, or in consequence of, the remission of sin. Or, in other words, whether sin is remitted before, or by, or in the act of, immersion.

The writer argues this question very conclusively; and we confess we do not see how any unprejudiced mind can fail to see that baptism in water is not "for" the remission of sins;" that if it is to be practiced at all, it is a mere "shadow" of something else. We have no disposition to enter into the discussion of the subject pro or con; but we were struck with this writer's conclusions. He says:

> Substance always comes or must be before figure, or shadow: so men must become Christians before they are entitled to the ordinance of Christian baptism.

What is peculiar here is, that "substance always comes or must be before figure, or shadow." Paul speaking of meats and drinks, holy days, new moon, and Sabbath-day observances, says, "Which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is Christ." Col. ii., 17. Again, in speaking of the priests and their offerings, under the law given by Moses, he says: "Who serve unto the example and shadow of heavenly things," which things he clearly shows were in the future while those shadowing things were in operation. Heb. viii Once more, Paul says: "For the law having a shadow of good things to come," etc. Heb. x., 1.

"The "Shadow," then, in Scripture usage, is something which precedes, or goes before; the substance, and not the "substance before the shadow," as the writer in the Voice saith.

The latter clause of the above extract, wherein the writer says, "men must become Christians before they are entitled to the ordinance of Christian baptism," sounds strange to us in view of what he saith immediately afterward. There he is endeavoring to show that water-baptism does not initiate into Christ, and he speaks as follows:

> But the objector may say, Did not Paul teach the Galatian brethren (Ch. iii., 27) that Christ is put on by water-baptism? I reply, that while it may be true that he believed men should put on Christ by figure in baptism by water, he did not even teach that, in that place. Let us see what he says: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." v. 26. How? by faith, not by water. Hear him again: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." v. 27. How? Let the apostle be consistent with himself: "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." 1 Cor. xii., 13. "For through him we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father. Eph. ii., 18. Hence, "know ye not, your bodies are the members of Christ?" 1 Cor. vi., 15. For "he that is joined unto the Lord is one spirit." v. 17. That I understand to be the baptism that makes Christians, and hold, with Peter, that water-baptism is but a figure of it, which should indeed always follow, but never precede the fact.

Abating the last two lines, nothing can be clearer as to what is "Christian baptism:" it is not water-baptism. The real baptism, that which "makes Christians," the writer has well said, is "by one Spirit:" in other words, it is Spirit-baptism. Now, as by this, according to the writer's own admission, the person is in Christ—"the body," the "substance"—we can afford to let the "shadow" remain where John the Baptist placed it, as shadowing the baptism by Christ with the Holy Spirit, which was in the future, and "to come:" the shadow going before the substance, and not coming after. The shadow of a thing approaching us, if we are facing the sun, always reaches us before the object it foreshadows; if it follows after, it is certain we have turned from the sun, or have got behind the object, and that the substance is passing away from us, or we from it. So we should be careful, if we have the substance, not to go after "the weak and beggarly elements" of "shadows," which "can never . . . . make the comers thereunto perfect."

We harmonize with the writer in the Voice in all but his attempt to hold on to a shadow after we have the substance. Let us hold fast "whereunto we have already attained:" and we trust if there is anything of which we have not yet full understanding "God shall reveal even this unto" us.

One word on one expression in the opening paragraph of this writer, that "all the commands of Christ should be obeyed." To this we respond a hearty—Amen. And to those who believe that to be baptized with water is one of Christ's commands, we say, make no delay on any account. Let not ice-bound rivers, or any other obstacle, hinder you for an hour, for all delays are dangerous, and especially where obedience to Christ is involved. But if you believe you have already "the baptism that makes Christians," as this Voice writer says the "Spirit" baptism does, then you may wait for a "convenient season" to look after the "shadow;" and possibly may come to the conclusion that, the "substance" is the essential thing. If so, you may go on your way, quietly drinking of this "water" concerning which Christ saith, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." John iv., 14. And again Jesus saith, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living waters. [This spake he of the Spirit which they that believe on him should receive:" etc.] John vii., 37-39.

This kind of "water-baptism" is the "substance." Let us have this above all things else. If others want the "shadow," we will not quarrel with them about it, only we entreat them not to impress the minds of believers that it is anything but a "shadow," the body having already come "that makes Christians," if they are really such. "Let us love one another; for love is of God: and every one that loveth is born [begotten] of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love." 1 John iv., 7, 8. "Let us not judge one another any more, but judge this rather that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." Why this injunction? Because, "Every one of us shall give account of himself to God."—Rom. xiv., 12, 13. "Let every man prove his own work."—Gal. vi., 4. Let us not be found "beating the men-servants and maid-servants" of God, because they do not believe or practice in all things as we do; but wherever and whenever we see the spirit of Christ manifested, let us rejoice in it, however widely we may be apart in our opinions in relation to rites and ceremonies; in charity conceding to all the same liberty we claim for ourselves. Differ we may, and differ we shall, on some things, till "the Lord brings again Zion:" then we who love him will "see eye to eye." Let us come as near to that state now as our imperfect knowledge will allow; so shall we be found of him in peace, who is Lord of us all.

Logic that is too Logical.

By this heading we do not mean that logic can of itself be too logical; but some men make it so for their own premises. This thought has been suggested by the article below, which appeared in the World's Crisis last week. We give the article entire, because it is unexceptionable all but the last paragraph, which has a "fling" at believers in the "non-resurrection" of the wicked dead, and is the point on which we shall test the writer's logic, and see if it is not too logical for his fling. The article is the following:

The Resurrection.

"But as touching the resurrection of the dead, . . . I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. God is not the God of the dead, but of the living."—Matt. xxii., 31, 32.

This is the reply of the Saviour to the Sadducees touching the resurrection of the dead. The Sadducees affirmed there was no resurrection (see verse 23), consequently no future life for man; and for the purpose of puzzling the Saviour, they asked him whose the woman shall be in the resurrection, for the seven had her? They did not ask whose wife she shall be in the intermediate state? but whose wife shall she be in the resurrection? The Lord answered them, "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." "For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven;" and continues in the language of the text—"God is not the God of the dead [who live no more, as you suppose], but of the living;" that is, of those who shall live again by a resurrection, which you Sadducees deny. This is, I believe, the true idea.

It is said by some that this portion of Scripture proves that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are now living in the spirit world; for God says he is not the God of the dead: therefore they—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—cannot be really dead. They are dead, or they are not. The Scriptures certainly express the idea definitely—that they are dead. If they are really dead, how can God be their God, who says, "I am not the God of the dead, but of the living?" Let us look at this.

1. God is not the God of the dead; but Abraham is dead; therefore God is not the God of Abraham. This is not the true position. Let us try another.

2. Living men are not the subjects of a resurrection; but Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are living; therefore they will not be raised from the dead. Are the "conscious" folks willing to admit this? Perhaps not. Let us try again.

3. God is not the God of the dead, who live no more; but he is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, who are dead. Therefore, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will live again. This expresses the truth, as all can see.

I do not embrace the doctrine of the Sadducees—non-resurrection. I believe all men will appear at the judgment-seat of Christ. Let us all contend for true piety in the heart. "Behold the Judge standeth at the door!"

We "do not embrace the doctrine of the Sadducees—non-resurrection;" for that denied the resurrection of any one, good or bad. But we do believe that only the righteous will live from the dead: or, only such as have "God for their God." Let it be noticed that this Crisis writer has quoted and remarked thus on the language "'God is not the God of the dead [who live no more, as you suppose], but of the living;' that is, of those who shall live again by a resurrection," etc. That is good logic. Now take his logical conclusion, numbered "3." It is as follows:

1. "God is not the God of the dead who live no more.

2. "But he is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, who are dead.

3. "Therefore, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will live again."

Now let us form a syllogism from this writer's statements. Thus:

1. "God is the God of those who shall live again by a resurrection."

2. But "all the dead, righteous and wicked, will live again by a resurrection."

3. Therefore, God is the God of all the dead, whether righteous or wicked.

Thus our friend's logic appears too logical; for it lands him in universal salvation; for "the dead shall be raised incorruptible," and "in glory;"—"neither can they die any more." Now one of two things follows:

1. God is not the God "of those who shall live again by a resurrection:" or,

2. The living again by a resurrection belongs only to the righteous.

But the fact that any one is to live again, is evidence that "God is their God;" for he "is not the God of the dead [who live no more]," our friend says, "but of those who shall live again by a resurrection." If, then, all live again, righteous and wicked, God is proved to be the God of the wicked dead as really as of the righteous. Such is the logical conclusion of the Crisis writer's logic; which makes it too logical for his purpose. And such is the inevitable result of all arguments in support of the idea of the living again of the wicked dead.

The Resurrection.

Alger, in his critical history of the doctrine of a future life, has a chapter on the resurrection of Christ; and in the close of that chapter, I was astonished to find the following sentence:

"When Paul reasons that, if the dead are not to rise, Christ is not risen; but that the dead are to rise, and therefore Christ is risen, his argument reposes on a spontaneous practical method of moral assumption, not on a judicial process or logical proof."

I was astonished to see this from so acute a thinker; for Alger is a scholar of no ordinary attainments. I remember that Thomas Paine, somewhere in his writings, says the same of Paul's argument. Unfortunately the English Testament makes Paul liable to this charge; for the words following, "but if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen," evidently seem to argue from a general resurrection to the particular raising of Christ.

Now I do not so understand Paul. But he argues from the affirmation of some in the church at Corinth, and shows the folly of their affirmation. They affirmed that dead persons could not be raised: in other words, that a resurrection of dead persons was impossible. Then if that was true, Christ had not been raised. Paul reasons with them on the results of their affirmation; and then gives the evidence of Christ's resurrection. His words properly rendered are:

"But if a resurrection of dead persons is impossible, Christ has not been raised;" or, exactly, "neither has Christ been raised."

This is according to the affirmation of his opposers. Christ had not been raised if a resurrection of dead persons was impossible. The English Testament, however, makes him argue from the certainty of the general resurrection to the particular instance of Christ's being raised. Your readers may like to think of this.—H. T. Anderson, in Christian Standard.

The foregoing confirms and exactly agrees with what we have said on the same subject in "Life from the Dead." We have maintained, in that work, that Paul was contending against those persons who had taken the ground, there would not be a resurrection of any dead persons. The above testimony fully sustains us in that position, and proves the resurrection of some dead ones—not all.

Paul proceeds to show who those are, viz., "Christ," and "they who are his at his coming." None others have any part in a resurrection of dead ones. "Christ the first-fruits"—the pledge of the harvest, and the sample of it or of the crop to be gathered. To suppose the wicked dead are of that harvest, is to suppose the tares are the same as wheat. The crop gathered is to correspond with the sample, or the first-fruits; and settles the fact that, the righteous only will live again: and the whole argument of Paul, to the end of that chapter, shows he is maintaining that doctrine; for, the raised ones, are "raised in glory"—"incorruptible," and "immortal." The resurrection is a peculiarity, and belongs only to such as are Christ's. That is the clear testimony of the Bible, everywhere. The death state is the doom of all others.

Who will Live from the Dead?

BY JACOB GRIM.

Br. Storrs: We have no desire to interfere with the department belonging to the editor of the Herald, but as we are well aware of the labor you are called to perform, week after week, in reading letters and articles, and culling the ones most suitable for the paper, it is hardly to be supposed that you can answer all questions that are advanced for your solution. Indeed, if persons would for one moment consider your age, and the amount of labor you are called upon to perform, many of them would be slow with their questions.

Now our mind has been somewhat exercised by some questions propounded by our good Br. Dr. N. Field. He assumes that Rev. xx., 6, teaches the literal resurrection of the dead. We say assumes; for the Dr. says, "It is admitted on all hands that the Apocalypse is a highly figurative book; but it is also true that it abounds with literal declarations." Again, says the Dr., "But if the first resurrection is figurative, is it not implied that there will be a second figurative resurrection? What do the figures represent?" Now we said the doctor assumed the fact that these resurrections were literal, therefore the doctor takes the affirmative of the question and the proof lies with him. We have allowed too much to be placed upon us. Our side of the question is negative And yet our opponents have always been asking us to prove our side of the question. But our object is not to reply to Dr. Field, but to state a few things that have been running through our mind.

John Chambers stated some years ago, that there was "not a single passage in the Bible, that said a wicked man should die again after being raised from the dead." That has been our opinion for many years. And as for this book of Revelation abounding in literal declarations, we will examine a few. Chap. xii., "And there appeared a great wonder in heaven, a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars." This is just as emphatic as the Rich man and Lazarus; "there was a rich man," etc. And there appeared a woman! What a royal dress made out of the sun, and the floor carpeted with the moon, and her crown made of twelve stars. But, says the objector, this is all symbolic. Well, we will try again. "And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels; and prevailed not; neither was there place found for them any more in heaven." First, I would like to know how this dragon and his angels ever got up into heaven? And second, I would like to know if it was according to the will of God that these things took place? For, we are taught to pray, thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven. Well, we read on and find the Devil and Satan were cast out into the earth and his angels were cast out with him. "And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the Kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ; for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night."

Now if this is literal, and it is a very plain statement, then the kingdom of God has been established and was ushered in by a fight with the Devil. But to me the whole scene presents a bogus kingdom; erected by some power assuming to be the kingdom of Christ. But to come to the literal declarations in chap. xx.

"And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Dragon, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years." Now, where do the literal declarations come in? Is it the angel, the key, the bottomless pit, the chain, or the devil, or Satan? "No," says the objector, "none of these." Very well; does it begin with these souls, with their heads cut off; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years? O yes, says the objector, there is where the literal begins. But "the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." Which is the first, the one before the thousand years, or the rest of the dead? It seems to me this is rather vague. The duration given to these headless souls is one thousand years' reign; a thousand years, and only that: and the second death hath no power on them. And about the rest of the dead; it does not say one word about them, only it says they lived not again until the thousand years were finished; and it certainly does not say they lived then; it certainly does not say one word about the wicked dead coming up again.

Now a few words for those who believe in the resurrection of the wicked. We wish to present a few plain texts and see if we cannot give you a harmony that will suit all parties. John v., 28, 29. Verse 25 says, "the hour is coming and now is"—not a thousand years off—but, "now is; when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. Mark this . . . . Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good to the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation."

Now, there is no distinction of time here; all are to hear his voice, and all come forth good, bad, and indifferent. "A literal declaration," say our opponents. Very well. Now we read again Luke xx., 33, and onward. "But they that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world even the resurrection from the dead . . . . Neither can they die any more:" Why? "for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." "Hold," say our opponents, "that means only the righteous; for the wicked do not come up among the worthy ones." Does not John say, all that are in their graves come up? "Yes, but I do not believe they come up at the same time." We ask you to prove your assumption. Did we not quote Rev. xx., 6?" But Rev. says nothing about the wicked coming up at the end of the thousand years. And, beside, when Paul said, I declare unto you the gospel as I received it, he says nothing about the resurrection of the wicked. Well, John brings them all up, and Luke says they cannot die any more, and Matt. xxv., 46, tells us what shall be done with them—"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment." "But that," say you, "is to die the second death." But Luke says, "they are equal to the angels; neither can they die any more." "But they are cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death." Suppose we read this destructive fire, called the second death, Rev. xx., 10, "And the Devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever." One of the "literal declarations," I presume.

Now, in summing up, we read according to the interpretations of a class of interpreters who believe that man is mortal, and that God is going to exert some kind of power to bring the wicked back for the pleasure of destroying them again, "All that are in their graves shall come forth; they that have done good and they that have done evil." Second, "They that attain to that world, even the resurrection of the dead; they cannot die any more: for they are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Well, what are they going to do with them? "O," say they, "The righteous enter into everlasting life; but the wicked are to be destroyed again." Now we ask for the text that says a wicked man will be raised from the dead and die again. We say again, give us the text. You have jumped all they way to the book of Revelation for a second death; but it only torments the Devil for ever and ever. If you can show me any power to raise the wicked, I will prove him immortal, incorruptible, and prove he cannot die any more. Now, how do you like the picture? We saw over twenty years ago, we were unable to defend the doctrine of a destruction of the wicked after a resurrection. Submitted in love from your brother in Christ.

Of God.

Do we have correct conceptions of God? When one of the inspired writers signifies to us that "God is Love," the personification appeals not only to our intellect, but likewise reaches down to our inner nature. The bare statement is full and impressive. But very much of the responsive feeling arises from distinctness and comprehensiveness in the diction of the language employed to convey the idea to our minds. The Infinite thus impresses himself upon the finite. Therefore this knowledge is satisfying, sustaining and comforting to those choice ones who realize more acutely their littleness, because of having reached nearer unto God. In reality the Creator is personified by an attribute, that we may have another tie of sympathy by which we can be bound unto him. While we are now in our state of alienation, he seeks that we be reconciled; in other words, called back into a state of union with him.

But there is another aspect wherein we think he is erroneously regarded, and that is in his essential constitution. It is true we are not to probe that too curiously; but in his benignity and love for us, he has given an intimation, that we may not be in utter ignorance. Unfortunately for the simple English reader of the commonly received version of the Scriptures, this knowledge is conveyed to the understanding by the employment of terms vague and unsatisfactory. We are told in this rendering, that "God is a Spirit." Now let each inquire of himself, the impression made on the mind by this statement of a momentous idea. In the depth of his consciousness, does he realize the Infinity—the universality of the Supreme? To our mind there is limitation. The logic of the intellect truly repels the intrusion of such a thought; nevertheless the impression is stamped on our consciousness, however we may be forbidden to consider the Deity as a being of body or parts. A spirit may come and go; be here but not there; removing from place to place. Does not the inferred sense of the expression, then, dwarf the reality? The past history (yea, the present likewise) of the Christian church exemplifies the truthfulness of these remarks, in the fact of art having impiously undertaken to represent our heavenly Father in the form of man's image on canvass, and with the graver's tool.

Is he a Spirit? or is he the Spirit? or still more concisely, Spirit? Make it known to ourselves, he is love—he is Spirit! [So rendered in the Baptist version.] Now the idea is impressed on the mind in all its fulness. He is Infinity—pervading and governing all things, ruling the heavens, "inhabiting eternity," ordering to his own glory. The magnetic force of the language "God is Spirit," can leave no harbor for doubt among even the most simple. He who orders the motions of the one hundred millions of starry orbs visible to us by the magnifying power of the telescope, discontinues no work, removes himself no distance, when he is with him of a contrite spirit. "For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name—Holy; I dwell in the high and holy—with him also of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones." L. T.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Note by the Editor.—We thank our friend, "L. T.," for the foregoing thoughts. It is only a few months since he came into our Life views, after having been born, educated, and indoctrinated in the "straitest sect," of Methodism. He has forsaken all to follow withersoever the truth shall lead him. When he gave us the foregoing article, he called our attention to the text with which it closes, asking us, if it did not teach the resurrection? and if so, does it not also teach it to be a revival of the "humble and contrite ones," and of them only? The thought had never occurred to us before. It certainly seems plausible, and may be used to strengthen our faith in the certainty of the resurrection of such—God will "revive" their "heart and spirit." "I will raise him up at the last day," saith the Son of God.

Our brother's thoughts of God are deeply interesting to us; and more in harmony with our personal views than anything we have heard or read on the subject; yet we are cautious of assenting to, or inserting in the Herald of Life, articles on the unfathomable topic of the being of the Self-existent one we call God. His existence is too inscrutable for any human speculation to be indulged in on the subject. "God is." "He that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him." And, happy for us, "He is not far from every one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being." To realize this grand and glorious truth is more exalting to a human being than any exaltation earth can give; and more comforting and sustaining to the "heart and spirit" than to know that all the powers of earth were on our side. His everliving presence is life, and health and peace. How we should watch and pray that we grieve not his holy spirit, lest its sensible presence be withdrawn from us. Its abiding presence is our life—present, future, and eternal. Let those who now believe take heed not to quench its life-giving power; for upon its indwelling depends all we have any right to hope for of comfort here, and of life hereafter. "God is love: he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." Blessed truth. May this experience be ours, and that of all our readers.

From Elder J. Lewis.

Ramsey, Ill., March 25, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I closed my labors last evening in Oconee, and feel happy to say, the truth triumphed; so much so, that the leading men of the village thanked God they had heard the gospel in Oconee for the first time. As evidence of their sincerity, their hands went down in their "pockets," and the "Greenbacks" came out, they saying, "Come help the man that goes out without purse or scrip, and is not afraid to expose the fables of those who preach for hire." How good our heavenly Father is to give us aid in time of need. Some came and shook hands with the old one-armed preacher, and shook a greenback into his hand: and the dear little boys and girls came and gave the old preacher, some fifty cents, some more and some less; and when about to leave on the cars our fare was handed us. To-morrow we are to go some ten miles from this place to break new ground. Praise the Lord, the old "soul-sleeper" is gaining ground, because God is on our side. The Methodist preacher at Oconee, said, he wished the old "soul-sleeper would go to sleep, so that he would not trouble them any more."

We can safely say, the life and advent views are taking hold here in the West. Last night, after hearing me preach from 1 Kings, where the prophet prayed that the "child's soul" might come into him again—a text given me by a Baptist—an old Methodist brother remarked, he was now satisfied that man had no immortality; and others testified to the same.

I feel glad to see the spirit manifested in the tract cause; and I send herewith fifty cents to help get out "Can You Believe?" hoping to send more soon.

Note by the Editor.—You have never informed us, whether you received the books and pamphlets we sent you some weeks since. Have they ever come to hand? also, a letter we sent to that place at the same time? Please keep us informed in these matters, that we may not waste publications.

S. S. Call writes from Canton, Minn.: I have found H. O. Billings, of Burr Oak, Iowa, a true brother in Christ. He is poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith, giving all for Christ. Yet some professed Adventists wish to keep him from preaching life only in Christ. But he has cut loose from such, and is doing more to spread the glad tidings than they all. The Lord is with him in spirit and power. If you can send him the Herald of Life, it will be a favor. He would pay for it if he could; but he has a family of six children to take care of—the happiest family I ever saw; all serving the Lord. What you can do for him will not be lost. "Life only in Christ" would be a great help to him. He was all alone in his views, as he thought, till we found each other. I have had a good time with him. I expect to leave here, for Vermont, March 23d.

Note by the Editor.—We have sent Br. Billings the paper, and other works, to Burr Oak, Iowa; and will send more soon, if he finds he can use them for the good of those around him. Take courage Br. Billings. "The Lord will provide."

A. L. Houghton, South Adams, Mass., writes: I love the Herald of Life. God grant that truth may prevail. There are many around here that are opposed, but I am determined to go forward, by the help of the Lord. Some like to read the paper, and like its teaching: but traditions are hard to give up; yet I hope soon to see the truth prevail, that there is no future life out of Christ.

Eld. R. V. Lyon has been laid up with lameness for some time past; but he writes: I am beginning to get out a little. I have lately given six sermons on the great theme of Life through Jesus the Life-giver, etc., in the city of Lockport, N. Y., to full houses.

Thomas Wiswell, Hampden Corner, Me., writes: I like the Herald: it is all the preacher I have. I do not know what I should do without it. I love the truth of "No life out of Christ."

ALL PREVAILING.

PRAYER its way to God can find
From earth's deepest centre,
Though a wall of steel confined,
Prayer that wall can enter.

Rocks of granite, gates of brass,
Alps to heaven soaring,
Bow to let the wishes pass
Of a soul imploring.

From the body of the fish,
From the earth's recesses,
From the lion's den, the wish
Up to heaven presses.

Near the Niger or the Nile,
Or where forests bound thee,
On creation's farthest isle
Mercy's smiles surround thee.

Deity in every place,
On the earth or ocean,
Opens wide the gates of grace.

THE THREE HEBREWS.

NOTWITHSTANDING King Nebuchadnezzar had been convinced and had acknowledged that Daniel's God was a "God of gods, and a Lord of kings," yet he seems in a little while to have forgotten it and returned to his idol worship.

He made an immense image of gold and set it up in the plain of Dura. He then sent word throughout all the realm over which he reigned for all the princes, governors, great men and officers of all grades, to come to the dedication of the image which he had set up. A herald was then sent out with a command from the king, "to cry aloud to all peoples, nations and languages" that at what time they heard the sound of all kinds of instruments of music, they should fall down and worship the golden image, and if they did not do this, they were the same hour to be cast into a burning fiery furnace.

Now Daniel's three companions, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego would not join in this idolatry and bow down with the rest of the people. So certain men, who no doubt were jealous of them, came and reported to the king that they would not worship the image. The king was very angry when he heard this and commanded these men to be brought before him, and asked them if it was true that they did not serve his gods, nor worship the golden image which he had set up? He gave them one more opportunity to do so, and if they failed, they were to be at once cast into the furnace of fire, and then asked them, "Who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hand?" It would have been a very easy thing for them to have saved their lives by just bowing down to the idol, even if they did not believe it could hear them, but they were true and honest men, and would not deceive the king, nor act a lie any sooner than tell one. They were very bold and told the king plainly they would not worship the image, and would rather go into the fiery furnace, believing their God whom they served was able to deliver them; but if not, they would die. At this Nebuchadnezzar was exceedingly enraged, and commanded that the furnace should be heated seven times more than usual. He also commanded the most mighty men in his army to bind Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego and cast them into the fiery furnace. They obeyed him and bound them with all their clothes on, and cast them into the furnace; but it was so exceedingly hot that the fire killed the men who threw them in. But when the king looked, lo, there were the three Hebrews walking amid the fire unbound and unharmed, and a fourth person in the form of an angel, walking with them. At this sight the king was greatly astonished, and rose up in haste, went to the mouth of the furnace and called them to come forth, and they came out of the midst of the fire.

Then all the princes, governors, and great men who were assembled at the dedication of the image saw these men, and knew that a great miracle had been wrought; for the men were not only uninjured, but their hair was not even singed, nor was the smell of fire about their clothes.

Then the king blessed the God of Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, who had sent his angel and delivered his servants who trusted in him, and would rather sacrifice their lives than commit sin. He also made a decree that every people, nation, and language that should speak any thing amiss against the God of the Hebrews should be destroyed, because there was no god that could deliver in that manner. The king also honored and promoted Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego in the province of Babylon.

We are not told where Daniel was at this time, but are satisfied that if he had been present he would have contended as boldly for the only true worship, as did his friends. There have been many persons since Daniel's day, who have laid down their lives for the truth's sake and the love they bore to their Saviour, and we have reason to be very thankful that we do not live in a time when we need to suffer thus. But there are many ways in which a person may deny or cover up their faith, and many things beside one's life that may be sacrificed for the right. The example of the three Hebrews is very encouraging, and should be remembered if at any time we are tempted to falter in the path of duty or to fear man more than God. He will never forsake those who serve and trust Him, but will finally deliver and save in his kingdom all who honor and confess him before men.

AUNT LOUISA.

THE NATURAL MAN.

BY REUBEN CADWELL.

THE conclusions we arrive at from previous considerations in regard to man, are briefly the following. Man, though capable of moral acts is an earthly, animal being; capable of overabundant and numerous offspring; proceeding, long since, from differing tribes or races of men, multiplying into the ever-increasing ocean of unknown generations and multitudes of people, that were not, and now are; who have been appointed such portions of the earth, doubtless, as was best adapted to their physical benefit, the present and future purpose of God, as to the entire inhabitants of the earth. And they have been provided with a world, richly adapted to their happiness in the gratification of their senses, and to meet the wants of the life given them. An arrangement of creature existence, which, though not independent of a new order and condition of being, yet now perfect, guided by physical laws, for the ends proposed, and should be considered justifiable to him who gave. And if not so, when viewed in parcels, is so when relatively considered.

Does not the natural man's whole inheritance of being, except relatively, terminate in death? He has no relation to any life, but the one he has received, unless God shall constitute that relation. He cannot even enjoy this, but by a careful observance of the laws of his being. Did God expect, does he now expect, of men in a similar condition to those "from whom was hid even from ages, and from generations the truth that the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs and partakers of his promise of the gospel," more than the unforfeited, natural, personal and social enjoyments of the rights of existence? This is the only life he has given them power, or wish, or reason or hope to enjoy. It is by this natural perception of human rights, aided by the operation of natural laws, and varying according to different degrees of intelligence and experience, that is the cause of all social order, law, and government, of all not Christian nations, whether carried into effect by the people, or usurped by the king as supreme. And all this has reference to the enjoyment of an animal life; and for which God only holds them accountable in his dealings and judgments upon them. Here begins and ends all but the relative future of them. This is as I understand this part of the subject.

It may be thought, the infinite display of power and wisdom in man's formation, and the purpose he was to fulfil in this world, cannot be justified with so brief a life and no future one. It is as easy for God to exercise his power in forming man, as upon the world of matter, or the brute creation, and it is not the greatness or the greater profusion of power, that is the argument for long or short life; more than for the lilies of the field, which today are, and to-morrow are cast into the oven. The contrast here, is not between man and fowls, but between them and Christ's disciples. The natural man's true value is relatively found in its bearing upon the future of the family of man. Without this, it is of little value; for his days are vanity.

The manner and profusion in which God takes away human life, is proof to my mind that man is not such a creature as some hold him to be. Yet God's disposition of it is salutary upon the living, and the future of the race. The design of future life expressed, rests upon a different foundation than the making of conscious beings out of dust. If man rises higher than an animal, so that the dust to which he returns shall not remain inanimate eternally, it will be by an after provision of divine favor. On this, no man by creation, has any claim. If the human existence is justifiable only on its being perpetuated, then eternal life is not an undeserved gift, or gratuity, but due as an act of justice. Surely, man must go back as he comes, till the means and agencies are prepared, and used, by which a higher life is obtained. And may not cities and nations cease before these reach them, who with them might have continued to this day? And is not their natural existence and future posterity, the only justification that they have been? Matt. xi., 23. If, in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, and it pleased God to save those who believe (by the foolishness of preaching) in him who was given to be the light of the Gentiles, that he might be for salvation to the ends of the earth, who finds fault, if they, who reject this truth and light, with those it never reached, find the ultimate boon of their existence to be but an animal life?

As it respects life from the dead, it is not now, so much the intent to save the Adamic man, as the new man; or, the old man made new. It was not so much the intent to save all of human born, as to obtain a godly seed; or a begotten seed by the Spirit. It is designed, however, to benefit the whole living of the race, physically and morally; as the means and system adopted should continue to have more intimate access to them, and ultimately to reach every person of woman born. And if any ask why God adopted this system, my only answer here is, man's nature, condition, and the best good of the race demanded it. And to ask that another should be adopted, would be as reasonable as to ask that man be made what he is not; for, man as a natural man, can hope for no different destiny of being than that proceeding from the one general fountain. All are subjects of death, being the children of a mortal parent. And personal transgression unforgiven only makes it more aggravating, and its bands more strong, without hope of revival to life. But forgiveness has the promise of future life; for as by man came death, by man came also life from the dead. For, though the sting of death be sin, the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, can remove its poison, and make all free (who walk not after the flesh) from the law of sin and death: so that, as Adam is the author of death to all in him, so Christ is the author life to all in him.

This plan meets man's wants, (in order to a future life) and contains the remedy for those to whom it comes, and accept it for the perfection of the human constitution—the organic creature man—in immortal life. And the choice of means to accomplish this, though partial, are the best, most effectual, and sure in the fulness of times, to reach and benefit the living of the entire family of man. Hence this choice manifests no injustice to any, but universal love to all. Nor does this provision infringe on the true animal enjoyment of this life, but greatly extends and secures them from the effect it has of promoting useful knowledge where it is not known.

And there is another view of the subject in which man comes to a common destiny, leaving God the freedom of acting without violating any creature's rights; for, as to those who are dead, whether they have been under law or without law, or incapable of law, (since in death he finds them) it is immaterial to them, as dead, whether they sleep long or short, or whom he takes out from among the dead to make a new creation, whether it be red earth or brown; or whether he renew the materials once possessed altogether; for to God alone belongs the righteous exercise of his free good pleasure, to quicken whom he will. Nor can these put forth a claim that he had not before preferred to exercise that they should live, more than the common dust of the earth could claim to be that of which Adam was made, or receive injustice. For those not connected with this living source of life, have ceased from all relation to conscious living forever. "The world passeth away; but he who doeth the will of God abideth (lives) forever."

I have presented these thoughts as justification of man's animal existence, independent of gospel provision, and as proved by it and God's conduct towards him in the past, and what is revealed to be done for him in the future. I do not know but this will be called strong meat, considering our general ignorance of man's natural condition: especially considered by itself, apart from the gospel, which, I have long desired it might be, and think it should be; that we may behold more clearly the plan God has actually pursued in his providence, the dispensation of his word, and the best agencies for the more full redemption of the remnant of Jacob and the Gentile world, in the ages to come. This, I say, is so strange to some, so new, it may perhaps be unprofitable at this time to give to the world in this form.

Many of the above sentiments, and their general bearing, are new to me, and I have not had time to bring them into much system or order; and have not perhaps enough ingenuity to do so, if it could be done. It may serve to enlist other minds to know more clearly the different conditions of men and to know how to account for the divine providence toward them, and that on the alone footing of an earthly existence.

Having no congenial minds at times, and but few to commune with, I feel as though it would be a treat to converse with the readers of the HERALD, if I cannot talk quite as easy as some of them do.

EXAMPLES OF DYING CHRISTIANS.

JOSEPH Addison, Esq., was a very able and elegant advocate for the Bible, in life and death. Just before his departure, having sent for a young nobleman nearly related to him, who requested to know his dying commands—his answer was—"See in what peace a Christian can die."

Dr. John Leland, after spending a long and exemplary life in the service of the gospel, closed it with the following words: "I give my dying testimony to the truth of Christianity. The promises of the gospel are my support and consolation. They alone yield me satisfaction in a dying hour. I am not afraid to die. The gospel of Christ has raised me above the fear of death, for I know that my Redeemer liveth."

Monsieur Pascal was a great man in every way, and one of the most humble and devout believers in Jesus, that ever lived. The celebrated Bayle saith of his life, that "a hundred volumes of sermons are not worth so much as this single life, and are far less capable of disarming men of impiety. The extraordinary humility and devotion of Monsieur Pascal gives a more sensible mortification to the libertines of the age, than if one was to let loose upon them a dozen of missionaries. They can now no longer attack us with their favorite and darling objection, that there are none but little narrow spirits, who profess themselves the votaries of piety and religion: for we can now boldly tell them, that both the maxims and practice thereof have been pushed on to the strongest degree, and carried to the greatest height, by one of the profoundest geometricians, by one of the most subtle metaphysicians, and by one of the most solid and penetrating genii that ever yet existed on this earth."

CHARLES V., emperor of Germany, king of Spain, and lord of the Netherlands, after having alarmed and agitated all Europe for near fifty years, retired from the world, and enjoyed more complete contentment in this situation than all his grandeur had ever yielded him. "I have tasted," said he, "more satisfaction in my solitude, in one day, than in all the triumphs of my former reign; and I find that the sincere study, profession, and practice of the Christian religion, hath in it such joys and sweetness as courts are strangers to."

THE PRAYING PREACHER.

THE godly Welsh preacher, Mr. Williams of Wern, said, "the old ministers were not much better preachers than we are: and in many respects they were inferior: but there was unction about their ministry, and success attendant upon it, now but seldom seen. And what is the cause of the difference? They prayed more than we do. If we would prevail and have power with men, we must first prevail and have "power with God." It was on his knees that Jacob became a prince; and if we would become princes, we must be oftener and more importunate upon our knees.

He loved to tell an anecdote of Rev. Mr. Griffith of Caernarvon, who was to preach one night in a farm house, and some time before the service began, wished to retire to a private room. He remained there some time after the congregation assembled. As there was no sign of the preacher making his appearance, the good man of the house sent the servant to request him to come, as the people had been some time waiting. On approaching the door she heard what she supposed to to be a conversation carried on between two persons in rather a subdued tone of voice. She stood listening at the door, and heard one say to the other, "I will not go unless thou come with me." The girl returned to her master, and said, "there is some one with Mr. Griffith, and he tells him that he will not come unless the other accompany him. I did not hear the other make a reply, so I conclude he will not come from there to-night." "Yes, yes, he will," said the good man; "and the other will come with him, if matters are as you represent them. We shall begin the service by singing and reading till the two come." At length Mr. Griffith came and they had an extraordinary meeting that night. It proved the commencement of a powerful revival in the neighborhood, and many were converted to God. "Nothing, brethren," Mr. Williams would say, "is necessary to render our ministry as efficient and successful as that of our fathers, but that we should be brought to the same spirit and mind."

FAVORITE IDOLS.

WHAT Jesus Christ demands of us, He demands in the name of God. And if we refuse it, we refuse it to God; that is, to Him from whom we receive everything, to whom we owe everything, and without whom we are nothing. This consideration annihilates every species of justification which we would base upon the small number, or the insignificance of the objects which we refuse. It is the same thing to refuse God one of the hairs of our head as a world. It matters little whether we accede to God on a thousand points, if we resist Him on one. A single premeditated or voluntary act of disobedience effaces all our acts of obedience. As soon as we believe that we may withold anything from God, it is clear that He is no longer a God to us. For that holy hallowed name places a seal upon the least of our obligations as inviolable as upon the sum total of our duties. And in this case we may apply the excellent reasoning of the Apostle James: "Whoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." For He that said, "Do not commit adultery, said also, do not kill." The smallest duty, if we consider Him who imposes it, is of the same rank as the whole moral code.

What, then, imports our refusal in a single point, if it be even the most insignificant? Nothing else than this: We refuse God our hearts! If our hearts were His, we should not refuse Him anything. Now, it is neither our acts nor our habits, in themselves, that he He cares about—but the disposition which our acts reveal to Him. In refusing Him anything whatever we refuse Him our hearts, we refuse Him everything.

But we do more than this. We not only refuse the heart to God, but we give it to another. There is then another object which we prefer to God. Now the object we prefer to God is evidently a god to us; and the worship which we refuse to God we transfer to this other object. This object becomes, thenceforward, that of our worship, an isolated idol which we oppose to the only true and ever blessed God; and the exterior worship which we continue to render to the Lord is only a foolish, outrageous, and impious derision!—Selected.

WASHINGTON AND THE CORPORAL.

DURING the revolution, it is said, the commander of a little squad was giving orders to those under him, relative to a stick of timber which they were endeavoring to raise up to the top of some military works they were repairing. The timber went up hard, and on this account, the voice of the little great man was oftener heard, in regular vociferations of "Heave away, there! There she goes! Heave, ho!" An officer, not in military costume, was passing, and asked the commander why he did not take hold, and render a little aid. The latter, turning round, with all the pomp of an emperor, said, "Sir, I am a corporal!"

"You are, are you?" replied the officer. "I was not aware of that;" and taking off his hat and bowing, "I ask your pardon, Mr. Corporal." Upon this, he dismounted, and lifted till the sweat stood in drops on his forehead. And when finished, turning to the commander, he said, "Mr. Corporal, when you have another such job, and have not men enough, send for your Commander-in-chief, and I will come and help you a second time." The corporal was thunder-struck! It was Washington.—Selected by L. C. T.

Letters and Extracts.

FROM THOMAS W. VAUGHN.

MIDDLE BASS, OHIO, March 7, 1868.

BR. STORRS: Obituary notices are not always reliable evidence of the character of deceased friends, as the biographer generally strives to put the best side out; but in the case of my aged friend and "Father in the gospel," the late John Pencille, I feel persuaded a few additional remarks, would serve the cause of truth among the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE.

The early education of the deceased among the "Quakers," laid the foundation of deep thought upon all questions connected with "Justification by works," and when he connected himself with the Methodists, on the Bay of Quinte, he soon made his influence felt by contending for "that righteousness which is by faith," "and not of works, lest any man should boast." This brought him in contact with the "priests." He next united with the Christians, and on account of his useful and spotless life, they tolerated his "peculiarities," not without however "laboring with him," "to get him into the water." But the excitement of '43 opened a new theatre for the exercise of his faith, and his labors; and he now found himself connected with the "Church of Brotherly love;" his joy knew no bounds. He now sold his property and gave himself to the work of proclaiming the coming kingdom. This triumph, however, was of short duration. The "Stray Tracts" of Henry Grew and George Storrs of Philadelphia found him prepared to examine, and gladly to embrace the Life doctrines, while his dear brethren, with Wm. Miller and J. V. Himes at their head, were loud in their denunciations of the "heresy" and its authors. This was a great trial to our friend. By degrees the light began to dawn on the minds of the brethren; and once more he could rejoice. But the subject of Baptism was introduced; and all who would not submit to be "dipped" were at once denounced as enemies. Our friend, in violation of his better judgment, suffered himself to be led astray; declaring at the same time, that he "submitted to their faith, as it was not his." This step was ever after a subject of deep regret. In '47 he made the prophecies his especial study, and in so doing he discovered the age to come to be filled with the most delightful description of the purposes of our heavenly Father toward our fallen race. It was soon agitated in the church, and our friend now had a field of usefulness to his mind.

About the year 1850, however, church organization began to exhibit its convulsive throes; and the Church of brotherly hate was the immediate result; and our dear brother and myse'f were the first to feel its deadly effects; since which time we have formed an outside guard, fighting their battles and defending their position; but have never been allowed to speak in their assemblies, or defend ourselves although we have been compelled to hear our names cast out as evil; my dear friend frequently classed with "Dathan and Abiram," "Annanias and Saphira."

The churches that committed these offences are now among the things that were; a warning to others to avoid the rocks on which they split. Of the ministers who assisted in these persecutions, few remain as proclaimers and only one whose name is ever seen in the columns of the HERALD OF LIFE as an advocate of the Life views.

Perhaps no lover of the truth was more fond of society than the subject of these lines; and yet, such was the afflicting circumstances with which he was surrounded that the latter years of his life became almost isolated, and the infirmities of age (he was 88) prevented him from seeking new fields for the employment of those familiar subjects in connection with our hope which formed the only theme of his constant thoughts, viz., the proclamation of the glad tidings of the coming kingdom, and the resurrection through our LIFE-GIVER.

The connection of the writer with the deceased was of the most endearing character; and the few loving friends, the fruit of our perseverance, can testify to his patience, charity and loving kindness, forgiveness, meekness, long-suffering, gentleness and faith; and his thorough acquaintance with the Scriptures rendered him an invaluable instructor and friend. But he rests from his labors, and sleeps sweetly in Jesus, and heeds not our sorrowing, lonely tears. Lord, "let thy kingdom come."

A SHORT PRAYER.—At the opening of an important meeting, Tingly was once called upon to offer prayer. He bowed before God, and in the presence of his brethren, and prayed as follows: "O Lord, teach us to feel the need of thy grace, and seek it; to know thy will, and do it; to find our place and keep it. Amen."

The language and sentiment of this short prayer were decidedly appropriate, and no one could have grown weary while listening to it. But this could not in truth be said of long prayers which we sometimes hear.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ON all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the LIFE-GIVER, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

MAN'S DESTINY.—IMMORTALITY: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. POST. D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by GEO. STORRS. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on IMMORTALITY, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. POST took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The REVIEWER followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the true teachings of the BIBLE is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

GOD'S WORKS PROGRESSIVE:

OR, as Tertullian says—"In the Creator's universe all things occur in the order of gradual development, each in its proper place." That is—Whatever God has accomplished, so far as known to us, has ever been by a gradual development and a steady accumulation from a lesser to a greater. The work of creation was not accomplished in a day; but from the first movement of "the Spirit of God upon the face of the deep," each succeeding day gave birth to some new development in the process of formation; every day increasing perfection; though every part of the work was perfect in its kind for the designed object or use. We stop not here to inquire whether the materials of which the earth was formed had been in process of accumulation for untold ages prior to the Spirit moving upon the mass to bring order and arrangement out of that which was "without form and void," it might have been so without at all affecting the accuracy of the Mosaic account of creation—but the fact that the actual production of the "heavens and the earth" was by a gradual process is undeniable.

The revelation that God has seen fit to make to men has always been gradual and progressive: all was not revealed at once; and what has been communicated, as prophecy, has had a gradual and progressive development and accomplishment. Take Abraham as an example. First, he is called to "get out of" his "own country;" then he is shown "a land" that is promised him; a son of promise is presented to his mind, Isaac; he learns his seed is to be in bondage 400 years; after that to be brought into the land of Canaan; that from him was to proceed a seed in whom "all the families of the earth were to be blessed; that his posterity should be as the stars of heaven for multitude, etc. All these things in their accomplishment were gradual and progressive, occupying many centuries, and are to have still further developments before the greatest perfection is attained contemplated in these providential works of God.

What is true in the case just contemplated, is true in the general course of God's dealings with men. The fetus does not come to maturity to be ushered into the world in a day; and when the child is born how slow the process by which even its physical nature arrives at maturity; equally gradual and progressive is the development of its mind and mental energy. Improvements in the arts and sciences, on which side soever we look, and in all departments, are gradual. Many of those improvements are the work of ages; others are brought forward more rapidly. A single thought at first set the train in motion that has resulted in mighty developments, which have astonished, delighted, or benefitted mankind. It were easy to trace out a multitude of particulars, but to the reflecting mind this is unnecessary—it will readily call them up.

THE CREATION OF MAN.

Where is the evidence that God acted contrary to what is, evidently, his established order in the creation and development of man? In other words—Where is the evidence that Adam was, at the first period of his existence, such an intellectual and moral giant as the current theology makes him? We are persuaded there is more fancy and assumption than proof of any such giant-like knowledge and holiness as has been attributed to him. It appears to us these assumptions have grown out of that misanthropic spirit which takes delight in maligning Adam's posterity under the pretence of honoring God, and has been the prolific parent of hatred to our fellow men, instead of that love which God requires; and its tendency is to produce despair in the minds of men of ever attaining to that knowledge and holiness which God requires.

ADAM'S INTELLECTUAL NATURE.

We see no reason for departing from the analogy of God's works on this point. His intellect was gradually developed, most likely, like any child's. The animal, or physical, first appears—then, gradually maturing, the intellect commences its development, with one idea or thought at a time. Up to the time Adam took the forbidden fruit he is, evidently, very imperfect in the development of intellect. But says one, "he must have been very wise and knowing, for he gave names to all the cattle, etc." What if he did—does that prove him a giant in knowledge? We know it is said, he gave them names descriptive of their natures, but we know, also, that such a position is mere assumption without proof. Who can tell now what name Adam gave to one of the "living creatures?" And if they could, how can it be proved that that name is any more descriptive of its nature than any other. Parents now delight to try the intellect of their little children; and it not unfrequently happens that these children give some very odd names to some things, and their parents delighted with this effort to use intellect often adopt the name the child has given to an object; and for a time will use the odd name with much pleasure, because it proves to them an opening mind, and this gives them joy. This circumstance of Adam's giving names to beasts, etc., is but a sorry proof of his being such an anomaly in knowledge as our modern theology represents him to have been.

ADAM'S IGNORANCE.

On the other hand his ignorance is notorious. He was too ignorant to know he was "naked;" for he was naked and was "not ashamed." Why was he not ashamed? You may say, "because he was innocent;" but, that was not all—he did not know he was naked: see Gen. iii., 7; he was ignorant, like children, who, to some years, have no more shame than Adam had, and for a similar reason—they have never been taught it, and their intellects are not enough developed to discover it. Further, Adam was so ignorant that he did not know the difference between good and evil. It is useless to say he could not have known this without he had sinned; for God knew that difference, as is evident from his language, Gen. iii., 22, "the man has become as one of us to know good and evil." This language is further proof that Adam had been too ignorant to discern between them, previously. But God had that knowledge without having sinned; and, at a proper time, doubtless, would have communicated it to man, had he been obedient and waited the gradual and progressive order established by his Creator, and thus would have attained that knowledge without the evil that attended his neglect to heed his Maker's instruction. Again—"Adam was a figure," or type, "of him that was to come;" see Rom. v., 14, and compare with 1 Corth. xv., 45. The Second Adam was the anti-type. Did the type come into the world with more knowledge than the anti-type? Jesus was a child, for a time helpless, without knowledge; for "the child Jesus grew—and increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man:" Luke ii. 40, 52. Shall we admit these things of Adam the second and deny them of Adam the first?

ADAM'S HOLINESS.

As on Adam's knowledge the most extravagant notions have been assumed, so in regard to his holiness the most unbounded descriptions have been given of its extent, and how it pervaded his entire being, regulating all his faculties, members and senses, so that he has been made to appear as the sum of all perfection, and a perfect giant in moral life and power. All this has been done, doubtless, thinking to honor God, and the better to show off what monsters in depravity Adam's posterity are. Such persons never seem to have once thought in what a ridiculous light their view places the Creator of Adam; and how perfectly irreconcilable such theory is with the easy victory temptation had over him. Did his Creator make him a giant in holiness, and then suppose there would be any temptation, in the midst of unbounded enjoyment, by simply directing him not to eat of a solitary tree? The idea is supremely absurd; thousands of his posterity have withstood and overcome temptations far greater than that by which Adam fell. Adam at creation had no moral character—he was neither holy nor unholy. There is not one word said of Adam's being holy at his creation. The same is said of him that is said of all the other works of God—he was "very good"—the same is said of "everything God had made;" see Gen. i., 31; but not one word is said of the holiness of any of them. Holiness is a relative quality, and presupposes action toward some other being, preceded by knowledge and understanding, based on choice. Without this there cannot be either holiness or unholiness in any created thing. We conceive that all the talk about Adam's holiness is "mere patch work"—designed to patch up the work of God, but has only shown the pride of men's hearts in desiring to "be as God." Adam was a "very good" animal, of the highest order—designed to be king, or to have dominion over all the others; and possessed with those more perfect faculties which made him capable of developing a moral nature, or of manifesting moral actions by certain appliances called a command, law, or prohibition. Without such command, law, or prohibition, there could have been no development of moral nature or character, and man would have only remained the highest of animals, and like them remained very good, but without the character of holiness or unholiness, for the very sufficient reason, there was nothing to develop such a relative quality.

That Adam was a mere animal, at creation, is further evident from the account of creation; Gen. ii., 7—"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground," etc.; and verse 19, "Out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air," etc. These last, the Lord caused to pass before Adam, to see what he would call them, at the time when he proposed to make Adam "a help meet," or a companion suitable for him: among none of them was such a help meet to be found. Adam was superior to them all, and designed to be their lord; Gen. i., 26; yet, he had the same origin, i. e., from the dust of the ground, with such an organization as gave him faculties for higher developments, and capable of moral manifestations, or capable of attaining unto holiness. "The first Adam was made a living soul;" 1 Corth. xv., 45; not "an immortal soul:" that error lies at the root of all other corruptions of the Scriptures and the truth of God. The honor of making man an immortal being was reserved for the second Adam—he it is that is "made a quickening spirit," or through and by whom any man can attain to immortality; 1 Corth. xv., 45–49.

Adam then, was first developed, if we may use that phrase, an animal, with an aptitude to attain knowledge superior to any other animal, and herein was to consist the "image of God," in which he was created, as appears from Col. iii., 10—"Renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him;" not, renewed in knowledge after the image of Adam, but after the image of Adam's Creator. Adam, himself, after being formed of the dust of the ground, needed and was designed to have this renewal [this renovo—to make new] in knowledge after the image of his Maker.

Adam, therefore, did not "lose the image of God," as the current theology teaches, and for which teaching there is not one word of authority from Genesis to Revelation; nor did he lose holiness, for he had none to lose prior to his trial; till then a moral character was not developed—till then he was very good, in common with the animals and other works of God, but was no more holy than the beasts of the field were holy: he could not therefore actually lose what he did not really possess. He did possess a capacity for holiness; that capacity he did not lose by his disobedience; but it developed itself in a wrong direction—it now for the first time became manifest that he possessed such a power—he now, for the first time, came to know the difference between good and evil—he knew not the one from the other previously; but now, said God, "the man is become as one of us to know good and evil"—has attained to a knowledge that exhibits the image of God; he has indeed attained to it by an improper course, but still he has attained it. But, says one, "Adam lost knowledge." So speaks the current theology; but, it is to give God the lie, and charge the God of truth with uttering a falsehood. God declared he had gained knowledge. Who is this that blasphemeth his Maker by affirming the contrary? But, continues the objector, "It is evident that Adam lost knowledge, for he attempted to hide himself among the trees of the garden, which he would not have done if he had not lost the knowledge of God's omnipresence." This is another pure assumption. Where is the evidence that Adam ever had the knowledge of God's omnipresence? Or, that any such knowledge had ever been communicated to him? There is none—he seems to have regarded God as any child regards his father; and when he is conscious he has been doing wrong he is afraid to see his father, and strives to hide himself; just so Adam acted, and for the same reason—i. e., "shame."

DISHONORING GOD.—No. 2

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

ANY theory, no matter by whom advocated, that charges that God will do an unnecessary act, "charges God foolishly," and consequently dishonors him. To illustrate: if it be true that all men at death enter immediately on their reward, there is no possible necessity for a resurrection of the dead, no need of a second coming of Christ, and all talk about a future judgment is sheer nonsense. The coming of Christ, resurrection of the dead and a future judgment, cannot possibly change the condition of the human family in the smallest degree, either for better or worse. No wonder, then, that those who hold the above view, while from the plain reading of the word of God they are compelled to admit that Christ will come, that there will be a resurrection from the dead, make these points of truth of no practical importance whatever. No wonder that in their ministrations in holy things they say nothing about these great facts of God's inspired word, except it may be that they are sometimes compelled to say that they believe them, to satisfy certain members of their own congregations, who have had the spirit of inquiry stirred up in their minds by listening to men who aim to "declare all the counsel of God." Numerous indeed are the men who can see, and are constantly talking about, the glaring inconsistencies of the people we have named above, who at the same time appear not to be conscious that quite as startling a contradiction is found in their own teachings. We listened to a preacher, a short time since, who believes and preaches that "the wages of sin," the penalty of God's law, "is death." This preacher, in the course of his sermon, took us into the first part of the twentieth chapter of Revelations, and took the position that the entire thing was literal; devil, chain, bottomless pit, and all. On this hypothesis he told us that a literal devil was to be bound one thousand years, and at the end of that time let out of his prison, and the wicked dead would be raised to life, and the devil sent out to deceive them. We ask, on the principle that death is the penalty of God's law, is this work needed? In the first place, if God's law only demands the death of the sinner, is it really necessary to make him alive when he is dead already—"dead as he can be"—simply in order to get him dead? To my mind, it is just as foolish to reason in this way as it would be for a man who had a fine residence to argue that he could have a good house unless he tore down the one he lived in, and out of the same materials erected another just like it. Would it be anything more than a house after he got it up a second time? Certainly not. If it was it would defeat the plan. The original plan was to have a house, and a house only. Is it a better house than the first? Why, no. The plan, so far from admitting of any improvement, positively requires that the second house shall be precisely like the first. In the name of reason why did he tear the house down? Surely, all will exclaim, I should not like to employ such a man to do business for me.

But your view of divine penalty is precisely like this. You say, the law simply asks for the death of the sinner. Yes. Is not the sinner dead? Yes. What killed him? The law. Who was the author of that law? God. Well, if the sinner is let alone, is he not dead—"as dead as he can be"—dead eternally? O, yes. And if God raises him from the dead and kills him again, will he be any more than dead? O, no. That would defeat the plan; for the plan requires that he shall be exactly dead, no more and no less. And still you believe that God will raise him, just for the purpose of making him dead! My dear brother, your God is a very bad financier. But this is not the worst side of your picture. By the touch of your theological brush you have brought out a literal devil. That devil with his horrid display of head and horns, to say nothing of the length of his tail (for the devil of ch. xx., is the same as that of ch. xii.) is to walk up and down in the earth, and to the best of his ability, torment, trouble, perplex, tempt, harass and plague the sons and daughters of a fallen race, in order to incite them to the committal of all sorts of crimes, for six thousand years. At the end of this period, and when probation for the entire race has ended, the devil is shut up, and chained. But after keeping a Millennial Sabbath, per force, in the bottomless pit, he is let out. And for what? Why, to deceive the nations of wicked men that God has raised from the dead, for the express design of letting this same devil plague them. And for what purpose is this? Is there any possible good can come of it? Is there one out of this vast throng—as numerous as the sands on the sea-shore—who will have one chance afforded him, by a virtuous rejection of this last temptation of the devil, to be benefitted, and gain eternal life? O, no; the doom of every soul in the vast assemblage is irrevocably sealed to eternal death. So, while you believe and preach that the only divine penalty noted in the Scriptures of truth, is death, and that when a man is dead he is dead as he can be; still, God will not only do the foolish thing to take him out of a certain condition, just to put him back into that same condition, but you add to this an act that could never be done except by a being possessed of a malignant heart. It would seem bad enough for one to believe that God, without any show of necessity, will raise men to life just for the pleasure of killing them again. But when you tell me that he will not only do this, but let out on them an almost immortal devil for no other conceivable objects only to gratify himself by viewing the deception practised on them, their deep trouble, and final discomfiture, I must tell you, that however good your heart may be, your theory dishonors God.

EATONTOWN, N. J.

LIGHT OF TRUTH.

OUR Saviour, in that greatest of all sermons that ever proceeded from mortal lips, charged his hearers in the following terms: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Matt. v., 16. It is evident that the light here spoken of is the light of truth. In the divine economy exhibited in the gospel dispensation, truth is the great medium, or means of sancifiction. Jesus' prayer concerning his followers was, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." This does not antagonize with Paul's assertion that men are chosen to salvation "through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." 2 Thes. ii., 13. Nor with the language of Peter, "Through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience;" for, an exercise of faith, belief of truth, is a condition precedent to becoming a subject of an impartion of the Spirit. This is fully set forth in the language of Paul in Hebrews xi., 6; "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." The leading, and immeasurably important truth that there is such an eternal Being, of infinite power and goodness, together with the other truth that this infinite Being blesses, protects, and will save those who seek and serve him, must first be established in the mind. Believers in those truths are, if obedient to the suggestions of a conscience thus enlightened, sanctified, and just in proportion as they prayerfully, carefully, and diligently seek other gospel truths, and submit to their influence, will they be more thoroughly and eminently sanctified, made holy. But it may be urged that some Christians of comparatively small attainments in the knowledge of revealed truth possess the quality of holiness in more eminent degree, and enjoy richer and deeper religious experience than many others who have clearer understandings of the word of God. Alas! for a certain class of Christians, this is too true. But it is evidence of just two things: firstly, that mere theoretical knowledge of truth avails nothing, save imposing an increase of responsibility; and secondly, that some Christians are more attentive and obedient to the enlightening influences of truth upon the mind, and are more faithful in the discharge of attendant responsibilities than others. One man, brought to a knowledge of a few divine truths through the instrumentality of some apostle of Christ, for instance, may, without ever being able to read the Bible, assisted by that grace which ever accompanies the word, yield such implicit obedience to every intimation of duty, thus securing precious gifts of the Spirit, as richly to experience the sanctifying operation of the truths received; while another, through personal research of the Scriptures, may be correctly informed respecting very much of revelation, and yet so partial be the surrender of his mental faculties to the illuminating and purifying power of truth, that his natural propensities will continue to predominate; the truth be held, to a very great extent, speculatively, its power be little felt, and feeble indeed be the Spirit's promptings. There may, therefore, be such a spectacle as some Christians holding "truth in unrighteousness." Not, however, be it understood, that all the truth they possess is thus held. If a man practices strict fidelity to all manifestations of duty resulting from an unhindered operation upon the mind of all the truth received, he holds all in righteousness. If, however, he do this only partially, seeing and recognizing as such, certain truths which, upon any consideration, however seemingly wise, he casts aside and treats as error; or, if he holds them as truths, but so smothers them as to prevent any outspreading of their power, then so much of truth concerning which this is so, is held by him in unrighteousness. Indeed, where this is the case no truth can be held in an eminent degree of righteousness, because of the intimate relationship sustained by gospel truths each to the other. In proportion as gospel truths are permitted to exercise their sanctifying influence upon our minds, do we, through the medium of good works, reflect their glorious light. Good works are, in fact, the only medium whereby we can let the light of truth, that we have received, shine out upon others. In surpassing wisdom, too, is this the case, for the acts of every consistent disciple of Christ proclaim in incontrovertible terms the elevating and cleansing power of truth, which is thus forcibly commended to unbelievers.

Laborers in the vineyard of the Lord should always studiously endeavor to show forth the beauty of holiness, making their daily walk a continual and living proclamation of saving truth. Important is it that we do this, because we thus become instrumental in leading others to a recognition of truth respecting God's goodness and love, and so into the "bond of peace," and on to salvation. "Freely ye have received, freely give," is the injunction of him who "was rich," but for our sakes "became poor," that we "through his poverty might be rich."

Do our minds, where once the worse than Egyptian darkness of ignorance, error, and sin had its habitation, now glow with wondrous brightness, shed by a saving knowledge of God and of his revealed will and purposes? Hand it unto others, that they, too, may rejoice in it, and be exceeding glad. Let it freely shine out, that its beauty and power may be seen and felt by our fellow men. That is effective presentation of truth. We may talk it, but if we fail to live it our words will be as "sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." Nay, if while we talk it we show not forth its power by godly example our lives will be accepted by all opposers of truth as sufficient refutation of the doctrines sought to be established. When Alexander the Great visited the Greek philosopher, Diogenes, he asked if there was anything that he could give him. Diogenes replied, "I want nothing but that you should not stand between me and the sun." Christians should always act in the spirit of that reply so far as never to rest satisfied with anything that stands between them and the light of gospel truth, nor permit anything to prevent that light from radiating through the medium of good works, and shedding its beneficent light and warmth upon all around. If faithfulness on our part seems to derive moment from the consideration that we thus greatly benefit our fellows, how vastly more important does it become when regarded as a means both of ourselves glorifying our "Father which is in heaven," and of winning others to a condition in which they may accomplish that great object of their being. May we all, then, as sincere Christian men and women, earnestly and diligently seek truth that we may be the better enabled to effectually shed light upon the pathway of others, exalt the great name and office of Christ in an ungodly world, and glorify God. THE KINGDOM AND REIGN OF CHRIST.

TESTIMONY OF BAPTIST DIVINES.

IN their confession of faith, presented to Charles II., A. D. 1660, and signed by forty-one elders and deacons, they say:

"We believe that there will be an order in the resurrection? Christ is the first-fruits, and then next, or after, they that are Christ's at his coming; then, or afterward, cometh the end. Concerning the kingdom and reign of our Lord Jesus Christ, as we do believe that he is now in heaven at his Father's right hand, so we do believe that, at the time appointed of the Father, he shall come again in power and great glory; and that at or after his coming the second time, he will not only raise the dead, and judge and restore the world, but will also take to himself his kingdom, and will, according to the Scriptures, reign on the throne of his Father David, on Mount Zion, in Jerusalem, forever.

We believe that the kingdom of our Lord will be a universal kindom, and that in this kingdom the Lord Jesus Christ himself will be alone, visible, supreme Lord and King of the whole earth.

We believe that as this kingdom will be universal, so it will be also an everlasting kingdom that shall have no end, nor cannot be shaken; in which kingdom the saints and faithful in Christ Jesus shall receive the end of their faith, even the salvation of their souls; where the Lord is they shall be also.

We believe that the New Jerusalem that shall come down from God out of heaven, when the tabernacle of God shall be with them, and he will dwell among them, will be the metropolitan city of this kingdom, and will be the glorious place of residence of both Christ and his saints forever, and will be so situated as that the kingly palace will be on Mount Zion, the holy hill of David, where his throne was."—Crosby's Hist. of the Baptist.

LOVING CHRIST'S APPEARING.

THOSE who love not the appearing of Christ in his glory cannot expect salvation when he comes. Our Lord said, "And when these things (signs of his coming) begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Luke xxi., 28.

The apostle Paul said, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: (day of Christ appearing and kingdom, see verse 1); and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim. iv., 8.

Richard Baxter said, "Would it not rejoice your hearts if you were sure to live to see the coming of the Lord, and to see his glorious appearing and retinue? If you were not to die, but to be caught up thus to meet the Lord, would you be averse to this? Would it not be the greatest joy that you could desire? For my own part, I must confess to you that death, as death, appeareth to me as an enemy, and my nature doth abhor and fear it. But the thoughts of the coming of the Lord are most sweet and joyful to me, so that if I were but sure that I should live to see it, and that the trumpet should sound, and the dead should rise and the Lord appear, before the period of my age, it would be the joyfullest tidings to me in the world. O, that I might see his kingdom come! It is the character of his saints to love his appearing, and to look for that blessed hope; 'The Spirit and the bride say come; even so, come, Lord Jesus.' Come quickly, is the voice of faith, and hope, and love. But I find not that his servants are thus characterized by their desire to die. It is therefore the presence of their Lord that they desire, but it is death that they abhor, and, therefore, though they can submit to death, it is the coming of Christ that they love and long for. If death be the last enemy to be destroyed at the resurrection, we may learn how earnestly believers should long and pray for the second coming of Christ, when this full and final conquest shall be made. There is something in death that is penal, even to believers; but in the coming of Christ and their resurrection there is nothing but glorifying grace."—Works, Vol. 17, p. 555–590.

From L. D. Tanner.

Marathon, N. Y., March 29, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I am of opinion no true follower of Christ, or honest man, was ever indifferent to what might be said about him. Although this should not be exclusively his rule of action. What God knows about him: or, what should be about the same thing (if he walks in the light) what he knows of himself, should direct him in the path of daily duty. I am not rich in this world's goods, and am not aware of a desire to be, yet I try to improve my time, and use my strength, in productive employments, and should regard myself as mocking a kind Providence if I called myself poor; and also I would regard myself despiteful of the duties I owe to my race, if I plead poverty as an excuse for not paying an editor; especially one engaged in telling unpopular truths to popular pious men: for that of all other things, I think the most thankless employment any man or woman ever engaged in.

I am in a section where dairying is the prevailing business, and am connected with a cheese-factory; depression in the market has induced our salesmen to hold our cheese, so that we, as a community, are scant of money; few can borrow, fewer can lend, but as I am vastly interested in the pamphlet-publication of the Hartford debate on the Bible: if it will have any tendency to forward the publication, please accept the inclosed one dollar, to help publish the "Defence."

I suppose that those who subscribe for the publishing, will receive some of their money's worth in the pamphlets, when published; and it would seem to me as if you would soon have the small amount you ask for, subscribed, twice over, if only by dollar subscriptions, if the work is really appreciated, according to its true merits. By saying this, I do not object to persons who are out of debt (as I am not) and able, signing five, ten, or even fifty dollars, as I regard the work a long; noble step in the right direction.

I observed one thing in getting the articles read as published in the Herald (for I can read very little myself) that persons unused to hearing debates, seemed to lose much of the emphasis of the argument, from the fact that the points of accusation against the Bible, made by the other side were not fully stated. I think, therefore, if it were admissible for the editor to state these a little more at large, it would add to the readable interest of the work, if not to to its essential force. If things shape favorably I will try to do better for the work than the inclosed.

Note by the Editor:—If Br. Tanner's suggestion had come to hand sooner, we might have added notes to state the points of objection to the Bible more fully; yet if the "Resolution," with which the discussion started is kept in mind, and the quotation marks in our Defence are observed, we think those who are able to read it themselves cannot fail to see what the points are. The Defence is nearly all stereotyped, and it is impossible now to make the explanations suggested.

From Dr. A. T. Crippen.

Harrison, Ohio, March 31, 1868.

Br. Storrs: It is only within the last few months that I was aware that such a paper as the Herald of Life was in existence: a paper advocating the doctrine of "Life only in Christ;" and I must acknowledge that I am almost converted. When I look at the plan of salvation in the light of man as a mortal being, and his Creator offering him immortality, eternal life, through Jesus, the Christ, the Son of the living God, I can see a beauty in it that I never could see in an all-wise Creator, creating immortal beings and consigning them to torments without end; knowing when he made the first pair that such a destiny was a possible result to the race. I have been examining the question of the second death for several years, and had nearly made up my mind that the wicked dead must be raised, judged and then destroyed: but since I have read some of your papers and pamphlets, and examined Scripture with friends, I have almost come to the conclusion that, as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall be made alive: that is, all in Christ.

S. R. Clinkinbead, Moulton, Ill., writes: Times are hard here, but I will send some money for the Herald of Life soon as I can. Thanks be to God that I see the truth. I am a lonely pilgrim here, and have orthodoxy and the worldlings to contend with, and nothing but the Bible and the blessed truths which come in the paper preaching the gospel, the good news, the glorious truth of no life out of Christ—no future life to the wicked. It takes a good soldier to face, alone, the doctrines of the popular theology and the scoffs of the world. But by God's assistance I can and do earnestly contend for the truth. O how I long to see the day when the Redeemer shall come. May it be soon. May we all be found faithful when he shall appear.

Cheap Sermons.

Some one curious in these matters has made a calculation in regard to the salaries paid to ministers in this country and the number of sermons preached, that the average price paid for a sermon, take the land through, is only three cents.

Very likely that is more than they are worth, on "the average," judging from many samples. Better spend your money for a Bible and a good Concordance.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

NEW YORK, APRIL 8, 1868.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

RESPONSIBILITIES.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"Life from the Dead."

The second thousand of this work will be ready in a few days, and a large portion of them are already engaged. A few dollars are pledged on the third thousand. Let the work go on. It is a good work, and in the right direction. Let those who can, supply the funds, and let all who will circulate them to such as will read, send us their orders for the work without money and without price, except that you send the cost for postage, which is 12 cents for 10 copies, 20 cents for 18 copies, and in that proportion for a larger number. If sent by Express you can pay the charges on delivery.

"Defence of the Bible."

This work is nearly ready to go to press. Those who wish to be supplied with it should send in their orders. Let us know how many you will have, and how they shall be sent. It is to be printed on the same sized page as Life from the Dead: perhaps not much, if any, over half the number of pages, but necessarily will cost double, for the first thousand, because of the expense of stereotyping the work. After the first edition is paid for, the cost per 1,000 will be much diminished. Would it not be well to have a copy to accompany each one of Life from the Dead. In some cases, doubtless, it will be best to give the Defence first, and present the other work afterward. "Wisdom is profitable to direct."

Send what funds you can, and we will send in return, if you want, its full value in the work, the amount at cost, whatever that is found to be, when the work is ready for delivery.

"Can you Believe?"

This Tract is now ready. It is on one leaf of two pages, and sold at 30 cents per hundred, including postage. A thousand have already been sent off, but we can now multiply them to any amount at the shortest notice. Scatter them like leaves, everywhere.

Twenty Questions on Immortality.

This tract, of two pages, would be a good accompaniment to the one above, and is sold at the same price. Let us all work while it is day.

Regular Contributions.

To publish tracts and cheap works, to scatter as widely as possible, it is essential to have a systematic and regular supply of funds. One edition of Life from the Dead, of 1,000 copies, has already been scattered at a cost of only $50, and a second 1,000 is provided for, and will be ready in a few days; but other works are also needed. Br. D. B. Salter, of Saltersville, N. J., proposes regular monthly contributions for this object, and invites all to contribute something, each according to their several ability, and as the Lord shall enable them to do. This, or some other method, seems necessary for the prosperity and continuance of the work. Br. Salter pledges $5 per month for this object. Shall we adopt this plan? We wait for your response.

Our "Correspondent's Difficulty."

We refer to this subject again, because our friend seems to think we could not mean what we said about "authority" to preach. He says:

> Your declaration stands unexplained, "We, as a body, have no organization;" and in your explanation, you say, "We, in our ignorance, forty years ago, received the 'authority' our friend speaks of." This you certainly did not mean to say.

We certainly did "mean to say" just that. Our friend supposed, if we understood him, that organizations were essential to give "authority" to preach. Through such an organization, forty years ago, we supposed the same thing; and hence, in our then ignorance, we submitted to "take authority" from the hands of one of the bishops of such an organization; which ceremony we now regard as a simple assumption of human invention, to aggrandize a class called ministers, to the exclusion of the great body of the "Royal Priesthood"—the church universal, or every member of Christ's body, who have an equal right to use the ability God has given them "to read the word of God, and to proclaim the same" to others, as they have time and opportunity; which right is abridged by all these human organizations, so that none but a certain class, called the ministry, have the right to proclaim what they have learned from the Word of God to others; or, if they presume to do it, they are liable to be disciplined and excluded from these organizations if they should differ from that class, by way of eminence, called ministers; thus enslaving and forbidding to speak in the name of Jesus the class called "laity;" and hence become "lords over God's heritage." Our friend goes on to say:

> Afterwards you declare that your "authority is God-given."

Yes, and we repeat it. The "authority" we spoke of receiving forty years ago at the hands of a man-made bishop, was not God-given; because no bishop or priest of any class has any right or power to confer such authority on any other man: it is one of the assumptions which have grown out of the system of exalting one class of Christians above another; and allowing them to determine what other Christians shall believe, and how they shall understand the word of God, and imposing pains and penalties upon them if they presume to use the understanding God has given them to learn what God has said, and tell others what they have learned. Such an assumption of power was the Papal abomination; and we are sorry to say it, yet the truth compels us to do so, that the Protestant organizations, all give evidence that they copy from the Roman harlot, by exalting a class of men and clothing them with the exclusive right to tell their brethren authoritatively, what the word of God teaches. If that were true, all the money and sacrifices that have been expended in giving the Bible to the people has been the height of folly; for, after all, the priests are to determine what the Bible teaches, and the laity are to hold their tongues, if they differ from the self-authorized priesthood. Rome did no worse than this.

We wish not to be misunderstood in these remarks. We believe, in the exercise of the gifts God has bestowed on the church, there will be found a variety; and that some may be called to exercise their gifts more publicly than others; and that the church may be led, from seeing their gifts, to wish the exercise of them in a more public manner than the ordinary gifts are used; and if the body wish to use those gifts for its special benefit, they have a right to call for such use, "not as lords over God's heritage, but as helpers of their joy." Then it becomes the duty of the body to sustain them, pecuniarily, in the work to which they themselves have called them; but this position gives them no right or power to confer on others "authority" to "read the word of God and to preach the same." If they have that authority, we repeat it, it is God-given, not through any other man, or body of men; but by the direct gift of God, who distributeth his gifts according to his own will. Our friend next asks:

> If you have the authority, where do you find it, if you deny that Christ gave it to you through the apostles? To the apostles he gave the commission, and they were to preach (or teach) and to baptize.

Christ gave his apostles authority to proclaim the glad tidings, and to teach "all things whatsoever he had spoken unto them." He gave them no authority to teach anything else; and he promised them the Holy Spirit to bring these things to their "remembrance." Thus far their inspiration went, and no farther. Let our friend show us where in "the commission" Jesus Christ gave his apostles authority to appoint successors, if he can. Where is "the law, or the testimony" for such a view of apostolic authority? It was indeed necessary, while the church was without the personal presence of the apostles, and without the written word, to select faithful men to whom was committed the work of seeing that the testimony the apostles had delivered was not corrupted; but these men were not the successors of the apostles, nor had they power to confer on any one the Holy Spirit, by the laying on of hands; this was exclusively a work of the apostles, as they were Christ's legates; or acted for him.

As the apostles had no power to constitute any successors, they never had any; and all who have claimed to be such from that day to this, are mere pretenders; nay, more; they are usurpers of Christ's authority, and imitators of the Romish apostacy, standing in the "temple of God, showing themselves to be"—what? not ministers of Christ—but self-made dictators to the body of Christ—exalting themselves over the body—suppressing the truth, oftentimes, and commanding men to do what Christ has not commanded; or, forbidding them to do and believe what Christ has enjoined. Such has been the awful result of the combination called "Successors of the Apostles."

Here, again, we wish not to be misunderstood. We do not mean that all the men who have been drawn into such combinations are bad men. No; many of them are men who love and fear God, and have done the best they could, in their circumstances, to be a blessing to their fellow men. But the combination spoken of, has crippled them, and circumscribed their usefulness, and led them into many theological errors, and enslaved them to forms and ceremonies, which have been a yoke of bondage; and which has kept the gospel from having free course to run and be glorified. It is not the men we are contending against, but the system; the assumption that the apostles have successors—men authorized to do and teach as they did. If they had, why not write Epistles and incorporate them in the Bible as of equal authority with those of the apostles? If you would be shocked by such an assumption, why not equally so at their claim to apostolical succession? Is one more shocking and blasphemous than the other? These questions ought to open the eyes of thinking men, and cause them to fall back on the only authoritative preacher God has ordained, viz., the Bible, in an humble dependence on his Holy Spirit to lead us into all truth: then "every one of us"—Christian men and women—communicate to others, as we have time and opportunity, the light and truth which we have learned. Thus we have a "Royal Priesthood;" a Bible ministry.

If a class of men claim to be the successors of the apostles, and to have the same "commission" to do and teach as the apostles did, why have we not the right to demand of them to do all that the apostles did? Why select certain things from the apostolic "commission" and reject others? Why not show themselves real successors by healing the sick, raising the dead, casting out devils, causing the lame to walk, as did Peter, even one who was lame from his birth? Yea, why not lay their hands on their converts and have the Holy Spirit come on them, with all its miracle-working power? Let them show the signs of their successorship, before they pretend they have the same "commission" the apostles had. Wonderful "successors!" They can do one thing that some of the apostles did; though Paul declared that was not in his "commission;" for, said he, "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel." Till they can show more clearly they have any claim to be regarded as having the same commission the apostles had, we shall not ask or receive any of their pretended "authority" to proclaim life through Christ, for the perishing.

To our friend's remarks on the baptism of the Holy Spirit, etc., we must refer him to our work on the "Essential Baptism," where we think he will find all the answer he needs; and we are quite sure our readers, generally, do not wish us to go over that ground again, at present. Our friend says:

> There is a true organization, called the church; for Jesus said he would build it.

Undoubtedly, Christ has a true church and it is equally undoubted that He builds it. If a man or woman is brought into this organization, it is by the action of the Lord himself. "I will build my church," said Jesus; and the apostles testify, "The Lord added to the church." You never hear them say, "We added to the church;" or, "They were added to the church by baptism," or any other rite. Christ adds to his church, himself, by imparting to believers the Holy Spirit, according to his promise; so Paul saith, "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body;" and adds, "Now are ye the body of Christ, and members in particular." 1 Cor. xii., 13, 27. That is the "true organization" of the church of Christ. It is not of man nor of man's invention, like all those organizations called churches in these days, which take names of human invention, and unknown to Christ or his apostles.

To the one church of Christ, added thereto by the Lord, we claim to belong. To that organization we cleave with all our heart; and we acknowledge no other authority to command or teach us, save that of the Head of this church. The bond of union in this church is love: "God is love: he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God and God in him." All who manifest this love we recognize as being in this true church organization, and accept them as of Christ's building. These, each, are of the royal priesthood, and are authorized by Christ to proclaim his truth, without let or hindrance from any of these self-made organizations, called churches.

We hope that we have given our friend and all others, so clear an understanding of our position that his mind may be at rest, as ours is, on these questions. We are trying to "forget the things which are behind"—leaving the "shadows"—and going "on to perfection," as Paul exhorted the Hebrew Christians to do; and "this will we do, if God permit;" never forgetting that our responsibility is to God, and not to man, or any body of men; for, "every one of us must give account of himself to God." Let all see to it that they so regulate their belief and practice, that it shall not be found to be "wood, hay and stubble," which "perish with the using," and will not stand in the fiery trial, by that Being who "looketh on the heart," and will not accept forms or ceremonies in its stead.

"Would not try to be a Christian."

P. H. Tripp, Stockton, Cal., writes: We have a great many church members that when I speak to them about life only in Christ, they tell me "That is heresy; and if we thought it was true we would not try to be Christians." I think it is a good test.

We have long been satisfied "it is a good test," and a detector of hypocrites. A professed Christian who would not try to be one, if there are no eternal torments to be feared, and would not serve God and devote himself to Christ, who has died and rose again that we might have life from the dead and live eternally, is no Christian at all: he has "a name to live, and is dead." All that he tries to be a Christian for, is to escape the theological hell. The love of God and of Christ has no charms for him. The promise of eternal life offers no inducement for him to try to be a Christian. How dark and hard must be such a heart. Who would not pity such an one?

Does that person ever pray that he may not be deceived in regard to his real state before God? If so, what is his concern, or anxiety, on the subject? Is it a fear that he may not be pleasing in the sight of God and his Christ? or, is it a fear of hell torments? Does he know there is no tormenting fear in love? Perfect love casteth out such fear. But how is it possible that such love can exist with a God before his eyes who has provided for him, in case of failure, a hell of indescribable and unending torments? Love to such a being cannot exist so as to control the heart and life under all circumstances; or, if it does, it must be because the person loses sight of the awful risk he runs, or supposes, from some cause, he is in no danger of such a fate. If his service to God or his pretended trial to be a Christian, is merely to avoid eternal torments, nothing can be clearer than that he is no Christian, and only a self-deceived hypocrite.

"God is love;" and those who would be accepted of him must become "partakers of the divine nature;" that is, they must have his spirit of love in them. If this exists in them, it is the controling power in all they think or do, and they just as naturally cleave to the Lord as a drop of water mingles with the ocean when it falls into it; and if that drop of water could talk, you might as soon expect to hear it say, after its fall into the ocean, "If I could have been certain I would not have fallen into the fire, I would have kept clear of the ocean," as to hear a true Christian say, "If I was certain there was no such thing as eternal torments, I would not try to be a Christian." No true Christian ever uttered such a sentiment. Such an utterance as clearly determines the person to be unreconciled to God as if he swore or got drunk. He clearly has no love to God or his service. He cannot say "I delight to do thy will, O God." That is the language of love to God and his service.

It is dreadful to think how many self-deceived souls are flattering themselves that they are safe because they are striving to keep out of the theological hell. They "hope to go to heaven;" not because they have any love for that place or its employment, but as an alternative. They suppose they have immortal souls that must go to eternal torments, if they do not get to heaven; and as one place or the other must be their eternal abode, they try to be Christians just enough to escape hell; but with no love for heaven or heavenly employment; manifest from their own confession that they would not serve God if they believed there would be no future life to any only such as love God and embrace Christ as their Life-giver. The glories of what they call heaven, have not charms or power enough no induce them to be followers of Christ, if they can only be sure there is no such thing as endless woe to those who do not come to Christ that they might have life. The eternal dominion of death they care not for. All they try to be Christians for, is simply to escape eternal torments. Truly God is love; for even this service, of these hypocrites, shall not go unrewarded. "Verily they have their reward." They will escape the fancied hell. God has never provided such a place as the theological hell, and never will, even to please the preachers of that blasphemy. Hence those who are barely trying to be Christians, to escape it, will have just what they are laboring for. They love sin and would practice it unrestrained, for all any love they have to God or Jesus Christ, if so be they can escape the torments of their imaginary hell. We are thankful they are not to be disappointed in that matter. But, alas, how little do they know of the immensity of their loss. Life from the dead; and that life eternal; Eden restored: joys never to be interrupted by sorrow; all tears wiped away forever; the presence of Christ in his glory, and eternal harmony and love among all the living beings of that glorified state. All this lost!

Surely one would think to avoid such a loss was something for which it is worth trying to be a Christian; yea, all the more worth trying to be from the very consideration that there is no tormenting hell, the wails and woes of which must eternally interrupt the songs and joys of the redeemed, if such a hell existed as the current theology maintains.

But thanks be to God, there is a high and noble stimulus to the service of God, and to be Christians. It is that God is love; and his love as manifested in Christ has a constraining power. "The love of Christ constraineth us," said Paul. If the love of God in Christ will not constrain us to be Christians, we are too debased and earthly-minded to be reached by any other motive ever to bring us to God and eternal life. Let the love God has manifested to us, stimulate us all to be Christians, not in name only, but in deed and in truth. So shall we honor God by a willing and joyful service, and live forever.

Temptation.

> Will you give us your opinion on the words in the Lord's prayer, "Lead us not into temptation." I was in a Bible class, last Sunday, and none seemed able to tell what this text meant. Might it not mean, "Leave us not in temptation?"
> R. G. G.

Whatever else it may mean, it cannot mean that our Father in heaven ever leads any one into temptation to do evil, for James says, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man." Jas. i., 13. This settles the question that God leads no man into temptation to do evil.

The term tempt, signifies to try; especially when spoken of God's dealings with men. The first time it occurrs in the Bible it has this signification. It is the case of Abraham when called to offer up his only son Isaac. It is said, "God did tempt Abraham," etc.; that is, he tried his faith. Men are often said to "tempt God." This conduct is frequently charged upon Israel. And men are charged not to tempt God; that is, not to put him upon an unreasonable trial, going into difficult positions uncalled, and pretending that God is pledged to take care of them and to deliver them. Where God clearly calls us, there let us go; but let us be sure he has called us before we run; and see that no self-seeking design leads us on. "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God" by "casting thyself down" for your own selfish ends, or to gratify friends, or to show defiance to enemies; and only when God clearly demands it of you.

"Lead us not into temptation," clearly means no more than, Preserve us from such circumstances as might overpower us, or prove too strong for us; and thus lead us to sin. "But deliver us from evil," is an appropriate accompaniment of the previous petition. Such we judge is the true import of the text.

Hebrews vi., 4–6.

A friend requests of us an "explanation and interpretation" of these verses. They read as follows:

> "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance; seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame."

To understand a text of Scripture, we must have an understanding of the circumstances of those to whom the address is made and the object of the speaker or writer. This Epistle was written to arrest apostacy among Hebrew Christians. Its chronology shows it was written about A. D. 63, or near thirty years after our Lord's ascension to heaven. Previous to his death, he had informed his disciples that Jerusalem should be overthrown and the temple destroyed. Years had now passed, and that prophecy of Jesus had not shown any signs of being accomplished. The result was, that Jewish converts, under persecution from unbelieving Jews, were fast apostatizing. This was brought on by the hostility of infidel Jews, who used, 1st, Argument; 2d, Terror to induce the Christian Jews to abandon their faith in Jesus. To these efforts the apostle opposed, 1st, Argument; and then, 2d, The terror of God and perdition to such as did wilfully apostatize. Keep these facts in mind and we shall have but little difficulty in understanding the entire Epistle. The Apostle, in argument, first contrasts the system by Moses and that by Jesus Christ; and shows the superiority of the latter, in many respects. While the former was given to and by the fathers and prophets, the latter was by God's Son, who was not only superior to Moses, but to the angels. But if those who received the law by Moses, and transgressed it, would certainly not escape its threatened judgments, but receive a just recompense of reward; how shall those escape who have the words spoken by the Son of God himself, and who had also received of the Spirit Jesus promised to bestow on those who believed on his name. In the 2d chapter the Apostle contrasts the great difference between the Mosaic dispensation, and the one by Christ, the Son of God.

He also cautions them against unbelief: shows them how destructive that sin was to ancient Israel—shutting them out of the promised land, and causing their carcasses to fall in the wilderness; and he exhorts them to beware of a like sin in relation to the rest the Son of God was to give his faithful adherents, and encourages them by the fact that Christ was now acting as a great high priest in heaven, and could be touched with a feeling of their infirmities, having been tempted in all points like as they were: he had encountered Jewish hatred, Jewish infidelity, and resisted their wickedness and persecuting spirit, even to the sacrifice of his life—resisting unto blood, striving against the sin of unbelief in the Jewish rulers.

Having thus shown the great things Jesus had done and was now doing, he exhorts these Hebrew Christians, to leave the things behind and to go on to perfection; i. e., to be made perfect through sufferings (if need be) as the Son of God was, (chap. v., 7–9.) Not to do this, they were in danger of an utter and hopeless apostasy, expressed in the text under consideration; such an apostasy, after having accepted Jesus as the Christ, and having been made partakers of the Spirit, according to his promise, would place them in a condition where no evidence could be brought to produce conviction on them, and hence repentance could not be excited in their minds; for all past evidence and experience had been thrown away by them and Jesus renounced as the Christ; by which rejection of Jesus, they virtually crucified the Son of God afresh and put him to an open shame, inasmuch as such a renunciation, after all that had been done for them, was a greater sin than the actual crucifixion by the unbelieving Jews—it was opening all his wounds afresh, and in fact saying, Jesus was an impostor, and deserved the fate of a malefactor.

Such, in substance, is the sin of the apostasy under consideration. It is a deliberate and wilful rejection of the Son of God after full evidence of his Messiahship, and after they had received those spiritual manifestations which are called tasting of the heavenly gift by being made partakers of the Holy Spirit, which only can give them an entrance into the world to come. Let all take the warning, and cleave unto Christ as the only hope of life future and eternal.

WATER BAPTISM.

A reader of the Herald asks us:

World it not result in good to have the matter fully discussed, as it would certainly relieve some minds in regard to their duty in this matter? Would you have any serious objection to having the subject discussed in the Herald by another party competent with yourself, and bring out all objections pro and con?

This subject was discussed in the Biblo Examiner, several years since, when we had time to attend to it; and our part in that discussion was long ago printed in a tract of 32 pages, octavo: known as the "Essential Baptism." That tract can be had for seven cents, free of postage. In it you will find all that we wish to say on the subject; not that we could not say more, and fortify our position still stronger; yet we are not disposed to take up time or space to multiply words on the subject, and draw off attention from what we consider of far greater importance than our own or any other man's views on this question. We are free to let every man follow the convictions of his own mind about the matter, so that he does not make his conviction a law or rule for others, who have the same right to think and judge for themselves.

We have neither time nor inclination to go into such discussion again. Some of our readers, correspondents, or exchanges, occasionally, seem to force us to say something on the subject. Others express the desire that nothing should be said about it in the Herald. A letter before us, received a few days ago, from a brother, says, "I am a Baptist;" but he adds, "I am sorry the Editor of the Herald does not adhere to his purpose as set forth in his reply to Wm. Montgomery, of Buffalo, a few weeks ago, on the subject of baptism, to refer all inquiries on that subject to his tract, and so keep the Herald free from the discussion of water baptism."

That is just what we wish to do; yet if we are pressed with questions in every possible shape—questions that involve the subject, we must either say something, or let all questions of this character pass unnoticed; and sometimes they involve a censure on our course which, if no one but ourself was concerned, we would gladly let pass; but in our present position, as public property, we must make some response; but we endeavor to do it, so far as possible, in such manner as to avoid further controversy.

We have long since learned, there are two sides to all questions; and if we are not to have any charity toward an opposer to our views till we make him of our opinion, we may as well leave off discussion before we begin.

"THE WORLD OF WOE."

The American Messenger, published by the Am. Tract Soc., makes the following remarks:

"The Justice of Endless Punishment, for the sins of time, is often denied by men, because they reject the testimony of the Bible as to the evil of sin against an infinitely holy and just God, and because they think only of the sins of time. But man will go on sinning through eternity, and will deserve to be punished through eternity. In the world of woe, man will be freed from all the restraints that here keep him back from sin, and will be forever given up to all evil passions and influences, and therefore will never cease to sin. It is evident that, as long as a sinner continues to add to his sins, God's justice will require his continued, his endless punishment. Shall we presume to say that God's standard and sentence are not just? How much wiser to acknowledge the justice of our condemnation, and look to Christ for pardon."

The Scriptures teach us that men are to "receive" according to their works, . . . in the body. Compare Matt. xvi., 27, with 2 Cor. v., 10. To talk about men being punished for sins under a system of government where they cannot avoid sinning—shut up to the necessity of wickedness—is to represent the inflicter of the punishment as the most outrageous tyrant and monster conceivable; and, beside, there is not a single "Thus saith the Lord," to support such a monstrous sentiment found in the Bible: it is a pure assumption and a "fable."

The same paper, in another article, says, "No mere apprehension of danger ever effectually leads to holiness. Men cannot be frightened out of their sins."

That is truth: and not only so, but threatening punishment, manifestly opposed to reason—as endless misery is—is the most effectual way to harden men in sin, and engender hatred instead of love. The natural result of the doctrine contained in the foregoing defence of "endless woe" is to make thinking men abhor the being who is supposed to design such a punishment for sin.

The same number of the Messenger has in it a story of a "cruel boy," that began his career by tormenting and killing flies and little animals, and asks, "Was he not very cruel?" At length he arrives at such a pitch of love for cruelty, that "He enjoyed cruel sports of all kinds; and the groans and sufferings of his fellow-creatures afforded him rich entertainment."

What better is the demon—for we will not say God—of the "endless woe" of the American Messenger? We fearlessly reply that "Nero" was a saint to him. For Nero killed his victims in the end, but the demon of "endless woe" is supposed to have the power and the disposition to protract the life of his victim to unending ages, and to be constantly increasing the anguish of the sufferer: and no sorrow or pain of the miserable being is ever to move the demon-god to relax or show pity.

No wonder "Nero's" subjects grew weary of him, and condemned him to be thrown from the Tarpeian rock and dashed to pieces." Such was a deserved fate.

But we rejoice to know that the view taken of endless punishment, in the Messenger, is totally unsustained by the Bible, and the God of the Bible is not to be charged with such blasphemous teaching.

Again, the Messenger says—speaking of "Repentance unto Life,"—"He who will not be won by love cannot be saved." That is truth. Why then attempt to win men by the blasphemous teaching of "endless woe?" It never did and never can win a soul of man to repentance, or draw them to God.

In the article about the "cruel boy," the Messenger inquires, "Does any child think that the great God, whose tender mercies are over all his works, and who watches the dying sparrows, will not be very angry with all those who in any way abuse his creatures?"

Truly! But how irreconcilable is the last view of God with the previous one, which represents the same God as inflicting "endless woe" on the "creatures" he has made; and under circumstances, too, where it is impossible for them to reform, or, if they should, he would in no case liberate them from their pains?

Must not that "God whose tender mercies are over all his works . . . be angry with those who in any way" represent him as giving life to innumerable beings whom he determines to make immeasurably and eternally wretched and miserable?

St. Bernard calls holy fear the door-keeper of the soul. As a nobleman's porter stands at the door and keeps out vagrants, so the fear of God stands and keeps all sinful temptations from entering.

A WARNING TO CHRISTIANS.

"Then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another; and many false prophets shall arise, and shall deceive many; and because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. But he that shall endure unto the end shall be saved."—Matt. xxiv., 10–13.

It is well known that seasons of great and general excitement, whether arising from political or other causes, are fraught with danger to the mental stability of many individuals. There are times when some dreadful epidemic seems to seize hold of the minds of men, when a blind excitement pervades all classes, and few escape the infection. Times of war and revolution are eminently such, and tend greatly to unsettle men's minds, and to work them up into an unhealthy feverish state, creating a morbid desire for an unwholesome stimulus. When events occur which powerfully affect the general mind; when nations are roused into energetic and unwonted action; when old established and world-wide systems are verging on dissolution, then is the individual mind, even of the man of God, liable to be unbalanced, to lose, as it were, its foothold, and be silently but surely borne away by the passion that sways the hour, into the gulf of forgetfulness of God: such times were impending when Jesus replied to his disciples' question, and the same warnings and injunctions given them will apply to all similar occasions. "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." "See that ye be not troubled; in your patience possess ye your souls," that is, in patient continuance in well-doing, possess the mastery over your own minds; be not carried away by the prevailing spirit. Be watchful and prayerful. Such is the tenor of some of the injunctions given in view of the approaching evils.

It will be evident to all who take notice of the course of public and political events, and who does not, in these latter days, when so many run to and fro, and knowledge is increased? that events of no common import are about to transpire. The voices of the prophets, with one consent, testify that national convulsions, famines, pestilences, earthquakes, etc., must precede the much-desired era of rest and peace under the Messiah. The proclamation of Joel rings in our ears, "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men; let all the men of war draw near, let them come up; beat your ploughshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears; assemble and come, all ye nations, and gather yourselves together round about." We look for the crumbling to pieces of an old established system, corrupted from its original divine simplicity, grown old in wantonness and crime, joined with the rulers of the world in an unholy union, that they might "eat up God's people as if they were bread;" we look for the day when the proud shall be abased, and the "Lord alone be exalted." But the overthrow of Babylon will be mighty, and how many noble beings may be involved in her fall? As it is said in the book of Daniel, "Many of them of understanding shall fall through seducers, who shall cleave to them by flatteries."

Whether these things are at hand or not, the fact remains: a dividing spirit is abroad, a spirit of hatred and delusion. It is its contaminating influence that we should fear; it is its demoralizing influence; it is the unhealthy excitement, the bitter party spirit that is evil, and causes evil to spread.

Let it not be said there is no danger to Christ's disciples from these causes. There is danger, because "when iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." Such are the mysterious and inexplicable sympathies which bind man to man, which forbid a separate and isolated interest, that we catch unconsciously the prevalent tone, and we know not till the mind is warped and unsettled, and thus, being in an unhealthy state, it is ready to receive, and to conceive evil. The moral scourge is more destructive even than the pestilence.

In extraordinary times God will grant to his chosen extraordinary help. Of this blessed truth we have many assurances, but our space forbids their transcription. The reader may turn to Job v., 17–24; Isaiah xxxiii., 10–17; Ps. xxxiii., and many other passages to the same purpose.

In view of the evils which are certainly coming upon us, and of others which may be near, how ought the believers in Jesus to be drawing closer and firmer the bonds of Christian and brotherly love, so that united they may the better resist the insidious approach of disaffection to the "cross of Christ." That, united, they may watch over and strengthen one another, and by keeping aloof from the spirit of the world, "build themselves up in their most holy faith," and, "having done all, to stand with their loins girt about with truth, their feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, and their hearts filled with the love of God, praying always, with all perseverance and supplication, for all saints, as well as for themselves."

The time must come when the secrets of all hearts shall be revealed, when the veil which custom, reserve or prudence has drawn over the faces of most men, shall be torn away. Then will "the sinners in Zion be afraid," then will "fearfulness surprise the hypocrites." Is. xxxiii., 14. The words of Jesus, "many shall be offended, and shall betray one another; and because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold"—ring the death knell of many a fair profession.

Let, then, the followers of Jesus, who are seeking for glory, honor, and incorruptibility, bethink themselves, and in view of the dangers to which the tone and stability of the individual mind is exposed, from the stir and the excitement, and the party spirit, now working among the people; let them exercise caution, watchfulness, and prayer; let them use self-denial, self-possession, self-control, and faith in God's promises; let them be earnest and diligent in every good work, that they may be marked out as people who look beyond the present age, and who recognize the hand of God in all events. Let them not be led away by the spirit of the time, but strive the more earnestly to live "soberly, righteously, and godly, in the present world, looking for the appearing of the great God, and our Saviour. And may the Lord direct their hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ." M.

THE SECOND BIRTH.

BY J. S. POTTER.

Br. Storrs: Much has been said and written on this subject; and for my part, I never became fully satisfied until about a year ago. It was one of the main things that caused me to believe in no future life to any but the righteous, and that by a resurrection from the dead. Previous to that time, I was under conviction on the subject for several years; but could not commit myself on account of a few texts that seemed to stand in the way; but, thank God, the mist and fog has been so far cleared away that I can see the true light, and I can say, Glory to his blessed name for the plan of life and salvation that is brought to light in the Gospel. This plan and purpose of God is in the second Adam, and not in the first. The first Adam brings us into this life by the natural law of generation. The second Adam will bring us into the next life by a supernatural law, i. e., by "the law of the spirit of life." O how grand and glorious this looks to me. The more I look at it, the brighter it shines, and will more and more unto the perfect day.

I think the great majority of the people have very limited understanding of this second birth; and when it is first presented to them, they seem to marvel, the same as Nicodemus did when the Saviour said unto him, "Except a man be begotten again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." John iii., 3. In the 6th verse both begettings are brought to view, "That which is begotten of the flesh is flesh (natural), and that which is begotten of the Spirit is Spirit (supernatural). Also John i., 12, 13, "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name; which were begotten not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." In these texts are the beginning of both states, the natural and spiritual; or generation, and regeneration: but no birth. The word "begotten," in the Gr., is gennao; and the apostle Peter had it right in his first Epistle, chap. i., 3, when he said, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a hope of life by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." Again; v. 23, "Being begotten again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." According to this apostle, they had been begotten once before by corruptible seed, or of the flesh; and he compares them to the grass that withereth; but those begotten again of incorruptible seed, by the word of God, liveth and abideth forever.

Heb. i., 5, 6. "For unto which of the angels said he at any time, thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me as Son? And when he bringeth again the first Born (from the dead) into the world, he saith, "And let all the angels of God worship him." When I got hold of this text I felt to praise God; for I believe it was the Spirit of God that brought it to my mind when reading the chapter. When he bringeth again the first Born (from the dead) Gr., prototocus, into the world. Christ was once in the world; he died on the cross; was buried; the third day he rose from the dead and became the first fruits of them that slept. He is the great Captain of our salvation; and as soon as he was "brought again from the dead," according to the apostle, he became that great Shepherd of the sheep, (not of the goats), through the blood of the everlasting covenant, and could say, I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I live forevermore; and have the keys of hades and of death, and when the last day shall have come, and the trump of God sounds, he will open all the prison doors for them that have been begotten of incorruptible seed, and died in faith, and they will be born from the dead and enter on that future life which will be eternal. While those who have died without being begotten again will remain in the tomb forever. In Col. i., the apostle speaking of Christ says, "Who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born (from the dead) of every creature. V. 18., And he is the head of the body of the church: who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence." Rom. viii., 29. "That he might be the first-born (from the dead) among many brethren." Rev. i., 5. "And from Jesus Christ, the faithful witness, the first-born of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth."

I bless God for the light of his word. Truly it is a lamp to our feet, and light to our path. I never saw the beauty and harmony of the Scriptures, as I do at the present time. The plan of redemption is grand, glorious, sublime; it far exceeds all the wisdom of this world: for the world by wisdom knew not God, Well might the Poet say,

"Let all the heathen writers join
To form one perfect Book,
Great God, when once compared with thine,
How mean their writings look."

The Gospel has a power in it to beget in us a hope of eternal life, by the implantation of the incorruptible seed, by the word of God; which will be the principle by which we shall obtain a future life, by being born from the dead, at the last day. This principle supersedes all natural laws; it is supernatural, heavenly, divine; it originated in heaven, and will endure forever, even forever and ever.

FROM ELDER S. L. WALTER.

Bunker Hill, Ill., March 13, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I am at the home of Br. R. Gibbs, where we are always received with Christian kindness. It is cheering to find such pilgrim homes, where we can step in on our journeying, while trying to spread the light of the gospel of the ever blessed God, Life only by Christ the Life-giver.

I regard the Scriptures, given by inspiration of God, as the only antidote for Spiritualism. They show, the dead know not anything; hence, have nothing to communicate; that they are "silent in death;" hence cannot be rapping. Also, their love, and their hatred, and envy is now perished: hence they cannot exercise any of these powers of the mind in death. Again we learn, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave (sheol) whither thou goest." Hence, we see that the state of the dead is a condition in which dead folks cannot do either good or evil, and are utterly unable to communicate with the living, or impart wisdom or knowledge. Thus all the knockings, etc., are nothing but "lying wonders," which are sure to deceive them that turn away from the truth of God.

I think Paul personified Spiritualism in 2 Thess. ii. As "That man of sin, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." Here we have a full outline, or portrait of this masterpiece of the animal man; when he becomes the slave of the flesh.

At Centralia, I became acquainted with Br. W. M. Lee. He was one of the many which became infidel in consequence of the preaching of inherent immortality and eternal torments, and was so for fifteen years; when he became acquainted with a Br. Dudley, at Rock Island, where they both lived. Br. D. would ask Br. L. questions, on texts of Scripture, the meaning of which was clearly opposite to inherent immortality, and the God-dishonoring dogma of eternal sin and torment. The questioning became mutual, and resulted in Br. Lee's renouncing infidelity, and looking for life only in Christ, by a resurrection. He had never seen anything on the glorious God honoring doctrine till I showed him your works, which he bought, and was not long in seeing that the wicked dead could not live again, but would remain in the congregation of the dead. I was the first one he saw that advocated the doctrine of no life without being in Christ. After getting into the light, he was about uniting with the Baptists, but was rejected, because he could not believe the confession of faith, but held fast to the "sure word of prophecy."

After he moved to Centralia, the Baptist minister (to whose church Sister Lee belongs) came to see him, to talk with Br. Lee; which he did, as one having authority. But it did not suit Br. Lee to have the minister monopolize all the talk. Hence, he said, Br. C., you are not in the pulpit, and I have a right to speak for myself. Br. Lee showed that immortal-soulism and eternal torments were not taught in the Scriptures, and that man was a unit, and made of dust, etc., hence mortal; and that all the wicked will God destroy. The interview ended by Br. C. giving Br. Lee a five years probation, viz.: that he should not talk such talk for five years. To which Br. Lee said I would advise you not to preach your doctrine for five years. So they parted. The minister, with holy abhorrence, went his way, thinking what things would come to, if men dare to think for themselves and reject Orthodoxy. He must have thought the craft was in danger.

I heard Br. C. preach a sermon, "Why they held to close communion." He said that "All Christians held, that there was but one way to get into the visible church, and that was repentance, faith, and baptism; and that the Lord's Supper was an ordinance in the church, and could be administered to none but the members of the visible church. He said that all admitted that baptism by immersion is baptism; hence theirs past at par everywhere; while the other is not received: hence, they were not in the visible church: but they would be admitted into heaven; for they were Christians, and he loved them, and had union with them all, etc."

I wanted to ask the brother about the invisible church. I queried whether all the Christians he spoke of as being subjects of the heavenly church, were not the members of the invisible? and whether they were not in a better case than those in the visible church? A brother said to the Methodist minister, Br. C. left you out in the cold. I said to Br. C. that he left himself out also.

I spoke of the essential baptism, and gave the "Essential Baptism" tract to a Christian minister, who carried it all around, and showed it to all he came in contact with. I thought he was doing a good work, it would make men think for themselves, I hope. I led the union prayer-meeting. I spoke at those meetings about love being the grand principle of our holy religion; and that without this principle there was no religion; and that faith was the condition of life; and that Christ came that we might have "life, and that we might have it more abundantly." I hope that some seed was sown, that shall germinate and bear fruit. Such places are hard missionary fields with one who has not money to hire a hall. They want about two dollars a night. I am in hopes that we shall get along better this year.

I am now trying to get a home somewhere that will be easily reached by a day's ride on horseback. I am seeking to get a horse of my own, and a buggy; then I can get along better. When I failed to have a horse it has cost me five dollars to get to my appointment, and I return five dollars minus; but I do not complain: there are noble souls out here.

At Lebanon I found the few that are looking for life eternal, strong in faith. I preached three times for them and had a good turnout; and at the close of one of the meetings, a brother added his testimony to the truth, by telling, among other things, that if "God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham," why not give life and immortality to dead souls at the resurrection? and no living again of any that are not in the Life-giver. It fills us with joy to hear such stirring testimonies for truth. Thank God, many see that death is the wages of sin; and not life in torment. Pray for us, you that love God; you have our prayers. Yours in hope of life eternal, when the Life-giver comes.

WHY CHRIST CAME AS A BABE.

"There is one thing I have often thought about—why it was necessary for Jesus to come as a babe; he could not do anything for so long."

"First, I would answer, that if you would tell me why it is necessary for all of us to come as babes, it would be less necessary for me to tell you why he came so; whatever was human must be his. But I must say next, Are you sure that he could not do anything for so long? Does a baby do nothing? Ask mamma there. Is it for nothing that the mother lifts up such heartfuls of thanks to God for the baby on her knee? Is it nothing that the baby opens such fountains of love in almost all the hearts around it? Ah! you do not think how much every baby has to do with the saving of the world—the saving of it from selfishness, and folly, and greed. And for Jesus, was he not going to establish the reign of love in the earth? How could he do better than begin from babyhood? He had to lay hold of the heart of the world. How could he do better than begin with his mothers'—the best one in it? Through his mother's love first, he grew into the world. It was first by the door of all holy relations of the family that he entered the human world, laying hold of mother, father, brothers, sisters, all his friends; then by the door of labor, for he took his share of his father's work; then, when he was thirty years of age, by the door of teaching. You must not think little of the grand thirty years wherein he got ready for the chief work to follow.—Sabbath at Home.

Poetry.

Comfort of our Blessed Hope.

BY I. R. CASTLE.

O, 'tis the soul enrapturing thought
Of what my Saviour's love hath wrought
That lights and cheers my lonely way,
And oft inspires my heart to say,
However rugged, steep, and rough,
My path may be, 'tis smooth enough,
So that my Saviour, lover, friend,
Will guide me safely to the end;
Cheering me on with hope of life
Beyond this vale of mortal strife:
A life of love forever free
From all the ills and wrongs we see,
Or hear, participate or know,
As on our pilgrimage we go.
This hope of life, to every soul,
An anchor firm, when billows roll,
A "glorious rest," by faith I see,
And O! that rest "remains" for me.

The Counterfeit Shilling.

Dick Manning went into Mr. Ashton's store, where his cousin, Thomas Downs, was looking over some coins. "There, Dick," said he, shoving a piece of money toward him on the counter, "there's a counterfeit shilling; you may have that."

"How do you know it is counterfeit?" asked Dick; "it looks real."

"Look sharp, and you will see it has a yellowish, brassy look, which real silver never has, silver is white."

"But it will pass," said another boy; "somebody passed it on you, why don't you pass it on somebody?"

"Because if one fellow cheats it is no reason why I should," answered Thomas Downs.

"Well, what shall I do with it?" asked Dick, balancing it on his forefinger.

"Do anything you please, except pass it," answered Thomas, and presently Dick pocketed the piece and went out of the store. He showed it to several of the boys, and none of them guessed it was counterfeit until he told them.

"Come, treat us on it," cried Henry Morris.

"No, no; it is against the laws to pass counterfeit money; if he does, he'll be taken up," shouted four or five of the boys. Dick kept it a great while in his pocket, but how often when he passed the confectionery at the shop windows was he tempted to pass it. "They wont know it's counterfeit," he would say to himself. "But you know it," whispered a still small voice.

One Saturday afternoon, a party of boys went down to the Neck, two or three miles from town, to play on the rocks and catch crabs. On their return they passed a cluster of small houses, in one of which a poor old woman had kept beer and cakes for many years. She was a kind, pleasant old creature, and as the earnings of her little shop helped to maintain an idiot son, people of the town seldom passed by there without buying of her, and the children were often sent down with kind charities to the good dame.

"She's got some chestnuts," said the boys, looking at the shop window. But none of them had any money.

"Dick," said Henry Morris, "now's the time to pass your shilling; she'll never know it, you may be sure of that."

"Yes, yes," said two or three while the rest hastened on; "would it not be a good joke? Come Dick."

"No, it would be mean to cheat this poor woman," said one of the better boys.

"She's got specs; she can see for herself," said another. "Oh, it would be such a good joke," cried Henry Morris; "besides, the chestnuts; come, Dick; and here you are sure you will never get found out."

Meanwhile Dick had drawn the shilling from his pocket and looked at the chestnuts in the window, which the boys declared would be such a treat on the rocks. The voice within said, "No, Dick;" but somehow or other the boys' voices were the loudest, and the chestnuts looked tempting, and they wanted him to treat, and it would pass for a joke. At last Dick went into the shop; his conscience smote him as he entered, but in he went, and out he came with a great paper of chestnuts, and away he ran, the boys after him; nor did he stop till he came to a pile of rocks behind which he threw himself on the sand.

"There they are," cried he, throwing the paper to the boys as soon as they got up with him.

"And what did she say?" they asked.

"She never suspected," said Dick. "She looked very much pleased, and put it in her drawer, and said, 'Thank ye, sonny.'" The boys set up a shout of laughter, but Dick did not join in it. I do not know how they enjoyed their chestnuts, but I do know that when Dick's mother asked him about the excursion, he told her nothing about them; and after he went to bed, it did not appear such a good joke after all, to cheat a poor old woman out of her chestnuts. Turn it which way he would, the affair had a mean and shabby look, and Dick felt very much ashamed of himself.

The next day when he went to school, Henry Morris met him and asked him to do his sums for him.

"I can't; I can't stop to," answered Dick.

"But you've got to," cried Henry; "if you don't I'll inform against you, and you'll have to go to jail for passing counterfeit money; I will."

Poor Dick was terribly frightened. How he wished he was innocent. But as it was, he found himself a bondman to a wicked, idle boy, who kept threatening to inform against him if he did not do as he wished, and Henry's demands were pretty hard sometimes. Indeed, Dick had so little confidence in Henry, that he was constantly afraid lest the police officers might be at his heels, and he was very miserable. Dick despised Henry, but guilt made him serve him. There was a quarrel about something at recess one day, when one of the boys feeling angry with Dick, said, "Pooh! a fellow that will cheat a poor old woman will do anything."

To be twitted in this way was almost too much for poor Dick to bear. He wanted to knock the boy down; but, alas, he touched upon truths which Dick had no heart to fight for; and now Dick felt what bad friends bad boys are, for the very boys who urged him to buy the chestnuts, were the first to turn against him.

On his way home he suddenly met his cousin, Thomas Downs.

"Halloo," said Thomas, "let us see that shilling I gave you."

"Haven't got it," answered Dick, hurrying by.

"Stop; did you lose it or give it away?"

"No," said Dick.

"Well, where is it, you have'nt passed it?"

It was on the end of his tongue to say "no," but Dick never lied, and great as the temptation was, he could not lie now. Poor Dick, thus "holden by the cords of his sins," turned very red, and it seemed as if the veins in his face would burst. "Oh," he cried, choking with mortification and grief, what did you give me that counterfeit piece for? it has been a temptation in my pocket ever since: I have passed it, and what shall I do?" and the boy looked wretched. Thomas was very sorry and surprised, and took him down a lane where they could talk by themselves. Dick made a full confession of what had happened, and asked what he should do. He thought he should rather have it all known, and go to jail than live in such fear of himself and everybody else. Thomas told him that he ought to carry a real shilling to the woman and own what he had done.

"Could I not go and put it under her shop door?" said Dick; "it will be just the same; she'd get it, and not lose by the counterfeit."

"Just as well for her," said Thomas; "but as for you, Dick, you know you have done wrong, and if you are really sorry, you want to make clean work of it. Now go like a man, be honest about it, satisfy your conscience as much as you have gone against it; here, take this real shilling," putting his hand in his pocket, "go down to the woman, own it all, and do works meet for repentance, as the Bible says."

"I will," cried Dick, with a freer feeling than he had had for many a day; "but it is yours?"

"No matter," said Thomas, "take it. I give it to you for my share in your troubles; and it will be a good lesson to me to be careful how I put temptation in the pockets of my friends."

Dick really felt badly at the straits he was reduced to, but having done wrong, he was resolved to repair the wrong like a man, and he did. And when he came out of the old woman's shop, he ran down to the rocks on the seashore and tossed the counterfeit shilling into the waves.

"Now," said Dick, "I am free, again. I am afraid of nobody. May God forgive my sin for Christ's sake, and help me ever to do what is right."—Selected.

Letters and Extracts.

From Eld. F. Burr.

Br. Storrs: I wish to write a few lines for the Herald, as I have been a reader of it for some weeks past. And I wish more particularly to correct any false impression which may have been received by any of my old acquaintances east, by reading in your paper the journal of Br. Wendell's trip west. Br. W., in his journal, speaks of me as "not yet" having fully indorsed the sentiments he preached; as though I had almost arrived at the point of indorsing the non-resurrection of the wicked. Now, while Br. W.'s statement in fact was correct, yet, like the definition of the perfect tense in Kirkham's Garmmar, it "conveys an allusion," and it is that allusion I wish set right.

I would say, then, that I am no nearer the belief in the so-called non-resurrection theory than I ever was. I enjoyed Br. Wendell's visit in New Rutland very much, because it revived memories of the past which were very pleasant. And I was glad also to hear from him, that a different spirit pervaded the body of so-called Life-believers than that which was manifested at Wilbraham in 1868. I never had a disposition to quarrel with any one, for differing from me in sentiment on the future of the wicked; but I have seen among those opposed to me a bitterness of spirit that has grieved me; and when I have seen persons glory in pressing the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked to the division of God's people, I have prayed God to keep me from having such a spirit, whatever I might believe. And I am right glad to hear of any return of fraternal feelings among those distracted by a wrong spirit.

Another thing which Br. W. states in his journal I would also like to explain. He speaks of "Sister Burr" (my wife) having a "strong leaning in favor" of his views of the future of the ungodly. Now this "strong leaning" consists in an experience seven years ago when she tried hard to believe thus, but from a thorough investigation of the Scriptures she was forced to a different conclusion. Since then she has been what she was before, a firm believer in the resurrection of all the human race. We both expressed ourselves willing that the wicked should remain in their graves at the time when we would expect them to come forth if it were God's will; but we were satisfied that all texts referring to the perpetual condition of the wicked referred to their condition after a resurrection and judgment.

There are some phrases and terms which you, who differ from me on the resurrection, claim as peculiarly your own, but which I think do not of right belong to you any more than to me. For instance the term "Life-believer" I claim to be as applicable to one class of destructionists as to another. Then the doctrine of "no life out of Christ" I think I indorse as fully as any one. For certainly, temporal life is not included in this expression, for all admit one can have temporal life and still be out of Christ. This is the case with the wicked to-day, and may be to-morrow, or next week, or next year, even though a suspension of that life take place for the time intervening.

Again, the doctrine of "no future life for the wicked" I indorse from a generally received definition of "future life." The life one may live to-morrow is not a future life, according to your own use of the phrase; for you would not deny but that the wicked may live to-morrow as well as to-day, although to-morrow is future time. Future life is in opposition to present life, and neither are defined by duration, but by character. Present life is mortal, consequently future life is immortal. So the wicked may live to-morrow, or next week, or next year and still not have a future life, even though their breathing were suspended for a space of time and then restored again.

But I will leave this matter for the present, and perhaps for all time, although I might write many things which an editor might consider profitless, and so I forbear.

But I want to add one or two remarks more in my present letter. In your last editorial you speak of Mattison's pamphlet, "Bible Doctrine of Immortality." I have had occasion to review said pamphlet twice this past winter, where it had been circulated against us, and was able to convince the people, from Mr. Mattison's own book that he was on the side of Satan. The falsehoods that book contains, when one considers the fact that Mr. Mattison is not ignorant, having had several years' acquaintance with the writings of "Life-believers," show a wilfulness, that is a strong argument for the doctrine of total depravity. I want no easier task than to "annihilate" the position taken in that book, for it annihilates itself.

I wish to say also, as I receive the Herald gratis by Br. Wendell's kindness, that I am very much obliged to some one, and perhaps a little to all of those who support it.

Yours truly,

New Rutland, Ill. F. Burr.

Note by the Editor.—We wish all our correspondents to be exceedingly careful in their statements of the position of others, and of all matters relating thereto. We cannot judge of the accuracy of their statements; and it is a pity to have to fill our columns with such disclaimers as the foregoing.

We are truly sorry that Br. Burr has been so exceedingly unfortunate, years ago, in his intercourse with "non-resurrectionists," or "those opposed to" him, who have had a "bitterness of spirit that grieved" him. That there have been such no doubt is true; as there never was a good cause but what had a Judas, and a Peter, who would "cut off the right ear" with the "sword" his Lord had permitted him to carry. But that a bitter spirit has generally characterized believers in life from the dead only for the righteous, we do not believe; and we do believe that they do now, and always have acted with as little of that spirit as their opposers. But of that the Lord is the judge. If any pro or con have such a spirit, and mean to retain it, the the quicker they give up all pretension to the religion of Christ, the better.

From Maria M. Weaver.

Westfield, Mass., March 21, 1868.

Brethren and Sisters: Through divine grace I can say the prospect before me is bright. And although the pilgrim's pathway is strewn with thorns, though crosses, trials and tears be my lot, still there is "joy in the Holy Ghost," unknown to those who walk in the broad road.

I am glad that it is written, "In the world ye shall have tribulation," so that when it comes we need not "think strange concerning the fiery trial, as though some strange thing had happened unto" us. This was all marked out, and we are told to expect it, but it is comforting to the tried saint to know that Jesus has been "tempted in all points like as we are," and as he overcame, so are we to overcome. He sends his spirit to help us. Angels ministered to him, when the weight of our lost condition caused him to grow faint. Ah! he knows how to pity us when we grow weary of sin and sinners, and sigh for the perfect state. Jesus can sympathize with us in all our afflictions and trials. Are we poor and homeless? He "had not where to lay his head." Do friends forsake us? In the greatest trial, his last and severest, "all forsook him and fled." Even his most ardent friend, with oaths and curses, protested that he knew not the man. Are we alone in the cause of Christ? He was alone in Pilate's hall, and for us bore abuse and pain from insulting foes and was "led like a lamb to the slaughter," that we might be lambs in his fold. O how great was his love to us! Let us then unmurmuringly suffer for his truth's sake.

With his spirit in our hearts, we love as he loved. He loved his enemies: we can love ours. His spirit helps us. His spirit purifies our hearts. His spirit changes our natures or dispositions here, and at last changes our physical beings. Thank God that "there is a fountain open in the house of David for sin and uncleanness," and that sinners can find salvation. Even the dead may live again, if here they have "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the lamb."

Let me endure the ills of this life, if so be that I reign in glory at last. The night is far spent. 'Tis but a little while ere the conflict will end. O for "victory, through our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ." Victory here over sin and all unholy propensities; victory there over mortality and the grave—eternal victory. "But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory." Amen.

Br. Storrs: The cause of truth is dear to a few faithful ones in this place. We are hoping to get Br. R. Wendell to come this way, if the Lord will. We are cast out as evil by the organized Advent body here, but have fellowship with Christ, we trust.

If any of like faith are passing this way we would be glad to see them. The persecution received on account of our views makes those of like faith doubly precious. O, thank God for the society of saints. There are a few on earth who live and let live. How blessed it will be when the noble-minded ones of earth are all immortalized and brought into the heavenly country, where toils and tears and temptations can come no more. May I live so as to be among that holy throng, and with them be made perfect, and with them exclaim, "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory, through our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ." Your Sr., in the trial state.

From Mrs. S. A. Colwin.

Albion, R. I., March, 1868.

Friend Storrs: An amusing incident occurred last night, the particulars of which I thought might be interesting to you and your readers. Therefore I have concluded to give you the substance of it.

In a factory village, about two miles distant from the one in which we reside, is maintained a lyceum; and among the questions brought up for debate was this; "Resolved, that modern spiritualism is anti-scriptural; therefore anti-christian." My husband being quite a prominent debater was sent for to level his shafts against this monster of evil of the present age. An old acquaintance, and a confirmed spiritualist, being his opponent; so it was stated in a note written him by the lyceum. When he arrived, at the appointed hour, he found his old friend present, accompanied by two other famous champions of their cause; one of whom took the place of his opponent; and who should it be but your old antagonist on the defence of the Bible, Henry C. Wright!

Now husband was not aware of the fact until this morning; his name he knew to be familiar to him as a household word. He knew him to be a lecturer on various topics; a man of letters, and considered a famous logician; but where that name got its pre-eminence in his mind was a myth, until this morning; when, all at once, it occurred to him that his opponent of the previous night was yours at the famous "Hartford Convention."

Of course you would like to know the result. Well, it was a decided victory on our side; so accorded by the people; gaining the vote with scarcely a dissenting voice. Perhaps he was not aware that his combatant was simply a factory operative, with no means of education except the knowledge gained by reading in leisure moments (which are very few) or he must have felt badly the deficiencies of his doctrine, or his lack of ability to maintain his position. He professed to have studied the Bible fifteen years, in its original languages, yet my husband, who had never studied them at all, only through commentaries and Judge Halsted's work, completely upset him by translations which he had no power to confute. He says of himself, I am a spiritualist in a twofold sense; First, as opposed to materialism, Second, as entertaining the belief that our departed friends are with us in spirit, ministering to us in various ways, etc. He made a very earnest appeal to the sympathies of the people; dwelt much on the ardent desire of man for immortality; as if that were sufficient proof of eternal conscious existence. As a stronger appeal he said, that some things were not of a logical character; that they were self-evident, and that spiritualism was of this order; and advanced the idea that because we are conscious of existence now, so we should be eternally conscious. Great proof, is it not? He only quoted two or three Scripture texts, such as the transfiguration, the resurrection of saints at Jerusalem; and one in John xiv.; In my Father's house, etc. My husband levelled all the Bible defence against inherent immortality that so brief a period would allow. It was on the Bible that the evidence was to be based; and the word of God was powerful to do the work.

One Episcopal clergyman tried his hand against him, but to no purpose; he admitted his leading propositions; therefore his effort was a failure.

This debate has long been solicited, and great anxiety manifested in regard to the result. Satisfaction has been given by destroying the favorite dogma of many—inherent immortality. Never mind; it will give them food for digestion, and may lead thinking minds to a proper investigation of this all-important subject. Yours, in the cause of truth.

Cambridgeport, Mass., March 21, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I send you the name of another subscriber. I have no thought of doing without the paper as long as it is conducted as ably as now. I wish I had the means to supply many who are strangers to our views with its soul-cheering words.

I am more and more tired of the song of dying and going to heaven; and I feel thankful to God for making you an instrument of good, in your day and generation, to us who were in times past in this same darkness.

I heard a minister at a funeral, not long ago, declare that the lady who lay before us dead was still alive. He said, among other remarks, that we would never be in a better condition to be taught of God than we were that day. I accordingly listened very attentively, and we heard not one word of the resurrection; not the most distant allusion to the possibility of such an event, neither the least intimation of the probability, to say the least, of the return of Christ to summon his people from their quiet resting places.

Oh, thought I, "How forcible are right words." My heart ached over the miserable perversion of the solemn truths of the Bible. There were young men and maidens, matrons and hoary sires, really with hearts tender to listen to God's word, and they heard scarcely a word of it, because it was not spoken.

Sometimes I think we ought not to let such opportunities for good pass without giving in our testimony to the early teaching of Jesus and the apostles. I have heard so much of it lately, it sort of annoys me more than ever. It is trying to me for this reason: I see the people at large relying on the ministry more than they are aware of; and if a minister or Sabbath school teacher says a person has died and gone to heaven, they think it must be so, in spite of Job's teaching to the contrary. By the way, one in favor of the popular view, in reply to the argument brought from the book of Job, in favor of the unconscious state of the dead, said Job was in great trouble; his mind was disturbed, and he was not reliable authority.

"To the law and to the testimony. If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." With my best wishes, I am, gratefully yours.

Whitfield.

A striking feature in Whitfield's preaching was his power of description. The Arabians have a proverb which says, "He is the best orator who can turn man's ears into eyes." Whitfield seems to have had a peculiar faculty of doing this. He used to draw such vivid pictures of the things he was handling, that his hearers could believe they actually saw and heard them. On one occasion, says one of his biographers, Lord Chesterfield was among his hearers. The great preacher, in describing the miserable condition of an unconverted sinner, illustrated the subject by describing a blind beggar. The night was dark and the road dangerous. The poor mendicant was deserted by his dog near the edge of a precipice, and had nothing to aid him in groping his way but his staff. Whitfield so warmed with his subject and enforced it with so much power, that the whole auditory was kept in breathless silence, as if it saw the movements of the poor old man, and at length, when the beggar was about to take the fatal step which would have hurled him down the precipice to certain destruction, Lord Chesterfield actually made a rush forward to save him, exclaiming, "He is gone! he is gone!" The noble Lord had been so entirely carried away by the preacher that he forgot the whole was a picture.

Expanding the Lungs.

Step out into the purest air you can find; stand perfectly erect, with head and shoulders, back, and then, fixing the lips as if you were going to whistle, draw the air through the lips into the lungs. When the chest is about half full, gradually raise the arms, keeping them extended, with the palms of the hands down, as you suck in the air, so as to bring them over the head just as the lungs are quite full. Then drop the thumbs inward, and after gently forcing the arms backward and the chest open, reverse the process by which you draw your breath till the lungs are empty. This process should be repeated immediately after bathing, and also several times through the day. It is impossible to describe to one who has never tried it the glorious sense of vigor which follows this exercise. It is the best expectorant in the world. We know a gentleman, the measure of whose chest has been increased by this means some three or four inches during as many months.

Be pure, but not stern; have moral excellences, but don't bristle with them.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near fourteen years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really satanism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but it is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Man's Destiny.—Immortality: The Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., St. Louis, Mo., Reviewed by Geo. Storrs. Price in pamphlet, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The history of this work was this: Rev. T. M. Post, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., a well known and talented clergyman, was selected by certain ministers and others, in New England, to write a Prize Essay on Immortality, for which a gentleman in New York paid $150. It was intended to have it the best that could be said or written in favor of the immortality of all men without regard to their moral character; that is, of their inherent immortality.

Dr. Post took up the subject under two heads of argument. First, "The Argument from Nature;" and second—"the Argument from the Scripture." The first of these appeared in The New Englander of February, and the other in May, 1856.

The Reviewer followed these arguments in their order. The Review of the argument from Nature was written before that from Scripture appeared.

The author of the Review wrote it by request, and with the expectation that it would be published with a reprint of the Essay. No one should fail to read it; and perhaps nothing better can be placed in the hands of Ministers of any denomination.

This work has been out of print for some months, but is now re-printed.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the true teachings of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, etc. Price, bound, $1. Postage, 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subject; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

ADAM'S TEMPTATION.

Many people murmur and complain about Adam's temptation; they seem at a loss to know which to blame most, Adam or his Maker. They might as well complain that we had not all been left to grovel in the region of the animal appetites, with no capacity for higher and Godlike attainments. We have already shown that to develop moral qualities, or to bring out holiness—which is but another word for self-government—there must be trial of some sort. God adapted the trial to Adam's weakness and ignorance—he gave him the least possible trial that could have been used to develop a moral character at all, or to test man as to his capacity of self-government. If he could not govern himself, he could not govern the creation at the head of which his Maker designed to place him, in dominion. We say, the prohibition out of which the trial was to grow, and which proved the occasion of his temptation, was the very least it could be. Look at it—Man's intellectual nature was not yet developed. His Maker, therefore, adapted his enjoyments to his present capacity, or animal nature, by causing "every tree to grow out of the ground that is pleasant to the sight and good for food," etc. In the delightful garden in Eden he placed man, with full and unrestrained liberty to regale and enjoy himself to the utmost extent of his present capacity, with but one solitary restriction. How very trifling this. There was no want of means for enjoyment. The restriction was designed for his advantage, by leading him to develop and form a moral character, and learn self-government, which would open up a new, more noble and Godlike source of happiness and enjoyment. In this view the restriction was one of love and good will. If man's capacity for a moral nature could be developed, and a character of holiness established by this easy test or trial, God determined it should be; but if that failed to bring out a holy moral character, he determined to place the race under a course of discipline more severe, i. e., one of labor in sorrow, and death; and at the same time, to the favor already bestowed upon man, to add a "much more abundant" supply of aid to attain unto holiness, through the blessings to be bestowed in another dispensation, to be immediately opened for Adam's posterity, if man failed in the present trial. "Oh, the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God," and also of his goodness and love to man!

Here we stop to ask—How is it possible that character can be known or developed without trial in some form? For example—How can it be known that a man is a temperance man, and able to govern himself in reference to inebriating drink, if he has never had a trial? To try him, would you put that drink under bars and bolts that it was impossible for him to break? If such a course could be called a trial, you might try him fifty years, and both he and yourself would be just as ignorant at the end of that period as at its commencement as to his capacity for self-government, and he, on that point, would not be a particle more holy than the first day of that period. To bring out and fix a moral character, in that respect, he must have access to the liquor; but you, as a benevolent man, if he was ignorant of the fact, would warn him that if he did indulge his taste to any extent, intoxication and shame would follow. Thus situated, denying himself, or practising self-government, would be a virtue, and he would, by every victory over the temptation, have a new consciousness that he was capable of governing himself, and a renewed evidence of the exalted character of manhood, and thus be led to a higher and more holy estimate of the excellency and glory of that Being who had created him with such powers, or capacities. If in the supposed case the person should fail of self-government, and partake the inebriating liquor, the intoxication and consequent shame that follows his failure are a mercy, because calculated to arouse him to an effort to gain a temperance character, the importance of which he may now see more than before.

Apply this illustration to the case of Adam. A moral character, holiness, or self-government, could not have existed, in fact, without trial, and that would have been no trial which had placed it out of his power to act wrong. The least trial that could be employed was first used, with the information beforehand that if that failed to produce a holy moral character, man would be subjected to a much more severe trial, i. e., "dying to die"—implying sorrow, suffering, and labor, to wind up in "death."

ADAM'S FAILURE.

Adam failed to bring out a holy character in his trial. That is no proof of any defect in his constitution or creation, or of any moral depravity previous to that time; nor did that "ruin" his posterity, as the self-styled orthodoxy affirms, nor bring "the wrath of God" upon them. True, they were "subjected to vanity [or, suffering and death], not willingly, but by reason [or, in the wisdom] of him who hath subjected the same in hope," and in promise of deliverance from that death by a second Adam, the seed of the woman. All the acts of God toward Adam, after his sin, manifest mercy, not wrath. He told them, indeed, that they must now be subjected to sorrow, labor and death, but at the same time spoke to them words of encouragement and hope for their seed, or posterity. He also provided for their clothing, and guarded them against inflicting upon themselves the curse of immortality in sin by removing them away from the tree of life, which, instead of being a curse, was a blessing, that they might not by any possible means inflict upon themselves an immortality in sin and suffering. Thus the notion that Adam died a moral death is proved to be a mere outburst of a distempered imagination: he never had moral life before he sinned: he had only animal life: the death to which he was subjected was only animal. God in wisdom, and for man's good, put the race under a severer discipline, as parents often do their children, and that in love and the most tender pity and good will. How is God—the God of love—often dishonored by the representations of his dealings with our first parents and their posterity because of their failure. No wonder men are made infidels by such blasphemous insinuations; no wonder men bewilder themselves, and are lost in the fancies which grow out of their absurd and contradictory theories.

The most blasphemous part of all is, that the God of truth and love is represented as causing Adam's posterity to inherit a morally depraved nature, "whereby they are utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite unto all that is spiritually good, and that continually:"—Assembly's Catechism. When will such reproach of God our Maker have an end? "Oh, let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end;"—Psalmist. What has the doctrine of man's natural immortality done? Blasphemed God—both deified and devilized man, exalted Satan, reviled the Bible, fed infidelity, nourished and brought up Universalism, robbed Christ, filled the world with hate and hypocrites. This it has done; "ignorantly, in unbelief," I hope. Let men learn to call their sins their own, and acknowledge the long suffering and love of God, till they shall both hate their sins and abandon them, from a deep conviction of the amazing wrong they have done to God by living contrary to that course his love and kindness have marked out for us, that we might attain "unto holiness, and that the end might be everlasting life, through Jesus Christ," the Son of God, and our Life-giver.

There is, in our judgment, not a particle of evidence in the Bible that Adam lost anything for his posterity except access to the tree of life, and hence entailed upon us corruption and death. Doctors of divinity have puzzled their own brains and those of students in theology with labored efforts to find out what infants need to have done for them, and how God does it to fit them for heaven. Long and labored arguments and inquiries have been entered into about the depravity of infants, how they are justified, how they are made holy, and whether all of them go to heaven; or a part to hell, etc. The whole of these discussions have only served to make darkness darker. The truth, we conceive, is very simple, and that, perhaps, is the reason why great men overlook it. It is simply this, Adam lost all claim to immortality, and therefore could not communicate it to his posterity, any more than an impoverished parent could communicate riches to his children; the consequence is, all his posterity are born, not liable to eternal sin and suffering, but liable to perish, to lose all life, sense and being; and what they need, previous to personal sins, is simply salvation from perishing, or they need immortality, eternal life. Christ came to redeem man from death, or that loss of being to which he was exposed, and open eternal life to all; or, he "abolished death and brought life and immortality to light." But that eternal life is the gift of God, through Jesus Christ. Under the gospel we are required to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; as he that "came down from heaven" to give "life unto the world." This is the great test question, because he that truly receives Christ, receives all the other truths connected with his mission to earth, and he manifests that faith by obedience; so that a true faith is as certainly known by the conduct and conversation, as a living man is known from a dead carcass. And for a man to pretend that he has faith in Christ, while he does not walk in obedience to all the known commands of God, is as absurd as to say that a sick man has faith in a physician whom he refuses to employ, and whose directions he will not follow.

We conceive, all the "evil nature," about which there has been so much discussion in the world that man inherits from Adam, is a dying nature; the entire man perishing. By Adam "all were dead;" i. e., the natural tendency of all born of him was to perish, in the sense of ceasing to be. Christ died for all, "that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life." Adults then pass from death, i. e., from condemnation to death, unto life, through or by faith in Christ, and thus are said to be born again. That which is born of the flesh is flesh—corruptible, like him from whom it sprung; so that which is begotten of the Spirit, of the spiritual, living Adam, Christ, is spirit; is endowed with that Spirit which will raise them up from the dead, or, "quicken their mortal bodies," or, hath eternal life; according to the Scripture which saith, "he that hath the Son hath life," while "he that hath not the Son hath not life."

If I mistake not, then, the true state of the case is this: All the offspring of Adam are destitute of immortality; God has given his Son Jesus Christ to die for us, that we might not perish. He sets "life and death before men," and calls upon them to "choose life," that they "may live;" if they will not come to Christ they perish under an insupportable load of guilt and shame, for having preferred animal pleasures—which, when they are the supreme pursuit, are the pleasures of sin—to Life Eternal. Shall any of us be guilty of such folly and madness? Come to the Life-giver—lay hold on Eternal Life.

The Spiritual Body.

Here we keep to the simple method of the Holy Spirit speaking through the pen of Paul. By so doing we avoid that doubtfulness and vagueness which overshadows many a Christian heart, leading it to ask with the unreasoning impatience of some in Paul's day, "How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?"

To say that there will be no connection between the natural buried body and the spiritual heavenly body of the Christian, is to deny the resurrection of Jesus; is to deny that there was any connection between the body which was laid in the tomb of Joseph and the "glorious" body which Christ now has. "If there be no resurrection of the dead, then is not Christ risen." "Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." The teaching is, that in the resurrection of Jesus, "they that are Christ's" have both the assurance and type of their own resurrection. And since the resurrection of Christ consisted unquestionably in this, that the body which was laid in the sepulchre came forth from the sepulchre, so will the resurrection of of his followers include the coming forth from the grave of their buried bodies. Be it specially noted that it is "this corruptible" body, (not the incorruptible spirit) that must "put on incorruption." It is "this mortal" that must "put on immortality." It is what is sown in weakness and dishonor that must be raised in glory and power.

But beside those who openly denied the resurrection, there were those in Corinth who hesitated to receive the doctrine because it was such a strange thing to believe; so wonderful, so mysterious, so incomprehensible. They could not understand how such a thing could be. They said that there was nothing like it in the world. And so, instead of receiving the fact on the testimony of Christ and the fact of Christ's resurrection on the testimony of the apostles, they worried themselves and others by foolish and unreasonable questionings about the method of the fact. "How are the dead raised up? With what body do they come? What is the form, structure, appearance of the spiritual body, and how is it evolved from the natural body?"

The answer is: We do see something like it, see it continually and all around us. Everywhere we see that death is the antecedent, condition and preparative to a higher life. "That thou sowest is not quickened except it die." "Except it die;" that is, in no other way can the thought of God concerning the future of that seed be realized and understood. You must drop your seed into the ground. In like manner, death is the ordained condition of the new bodily life of the Christian; so that instead of being staggered at the death of believers, we ought rather to be enlightened, informed and cheered by it. Instead of perplexity, we should derive from it argument and hope for our own resurrection and continued existence. And not only for our continued existence, but existence in a better and wider sphere.

For, what is it that you sow and what comes of your sowing? You sow, not the plant itself, but only the seed. That is what you do. But now, when you have done that, what does God do? He gives to that sown seed a body. You sow the tulip-bulb. God gives the tulip. You sow the acorn. God gives, not other acorns like it, but the oak. You sow, not "that body that shall be," but "bare, naked grain," and then "God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him and to every seed its own body." The seed is not, in the higher view, for other seeds, but for the "body," the plant, the flower, the tree—not for the fruit save as that fruit may serve to produce other trees. Such creatures of want are we, so pressed are we by bodily needs, that we have come to regard wheat, for example, solely for the kernel which is least attractive in point of comeliness. The wheat stalk ministers to our love of grace and symmetry, while the "bare grain" serves only an animal and perishable nature. It is to gratify and cultivate our æsthetic susceptibilities that God sets the lily in an array of beauty which exceeds the glory of Solomon.

"A body as it hath pleased him." You can know the pleasure of God respecting the shape, size, appearance of any plant only as you bury the seed. Here is an entirely new seed; a seed that no one has ever seen before. You ask, "With what body will it come?" And if nobody can tell you, you say, "I do not believe it will come at all." But how is that question to be answered? Only in one way, namely, by burying the seed. And you would justly be accounted a "fool" if you quarreled about that or looked for an answer in any other way. Instead of asking any such question, you would sow the seed, and after sowing it you would wait the appointed period of its forth-springing. Only then would you or could you have an answer to that question. It is a question which, in the nature of things, can be answered only by experience. Now, with regard to the spiritual body of the believer, we lack experience and must be without it until the resurrection. That is God's time for the forthcoming of the buried bodies of his saints.

In full faith of the coming of that blessed change and of "the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ," we have buried our departed Christian friends. In the same precious faith would we die and be buried. The place where our loved ones lie and where we shall lie by their side is more to us than a mere charnel-house; more, even, than a field of precious but empty memorials. It holds the precious dust of those dear children of God, whose bodies having once been consecrated temples of the Holy Spirit, raised and fashioned like unto the glorious body of Jesus, shall shine thenceforth with this undimmed and eternal transfiguration in the "kingdom of the Father."

"O, not h s buried, nor extinct
The vital spark shall lie;
For o'er life's wreck that spark shall rise
To seek its kindred sky.

"These ashes, too, this little dust,
Our Father's care shall keep,
Till the last angel rise and break
The long and dreary sleep.

"Then love's soft dew o'er every eye
Shall shed its mildest rays;
And the long silent voice awake
With shouts of endless praise."

A Call and Invitation.

"Be not deceived, God is not mocked; whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap: he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. vi., 7, 8.

Our blessed Master says, Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest; take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light. To follow this direction, then, of the heavenly Teacher, is to sow to the Spirit.

Let me now ask a few questions, for these few lines will go where I myself shall never go.

Dear reader, have you ever felt the galling yoke of sin, and fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before you in the gospel? Is Jesus precious to you? Can you say he is the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely? Do you find his yoke indeed easy? Then persevere: you are sowing to the Spirit. Hold fast your profession without wavering. Faithful is he that hath called you, and if you endure to the end he will surely crown you with life everlasting. While you have your fruit unto holiness, you have great comfort and peace now, and are laying up a good treasure for the time to come. May you get the entire victory over the beast and his image, his mark and the number of his name: so shall you stand upon the sea of glass with the harps of God.

What shall I say to those who are still sowing to the flesh; who are still in the gall of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity? Dear friends, your case is typified by the bitten Israelites in the wilderness. You know there was a remedy. There was the brazen serpent lifted up upon a pole. The condition was not hard. It was only, look and live. So there is a remedy for you. As Moses lifted up the the serpent in the wilderness, so has Jesus been lifted up on the cross. This is all the remedy there is for you. If you neglect this only a little longer, you will perish; you will reap corruption. In Proverbs it is written, "Seeing there is wrath, beware lest he take thee away with a stroke; then a great ransom will not deliver thee." "He that being often reproved, and hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy." In John it is said, "The wicked shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on them. Dear unconverted reader, how will you escape if you neglect so great salvation? F. Winans.

Br. Storrs: As it has been a long time since I have written for the Herald, I thought I would write and let the believers in the Life theme know that I am as firm as ever, and more so, if possible; and I think probably I shall be as long as there is such opposition to it as there is in this place; for opposition only makes true-hearted followers the more firm in the truth, Especially when the word of God is all in that direction. It does make the truth shine more bright and clear when men try to overthrow it with weak arguments, and contradictions in their own statements. It does seem as though they might see their own contradictions, and might see the truth; but bigotry and ignorance do not look into things which agree not with their own preconceived opinions; and those not their own but somebody's else.

I am glad that ignorance is not bliss. Truth can stand alone; and it will bear investigation and shine more bright and clear; thank God. I am glad that terror, fear, wrath, damnation and the horrors of the second death are not the motives that God has given to lead men to repentance. But quite the reverse. The apostle Paul says, "The goodness of God leads men to repentance;" and John says we should "love God because he first loved us;" not that he hated us and wanted to destroy us.

Again: "not willing that any should perish," but come to repentance and have a home in the kingdom of God when it shall be set up under the whole heaven. Now what are some of the inducements that God has held out to the family of Adam? In the first place, when the head of the race had forfeited all right to life, and his posterity were perishing, God in his great love just held out or made known the plan of redemption, or salvation to his offspring that they might live in the future, and has revealed, through the Bible, the glorious future where man can live eternally, free from pain, sickness, sorrow, or dying; and made it easy and accessible. By being united to the second Adam (Christ), by faith, we can be brought from the grave incorruptible; no more to die; and God has plainly told us, if we do not embrace the opportunity of securing eternal life, we should perish in death, and that irrecoverably. Not that we should be brought from hades and then die the second time; for that is no part of the penalty of God's law. I think Paul would have said something about it, if that had been the case. Paul plainly says that he "shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God," and he had "not kept back anything that was profitable," and he has not said anything about men's dying twice, and nowhere has he said that the was penalty for sin. But on the contrary, "The wages of sin is death;" not to die twice, as Advent theology says. Paul says, It is appointed unto men once to die;" and then, right in the face of what the apostle says, men stand up and say, "they shall die twice." Well, which will you believe? I will believe Paul if it makes all mankind liars. This idea of telling sinners they will "look through the walls of the city and see the saints enjoying beauties and glories, and see that the harvest is past, and they must die the second time," is not in harmony with the word of God, for that plainly declares, the city, taking it to be a literal city, is to be on the new earth; and there is to be no more death there; and Jesus says, "They that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection of the dead, die no more." So we see if that be the case, all will live eternally; either in happiness or misery. But thank God, all that live again from the dead will enjoy the blessings of the future.

I love the truth better than the honor of poor humanity; for that will perish. But the truth will make us better, by believing and putting it in practice. That is not all, it will save us in the kingdom of God at last. It makes us free in this life; and makes it easy serving God; for we can serve God understandingly. A right understanding of the plan of God does make God look so lovely and blessed that we do not have to try to love God with all our powers; but, on the other hand, we love God because we cannot help it. The idea is, "it loves itself," and that proves what Jesus says, "My yoke is easy, and burden light.

Tickets for Heaven.

In these days of cheap travelling and excursions, it would seem to be only appropriate that those who desire to go to heaven cheaply—and who does not—might be furnished with means thereto. There are consequently in Paris and elsewhere small packets of cards (16 in each pack) purporting to be "tickets for heaven." They serve as handbooks to guide the steps of anxious pilgrims of every name and clime. The following will illustrate the style and character of these "billets d'entree pour le ceil." They are published by pontifical authority. No. 1 represents (by an engraving) the mode of getting to heaven "in a gondola," which from its tranquil and peaceful mode of progression is represented to be especially suitable for saints.

No. 2 is "in a palanquin," carried by two sprightly mules, for which "obedience and holy confidence are necessary."

No. 3 is "on an ass, by little steps and slow, but always steadily," an angel holding the bridle.

The 4th is, curiously enough, by railway; an angel is the engine driver, and a broad-hatted priest is the stoker, while behind are a number of third-class carriages crowded with pilgrims. This is the "iron road of self-abnegation and sacrifice."

The 5th is the way of "all fours," and the pilgrim, cross in hand, crawls by difficult paths up the mountain side.

No. 6 is by night, on foot, "when in solitude and darkness the soul wends its way onward."

No. 7 is "in a cart."

No. 8 is "on a plank," on the singing waters, surrounded by icebergs, but No. 9 is a very characteristic one in which the soul is being carried "on the shoulders of the charitable;" the double signification of this, as at once procuring admission for those who receive charity and for those who afford it, is obvious.

No. 10 is "in a barge" or common and ordinary road suitable for the many, who are unable to distinguish themselves otherwise than by their fidelity.

The next is "by a ladder," and shows how "heaven is taken by storm and with a holy violence," and thus the goal is speedily reached.

No. 12 is "by swimming," a way in which "there is no rest," and where earth is left behind and "entirely abandoned." This of course indicates a monastic life.

No. 13 is "on a litter" borne by angels, as the text below says, "a miserable and lowly mode, which requires humility even while it confers consolation; one must be badly wounded or very courageous to choose it."

No. 14 is "by the ford," and much resembles the last passage across the waters of death in Bunyan's famous allegory.

No. 15 is "upon a raft," and deposits the soul with no solid support and without any pause, passing swiftly on its way to God, urged by love.

The last, No. 16, represents the pilgrim suddenly detached from this world and blown to heaven from the top of a volcano, and thus "cast into the arms of God." If there is any truth, says the Pall Mall Gazette, in the comparison so persistently made, that Rome at this moment resembles nothing so much as a moral volcano, we venture, out of pure benevolence, to recommend the ultra-montane cardinals and priests now residing in the Eternal City to invest largely in the purchase of No. 16. If tickets of admission from off that volcano to heaven can really be purchased by a small outlay, a very moderate amount of the wisdom the serpent wou'd, under existing circumstances, suggest their probable value and utility.—Sun.

Speaking Out.

In the long run the habit of keeping back much of what he thinks, acts destructively on the man himself. The practice dims his conscience and alters his very creed. He suppresses so much that in the end he blots out part of himself, and hardly knows what he believes as a man, and what as a partisan. While the process of decline is going on, the man's utterances lack the warmth, the clear ring, the sharp edge, which we find in the ideas that come straight from the heart and brain. That is why partisan speeches sound so hollow. That is why the writings of able men in the leading columns even of the chief journals lack edge and distinctness, and seem the work of an intellectual machine, rather than of a living intellect. It is for the same reason that most men are so much smaller than nature meant them to be. Nature meant them to be big and well formed; but they are stunted and disproportioned, because some of their faculties have never been exercised at all. They will not speak out, they will not say what they think; so they become like unto the thing they worship—the God of corporate action, whose Gospel is that of suppresison, whose hymns are made up of abstract phrases punctuated with winks, and unto whose throne goes up, day and night, the incense of hypocrisy. Mr. Mill believes this lack of individuality to be the most dangerous sign in modern civilization. At least, if men would dare to lead the lives marked out for them by nature, they would speedily be very different from a race of mental and moral dwarfs. Keats spoke the truth under the veil of poetic exaggeration when he said that if each would express himself each would be great, and humanity would become "a grand democracy of forest trees."—Fraser's Magazine.

From G. B. Martin.

Goldfield, Iowa, April 7, 1868.

Br. Storrs: I am glad to see the cause prospering as it is. God is the author of all truth, and it will always cut its way and leave a mark that can never be erased. The cause of Life through Christ alone is steadily gaining, and will gain until he comes whose right it is to reign. If it does appear to gain slowly, it will gain surely. Convince a person that Life and immortality are to be obtained through Jesus Christ by a resurrection from the dead, and they will never believe in inherent immortality and eternal torments any more. No honest man or woman ever can. But leave them to believe that the Bible teaches the doctrine of inherent immortality; and, as a natural and unavoidable consequence, eternal torments, and many thinking ones will turn away from it with disgust, and look upon God as a most horrible tyrant, and his word as a lying fable; and, indeed, if I believed the doctrine of eternal torture was taught in the Bible, I would not blame them. But it is not true. God is a God of love, and the God of all mercies; and the opposite teaching has made all the infidels and Universalists in existence: and all these old vague notions of supernatural witchcraft, wizardism and ghostism have had their origin in the serpent's first lie—"Thou shalt not surely die." Oh, what a lie! What an amount of mischief has lying done! "He that believeth not God, hath made him a liar!" May none cast a lie in the Lord's face any more, seeing what it has already done; let us believe the Lord and try to obey his word, and forsake lying, one of the most mischievous and detestable habits in the world. I think there is nothing worse than lying against the Lord's word. Oh, what it has done, and what it is doing yet, to destroy souls (persons). How many poor souls are contradicting the teachings of the Scriptures! Many of them innocent, of course, and some, we fear, not so innocent. How careful we all ought to be about contradicting the truth. Let us speak the truth in all things, spiritual and temporal. Speak every man truth with his neighbor in reference to everything. How many mishaps and difficulties have occurred in consequence of not speaking the truth. Truth will outshine everything else. Let it be known that a man is not a man of truth, and what is his character and influence? Why, just nothing: he is a blot in society. Yours, in hope.

How Doctors Disagree.

The two finest speeches made at the convention of evangelical churches held in Springfield on Wednesday, were made by D. D.'s, and it is noticeable that, though talking on different topics and probably no thought of antagonism, the whole tenor and drift and spirit of the two addresses were entirely antagonistic. Rev. Dr. Ide of this city advocated with great earnestness and eloquence the ancient view of a divinely appointed clergy, through whom the people, less versed than they in theology and the "original tongues," should receive spiritual light and direction. Evidently he distrusted the laity. Their intentions are good, said he in substance, but their ignorance and lack of theological training lead them constantly into error. He declared, with a vigor approaching vehemence, that it is not safe to trust the religous instruction of young people in Sunday schools with lay teachers, for they teach more error than truth; the ministers must go over the subject after them, confirm the modicum of trutha nd dissipate the cloud of error. The clergy, according to his view, are the expounders and interpreters of the Scriptures; the laity have the privilege to receive their word and believe it.

We are not aware that the Rev. Dr. Eddy, formerly of Northampton and now of Brooklyn, N. Y., heard what Dr. Ide said. The The latter spoke in the morning, and Dr. Eddy not till afternoon. But the Brooklyn divine touched the same subject from the other side, and with irresistible power and fervor. If he he had prepared his remarks for the special purpose of meeting Dr. Ide's ideas of priesthood, he could hardly have done it more squarely and completely. He uttered a solemn warning to the clergy against assuming that they only are "priests unto God," and counseled them not to "despise prophesying" from the laity. Briefly but most eloquently he defended the sacred right of private judgment, and told the ministers to beware lest by any means they "quench the Spirit." Although Dr. Ide is a Baptist and Dr. Eddy a congregationalist, their differences in this case were not denominational. They were certainly significant.—Springfield Republican.

"God Perfectly and Forever Happy."

So saith that excellent, new, Congregational paper The Advance, published at Chicago, Ill. It says this in proof that the eternal miseries of hell will not disturb the joys of the saved in heaven when they shall become "in perfect sympathy with God." The article to which we refer is an editorial, headed, "No Sorrow there." It commences thus:

> It is often urged that the soul could not be happy hereafter, unless all other souls were saved. The knowledge of others' suffering, it is said, must embitter heaven. The recital of a railroad disaster, in which fifty lives are lost, some of them in great anguish, sends a shock through the country. How then would it be in heaven, with the knowledge that untold millions were in the agony of despair; and among them many that we have known, respected, and, perhaps, loved on earth? It is sometimes urged with great emphasis that a man must be changed into a fiend not to be made wholly miserable by the knowledge.
> We give the difficulty in all its strength, as it has often been pressed upon those who have lost impenitent friends, and has sometimes occurred as a perplexing doubt to established Christians. Those who deny eternal punishment have wielded this weapon more successfully than almost any other. It is the more effective because the best men here so little realize what it is to be in perfect sympathy with God.

Now, we are not among the number who "deny eternal punishment;" for we believe in it, and always have; we never doubted it. It is only a question, In what does eternal punishment consist? The Advance holds it to be the eternal misery, or torment of immortal sinners. We maintain, it is the eternal death of the incorrigible sinner: "The wages of sin is death," saith Paul, Rom. vi., 23. That death being eternal (never revoked), the punishment is eternal. Not, indeed, eternal torture, but an eternal deprivation of life, and all its attendant joys.

We, then, maintain the eternity of punishment as well as our Br. of The Advance; ours is that of deprivation: his that of torture. To reconcile us to his view, he labors to show how happy men may be, and are, in this life, with all kinds and degrees of sufferings around them, and among their friends and kindred. All this sounds very well; but none of the sufferings in this life have the hellish element of hopelessness, which is an essential feature of orthodoxy's eternal torments. Therefore, the analogy utterly fails. No sufferings here are so great but that hope sustains us. Hope that those sufferings will abate, be removed, work good to the sufferer, or end by death. No such hope sustains the mind in regard to the sufferings in the orthodox hell.

But our brother of The Advance thinks when we get into a state of "perfect sympathy with God" the torments of the damned, in the orthodox hell, will not interrupt our perfect happiness in heaven. He speaks as follows:

> God himself (and, probably, the angels in heaven), is an illustrious example of perfect blessedness in full sight of continual and dreadful misery. For six thousand years this earth has been a vast scene of perpetual wretchedness. Aching bodies and aching hearts, tortured with every conceivable form of agony—by want, accident, disease, abuse, oppression, disappointment, utter desolation and despair—have through all that time been lying naked before his sight in millions of simultaneous instances, and one vast, unbroken wail of woe, day and night, has incessantly poured itself into his ear. Yet God is perfectly and forever happy. It is thus clear that if we should, in this respect, become like God, or if he should impart unto us the secret of his joy, we may, in spite of sin and misery, be happy too.

We have italicised one expression in this extract, and made it the heading of these remarks.

We will not affirm that God is not perfectly happy in full sight of dreadful misery, because we are not competent to tell how God feels except by what he says and does; yet we will venture to doubt the ability of The Advance to prove what it has here asserted. Let us give a few expressions of the Scriptures, and see if they help to sustain his position. "It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart." Gen. vi., 6. Again: "His soul [the Lord's], was grieved for the misery of Israel." Judges x., 16. "In all their [Israel's] affliction he was afflicted." Isa. lxiii., 9. Verse 10. "They rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit."

These expressions, and many others of like character, do not seem to sustain our brother's affirmation that "God is perfectly and forever happy." But perhaps we shall make him to see that he spoke too hastily in supposing God's perfect happiness is not interrupted by the misery of his creatures. Our friend, doubtless, believes that Jesus is God—yea, "the very and eternal God." Was he "perfectly and forever happy?" Did he not "bare our sorrows?" Was he not "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief?" Isa. liii. Was not "his soul made an offering for sin?" Did he not "pour out his soul unto death?" Did he not say, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death?" Did he not utter this language, "Now is my soul troubled?" Matth. xxvi., 38, and John xii., 27. Had he not a heart "in perfect sympathy with God," even if viewed as man? How did his heart feel in view of the sorrows and desolation of the holy city and its wicked people? Was he "perfectly happy?" Were those tears he shed at the sight of the coming judgment on that people hypocritical tears? "When he came near, he beheld the city and wept over it." Luke xix., 41. Call him a man now, if you please; yet he was just the man who "realized what it is to be in perfect sympathy with God."

Here are stubborn facts; and they might be multiplied to any extent; but these may suffice to show that the position of our brother of The Advance is, at least, a very doubtful one, if not clearly erroneous, and we trust he may be led to see it so. His position is certainly an assumed one; it is not and cannot be proved. If Christ is God, we demonstrate it to be incorrect. If he was man, and only man, the same demonstration of our brother's inaccuracy is reached; for he tells us, it is when the believer reaches a certain perfection that he, like God, will be perfectly happy, notwithstanding all the torment of the damned. He says:

> Here, then, we reach the full solution, the believer will be made like God, and completely joined to God. He will be brought into perfect harmony with his whole character and government. He will love God more than all other beings together—father and mother, and wife and children; with all his heart, soul, mind and strength.

Jesus, even as man, was "made like God, and completely joined to God." He was in "perfect harmony with his whole character and government," etc.; yet he was not always "perfectly happy," as we have clearly seen. Does not our brother see that his statement that "God is perfectly and forever happy" is not correct, or else the blessed Jesus—"the Son of the living God"—was not in "perfect harmony" with his Father?

We can tell our brother, the time will come when there will be "No Sorrow There," but it will never be while there is torment or anguish to conscious beings.

If our friend will look at Rev. v., 11–13, he will learn when that time will come. John says, "I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne . . . . and the elders; and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." Now mark—"And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."

If this geographical description does not cover all places of which we have any knowledge, we know not what language could: and it shows no creature but what is in harmony with God and the Lamb, consequently all sinners have been converted or destroyed out of life. There is no place left for the theological hell. It has vanished, like all other phantoms.

Thus, then, we have a consummation, when no creature that exists will have pain or sorrow; for, saith God, "Behold, I make all things new . . . . And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." "And he said unto me, It is done." Rev. xxi., 1–6.

Then if any one shall look for the theological hell he would be as much perplexed to locate it as it is said a doctor of divinity was in Philadelphia some years ago, who, after striving to fix on some place for its location, concluded it was "somewhere outside of God's creation." That was an undoubted truth. There is no account of such a place within the limits of "God's creation," and its creation is but the phantom of superstition, helped on by popish assumptions to frighten ignorant men, women, and children, when wicked priests lived and fattened by duplicity and lies. Let not Protestants any longer be slaves to the monstrosities of the Roman harlot. Too long have we been blinded by that spawn of heathenism, till we have lost sight of the glorious truth that "God is love." We will close these remarks by a quotation from Bishop Newton, in his Dissertation No. 60, "On the final state and condition of man." "Hell," he says, "as a place of torment, is nowhere mentioned in the writings of Moses," etc. In the course of his dissertation he says:

> "Nothing can be more contrary to the divine nature and attributes than for a God all-wise, all-powerful, all-good, all-perfect, to bestow existence on any beings whose destiny he foresees and foreknows must terminate in wretchedness and misery, without recovery or remedy, without respite or end . . . . 'God is love;' and he would rather have not given life, than render that life a torment and curse to all eternity . . . . Imagine a creature, nay, imagine numberless creatures produced out of nothing . . . . delivered over to the torments of endless ages without the least hope or possibility of relaxation or redemption. Imagine it you may, but you can never seriously believe it, nor reconcile it to God and goodness. God could never make any [creature] whose end he foreknew would be misery everlasting."—Bishop Newton's Works, London Edition, 1787.
